Mr. BULKELEY. No; but I described one cap and I gave the information in regard to the cap. It was found and eliminated at once, because it was shown to be of that character of goods that had been thrown away by the soldiers and discarded by them, and when the soldier himself was brought by order of Captain McDonald before the committee, his testimony was credited and the cap and all disappeared.

Captain Macklin in his testimony says, in a few words, they were all in a "bunch" not over 10 or 12 inches in diameter.

Mr. PILES. Was the cap found in that bunch.

Mr. BULKELEY. No; the cap was found in another place on the Garrison road. It was found on the Garrison road in the neighborhood of Jefferson street.

Captain Macklin, Hearings, volume 2, pages 1776–1778:

Q. Light enough to inspect?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. State, now, whether or not before you started to inspect you made any investigations either inside or outside the wall of the reservation, to see what you could find, if anything at all, as a result of the firing.—A. Yes, sir; after I went on guard my station was at the main gate. I had there two noncommissioned officers and six men, and during the night I stayed there except the times that I went away to make inspections. Just as soon as the streak of dawn came I walked up and down inside of the wall, looking for shells. Then I went outside of the gate and went over as far as the telegraph office——

Q. Before you go outside, tell us whether or not you found any shells or anything else inside.—A. No, sir; I did not find anything inside. I went all along the line there inside and did not find anything. Then I went outside, over as far as the telegraph office, which is on the corner of Elizabeth street and right opposite the gate. I did not see anything at all, and then walked down outside of the wall toward the alley, which is directly in the rear, or almost directly in rear, of B Company quarters. Right there at the mouth of the alley I found six clips, I think it was, and seven shells, or approximately that.

Q. Six clips and seven shells?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were they exploded shells?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They were the shells of cartridges that had been fired?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they were of the Springfield rifle?—A. Yes, sir; the Springfield rifle.

Q. And the clips were the same?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You had no clips with the Krag-Jörgenson at all, had you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Now, you found six clips and seven shells?—A. Yes, sir; I think that is the number; I don't recollect.

Q. One clip accommodates how many cartridges or shells?—A. Five.

Q. They were hardly in proportion, then?—A. No, sir.

Q. Now, tell us in what position on the ground—you found these on the ground, did you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In what position did you find these clips and shells with reference to each other, and indicate on the map just as nearly as you can where you found them; the exact spot. You can see the alley indicated there.—A. Just about in that position [indicating].

Q. You point to the center of the alley on the town side of Fifteenth street.—A. I have forgotten the width of that alley, but I think it was 16 feet, and they were just about in the middle of the alley.

Q. And they were on the town side of the street that runs along parallel with the wall and outside of it?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. How far from the wall?—A. I should say about 6 or 8 feet—about 8 feet, about half way.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. The road there is 30 feet wide, as I understand it?—A. Not that distance; no, sir; I think it is 16.

Q. No; the road is shown on the map to be 30 feet wide. It is marked an inch wide, and the map is drawn to a scale of 30 feet to the inch.—A. Very well.

Q. Did you find these shells in the mouth of the alley or did you find them in the road?—A. I found them right in the mouth of the alley, looking up the alley—you could see up the alley—and when I picked up the shells I stood over them, because there were a lot of people up the road and they were looking down toward the alley. There was a great crowd congregated about. I spread out my feet and stooped down over the shells and picked them up, and they were in a space not over that large [indicating]. They were all in a bunch.

Q. You indicate a space circular in form and about how large in diameter?—A. Well, not over 10 inches, sir; 10 or 12 inches in diameter.

Q. Ten inches in diameter. I notice that in your testimony before the court-martial you said a space with a radius of not more than 12 to 15 inches. Did you mean radius or did you mean diameter?—A. I meant diameter, sir.

Q. You want to correct that statement as you now make it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would that be the natural position in which you would expect to find six or seven shells that had been fired out of one of these high-power Springfield rifles?—A. No, sir; it would be impossible to find them that way.

Q. It would be impossible?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When one of these cartridges is fired out of a Springfield rifle such as you were equipped with there, how far would the shell be thrown ordinarily by the ejector?—A. Well, ejecting it rather quickly, I should think it would be thrown at least 8 or 10 feet.

Q. And then when the shell strikes what happens to it? Does it jump or bounce about on the ground?—A. It depends on the nature of the ground.

Q. That was in an alley—a roadway.—A. In that place it would stick. It was soft ground.

Q. In soft ground it might not bounce?—A. No, sir; it would not bounce at all.

Q. When a soldier or anyone else stands and fires one of these rifles, holding it in the same position, does each one of five or six shells fly the same distance and in exactly the same direction, or are they likely to be thrown in different directions?—A. They would be very much spread about. I do not think any two would drop in the same place.

Q. They would be scattered over perhaps how much ground?—A. Well, perhaps at least 4 feet—3 to 4 feet.

Q. Now, Captain, can you tell us whether anybody had preceded you there that morning or anybody been there ahead of you to see those shells?—A. I am satisfied no one was there, sir. I went away and made an inspection of my sentinels about 3.30 or 4 o'clock. When I returned the sergeant told me no one had been there.

Q. What sergeant was that?—A. That was Sergeant Carlisle. I took Sergeant Harley with me on my inspection of the sentinels.

Q. What kind of men are Sergeant Harley and Sergeant Carlisle? Have you known them well for all these years you have been commanding that company?—A. Yes, sir; you can depend on them anywhere.

Q. They are truthful, reliable men?—A. Yes, sir; anywhere. I would go anywhere with them.

Major Penrose testifies that he examined some of these shells picked up by Captain Macklin, and this is important in view of the fact that the shells found in the street in this "bunch" and the bullets found in the houses do not correspond or belong with each other. As I said, Major Penrose testifies (Hearings, vol. 3, p. 3016) that he examined some of the shells picked up by Captain Macklin; that they bore the marks and were the shells manufactured at the Frankford Arsenal—a Government arsenal. The bullets taken from the houses in the immediate vicinity of the firing, on analysis, showed that they were not of the composition of any bullet manufactured at that arsenal, but were of the composition of those made by the Union Metallic Cartridge Company for the Government under the contract to which I have heretofore referred, as well as for commercial sales; so that it was impossible that these shells found at the mouth of the alley where the firing has been located, or fired from the wall or porch of the barracks as is charged, could have been used in combination with the bullets found in the houses. I append here the analysis of cartridges manufactured at Frankford Arsenal and Union Metallic Cartridge Company, which analysis was made at the Sandy Hook Proving Grounds by the Government chemist stationed there. Also from Penrose court-martial, Senate Document No. 402, part 2, page 1160:

I don't know how many cartridges; I didn't count them.

Q. Were they cartridges or shells?—A. Shells; empty shells, fired shells. I examined two of them, took them from his hand; they were Frankford Arsenal shells.

Q. For what rifle?—A. For our Springfield rifle. I asked him where he had gotten them, and he said right at the mouth of the alley.

Hearings, volume 3, page 3389:

SANDY HOOK PROVING GROUND,
Fort Hancock, N. J., December 20, 1907.

REPORT FROM THE CHEMICAL LABORATORY.

(Examination of lead cores of caliber .30 ball cartridges, model 1903, Laboratory Nos. 4672 and 4673.)

Two caliber .30 ball cartridges, model of 1903, made by Frankfort Arsenal and two made by the Union Metallic Cartridge Company were received from the Chief of Ordnance. As directed, quantitative analyses were made to determine the major constituents of the lead cores. These were found to be as follows:

	F. A. cartridge.	U. M. C. cartridge.
	Per cent.	Per cent.
Lead	96.21	95.60
Antimony	None.	1.95
Tin	3.10	1.45

The effect of the addition of tin to lead is to increase the toughness of the metal; the effect of the addition of antimony is to make the lead brittle. The differences in the composition of the lead cores of these bullets correspond to what are said to be the differences in the shop practice at Frankford Arsenal and the Union Metallic Cartridge Company's works by casting, for which process the presence of antimony is unobjectionable. The usual traces of copper and bismuth are present in both cases.

Assistant Chemist.

FRANKFORD ARSENAL,
Philadelphia, Pa., December 12, 1907.

SIR: 1. Referring to first indorsement, O. O. 30803–135, December 10, 1907, on the subject of antimony in bullet cores, I have the honor to report that the quantitative analysis referred to in the last paragraph of that indorsement has been completed.

2. The composition of slugs taken from ball cartridges, model 1903, manufactured at Frankford Arsenal March 24, 1906, is as follows:

	Per cent.
Lead	96.85
Antimony	.26

3. The composition of slugs taken from ball cartridges, model 1903, manufactured at Frankford Arsenal December 26, 1905, is as follows:

	Per cent.
Lead	96.90
Antimony	.28

4. The proportions prescribed are 30 parts lead to 1 part tin, or lead 96.77 per cent and tin 3.23 per cent. Antimony is nearly always found in commercial lead and tin.

Very respectfully,
FRANK HEATH,
Colonel, Ordnance Department,
United States Army, Commanding.

The COMMANDING OFFICER, Frankford Arsenal.
(Through Maj. S. Hof, Ordnance Department.)

Now, no antimony except the usual trace of from ten one-hundredths to fifteen one-hundredths per cent found in commercial lead has ever been traced to a bullet made at the Frankford Arsenal.

I have included here numerous analyses of bullets manufactured at all these places by the Government experts. They were made by the Geological Survey or at the Frankford Arsenal, and they all attest the same fact and prove conclusively that the Frankford Arsenal shell exploded, picked up in the alley in the vicinity of the fort, did not belong with the Union Metallic bullet picked out of the house in the immediate vicinity. And in the entire block from Fifteenth street to Fourteenth street, on which a great part of the firing was done, no other shells have been shown in evidence anywhere than this "bunch" of shells picked up by Captain Macklin.

These several analyses made by the Government experts show conclusively that the bullets found in the Cowen, Yturria, and Garza houses, near which the bunch of Frankford Arsenal shells were found, did not belong to the Frankford Arsenal shells, and thus reveals more clearly that the scattered shells about the streets of Brownsville were fired at some other place, undoubtedly at Fort Niobrara, and were a part of and in furtherance of the conspiracy to get rid of the negro soldiers and to fix on them "the shooting up of the city."

I will not refer further to shells, and so forth, at this time, as I shall have occasion to discuss this subject in connection with the examination of the guns and shells by the Government experts at the Springfield Armory.

The bullets taken from the houses on the route followed by the raiders, and undoubtedly used during the raid, remain to be accounted for, but I think it the better course to take up the further discussion of shells and bullets in connection with the guns and their examination by the Government experts.

The Springfield rifles, model 1903, which it is charged were used by the raiders, were distributed to the battalion of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, Companies B, C, and D, at Fort Niobrara April, 1906, and were in use at that post both in target practice and company exercise during the remainder of their stay at that post—the latter part of July, 1906—when the command was moved to Fort Brown. During the stay at Fort Brown target practice was not engaged in—the range was at Point Isabel, some 20 or more miles away—and I find no evidence that ammunition of any character was expended after their arrival at this post, and there is abundant testimony that at least in one of the companies the ball-cartridge ammunition was taken up and guard cartridge, or limited-range ammunition, substituted. We need give but little consideration to the large number of guns in the hands of the soldiers. The experts at the Springfield Armory—Lieutenant Hawkins, of the Ordnance Department, and Mr. Spooner, inspector—have located the shell exhibits before the committee, thirty-nine in number, as having been fired from guns Nos. 41019, 45683, 42288, and 45624, all belonging or assigned to Company B, said company being the one that brought from Fort Niobrara the box of exploded cartridges, the case heretofore alluded to in the testimony of First Sergt. Mingo Sanders.

Gun numbered 41019 was assigned to Ernest English.
Gun numbered 42288 was assigned to Thomas Taylor.
Gun numbered 45624 was assigned to Joseph Wilson.
Gun numbered 45683 was assigned to William Blaney.

Hearings, volume 2, pages 1318–1319:

IV. The above cartridges and cartridge cases were all carefully examined under a powerful microscope and also under jewelers' eyeglasses of varying powers. This examination showed that some of these cartridges had been fired from the same rifles, viz:

Reference No.

305, 313, 314, 315, 338, 339 } GROUP V.—These cartridges were not fired, and have insufficient gun marks to identify them with any particular rifle. Number 339 has a slight striker impact, but this imprint is so slight (due to the depressed primer) that it is of no use for purposes of identification.

All of these men belonged to Company B, all of these guns were distributed to that company, and a box of empty cartridges brought from Fort Niobrara was deposited on the back porch of this company's barracks when they reached Fort Brown. This examination seems to have located this firing—if it has located it at all—within the ranks of Company B; and these thirty-nine shells are the only exhibit furnished by Mayor Combe or the district attorney or the War Department or anybody else to your committee.

The three guns assigned to English, Taylor, and Wilson, if the testimony of the noncommissioned officers in charge is correct, were securely locked in the gun racks, which were not opened until after the firing ceased—the universal evidence of both officers and men—consequently no shells could have been fired from those guns in the streets of Brownsville that night, unless collusion between noncommissioned officers and men can be established, and of this there is not a particle of evidence to warrant.

Gun No. 45683 was assigned to Sergt. William Blaney at Fort Niobrara when first received and distributed to the men and remained in his possession, or as his gun, until the expiration of his term of enlistment. He reenlisted June 8, 1906, when he accepted a furlough and was absent from Fort Brown at the time of the affray. The night of his departure he turned over the keys of the storeroom to his successor, Sergt. Walker McCurdy, calling his attention to the fact that his rifle was there. McCurdy testified (p. 1658, vol. 3, Hearings) that he inserted in the chamber a slip of paper with "William Blaney" written upon it, to keep him from issuing it to anybody else; that the gun was in his charge until Blaney's return to the command at Fort Reno; that he placed said gun in the arm chest at Fort Niobrara; that it was in the arm chest on the night of August 13, 1906, and that when the gun was returned to Blaney at El Reno the slip of paper marked with his name still remained in the chamber.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Who testified about the paper being placed in the gun?

Mr. BULKELEY. The quartermaster's sergeant, who had charge of the guns after Blaney reenlisted and took a furlough and went away. The quartermaster's sergeant took the gun into the storeroom, inserted a piece of paper in the chamber, and then he delivered it over to Blaney at El Reno when he came back from his furlough, where the troops were sent after the affray, and he found this same slip of paper in the chamber of the gun.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BULKELEY. Certainly.

Mr. PILES. I want to ask the Senator from Connecticut whether this quartermaster's sergeant is a colored man?

Mr. BULKELEY. He was a member of the Twenty-fifth Infantry.

Mr. PILES. I was in doubt about it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. And he put the paper in the gun?

Mr. BULKELEY. Yes. He had served four or five enlistments; had been discharged at the close of each enlistment with a good character, such as to entitle him to reenlist again, and the Government was glad to retain him in its service. It was testified to by General Burt, retired, who had once commanded these troops, and by all his officers, that he was a man entitled to every confidence.

I can not refrain from repeating here what was said by an old Army officer, who for twenty years commanded the Twenty-fifth Infantry—and he said it with tears rolling down his cheeks—that he had intrusted, in his absence, his wife and family unattended to the care of these men while he was engaged in a march of four or five hundred miles over the plains and the desert.

Lieutenant Lawrason describes the condition of the arm chest when he inspected the same on the morning of the 14th, after the affray. I will here append, at length, his testimony, together with that of Sergeants Blaney and McCurdy.

Hearings, volume 2, page 1658 (McCurdy's testimony):

Q. Who had been quartermaster-sergeant prior to that date?—A. Sergt. William Blaney.

Q. What book is that in front of you there? See if you recognize it.—A. This is the company's property book, sir.

Q. The company property book of Company B?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you turn to that and see what gun Sergeant Blaney had assigned to him, according to that book, when these new Springfield rifles were issued?—A. (Examining book.) I think it was 45683.

Q. 45683?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, it has been testified to, I believe, that Sergeant Blaney was absent on furlough. When did he go away on furlough?—A. It was about the same time I was made quartermaster-sergeant—about the 9th or 10th of June.

Q. That is, you succeeded him when he went away on furlough?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had he returned while you were yet at Brownsville? When did he return?—A. He returned at El Reno.

Q. He was not with you at Fort Brown at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. What was done with his gun when he left to go on furlough the 9th of June, or whatever date it was?—A. He took it up and packed it away.

Q. He turned it in?—A. No, sir; he turned in his own rifle. He will tell you himself that when he returned there was a slip of paper put in the chamber to show whose rifle it was, to keep me from issuing it to anyone else.

Q. Who put that in there?—A. I put it in there myself.

Q. What was on that slip of paper?—A. "William Blaney."

Q. Now, when he returned, were you still with the company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. At El Reno?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were still quartermaster-sergeant?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And did you continue as quartermaster-sergeant?—A. Until I was discharged, sir.

Q. Until you were discharged?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, what was done in the matter of providing Sergeant Blaney with a gun?—A. I gave him his same rifle back.

Q. You gave him back that same rifle?—A. Yes, sir.

Hearings, vol. 2, pp. 1748–1749 (Blaney's testimony):

Q. Were you with the regiment at Fort Niobrara?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you with the regiment at the time when the new Springfield rifles were issued to the regiment?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What position in the company did you hold at that time?—A. I was company quartermaster-sergeant.

Q. You were familiar with the property book of Company B?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was a rifle issued to you at that time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You yourself were then the quartermaster-sergeant?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Please look at the book I now hand you and tell me what it is.—A. It is B Company's property book.

Q. Turn to the account of the men with the rifles and tell me what that property book shows as to your own rifle.—A. For the present?

Q. Just tell me what it shows. Not as to the present, but as to the new Springfield rifle which was issued at Fort Niobrara in April, I believe it was, 1906. I want the number of your gun.—A. Yes; this book gives me one rifle, and it is numbered.

Q. What number?—A. 45683.

Q. Is that rifle receipted for by you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it issued to you as indicated there?—A. Yes; it was.

Q. Is that the rifle, now that you see the number, that you had while you were at Fort Niobrara?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What time did you leave the company at Fort Niobrara to go on your furlough?—A. On the 8th of June.

Q. You left some time before the battalion went to Fort Brown?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you keep that rifle in your possession until that time?—A. Yes, sir; I did.

Q. Did you or not use that rifle at Fort Niobrara on target range in target firing?—A. Yes; I used it on the 8th day of June—on the very day that I left.

Q. On the day that you left what did you do with your gun?—A. I took it in the storeroom after I got through firing and kept it in there.

Q. Who succeeded you as quartermaster-sergeant?—A. Walker McCurdy.

Q. Was he the quartermaster-sergeant and did you turn the gun over to him that night, or what did you do with it?—A. No; I took it in the storeroom myself. I had the keys, and I did not turn the keys over to him until that evening. I fired that morning, but I think it was in the evening when I turned the keys over to him.

Q. When did you next see that rifle? Did you call his attention to your own rifle or not before you left there as being turned into the storeroom?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. State whether or not your rifle was marked in any way, if you know, besides the number on it.—A. No, sir.

Q. I only want your recollection.—A. No; not as I know of.

Q. You turned it over to Sergeant McCurdy, or I mean you left it in the storeroom and McCurdy succeeded you as quartermaster-sergeant?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he came at once into possession of it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did you next see your rifle?—A. At Fort Reno.

Q. You did not return to your company until it arrived at Fort Reno?—A. No.

Hearings, volume 2, pages 1581, 1582, 1583 (Lawrason's testimony):

Q. Who was in charge of the storehouse, or storeroom, whichever you call it?—A. Quartermaster-Sergeant Walker McCurdy.

Q. Was he, also, an old sergeant?—A. Yes, sir; he was an old sergeant of Company B.

Q. Was he or not a reliable and truthful man?—A. I always believed him to be such, sir.

Q. He had been in the service many years, had he not?—A. Yes, sir; he had.

Q. And had everybody's confidence as a good soldier and a faithful noncommissioned officer?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He was the quartermaster-sergeant; as quartermaster-sergeant what was his duty with respect to the surplus rifles and surplus ammunition—I mean surplus in the sense that it was not in the hands of the men?—A. He was accountable for it, and it was his business to keep it locked up.

Q. You went to the storeroom after you locked up the rifles; who went with you to the storeroom?—A. The quartermaster-sergeant.

Q. Sergeant McCurdy?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you do, and what did you tell him, and in what condition did you find the room; was it locked or unlocked when you went to it?—A. It was locked and he opened it. He took out a bunch of keys, as I recollect it, and fumbled around and got the right key and unlocked the door. The storeroom was very small, and we could not put all of our quartermaster property in there, and there was some confusion in the way in which the stuff was piled. We had to remove a lot of company property.

Q. I will come to that in a minute. What did you tell Sergeant McCurdy you wanted in the storeroom when you went there; did you tell him or not what you wanted to do until you got into the storeroom?—A. No, sir; when I got into the storeroom I told him that I wanted to see the rifles that he had in the storeroom.

Q. That is, rifles that he had in his possession?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you know how many rifles he had in his possession at the time?—A. I did, by referring to the company property book which was kept there.

Q. We will speak about that presently. Now, go on and state what you did and what he did when you told him.—A. He told me that the rifles were locked up in the arm chests. I told him to open them, and he opened one full arm chest that contained ten rifles, and also opened another that, I believe, contained two or three rifles and several old company shotguns.

Q. Now, before you opened the arm chests, let me ask you whether or not they were easy to get at, or whether there was anything on top of them?—A. No, sir; they were not easy to get at. As I recollect, we removed considerable property before we got the arm chests out and got room to unscrew the lids.

Q. What kind of property was this?—A. Iron quartermaster bunks and, I believe, some iron uprights to hold mosquito bars—T-shaped things.

Q. They had been piled on top of these arm chests, had they?—A. Yes, sir; and were standing against the wall, between us and the arm chests.

Q. When had you last before that seen these arm chests, and where?—A. I had seen them at Fort Niobrara, Nebr., before shipment, and when they were unloaded from the wagons and placed in the storehouse at Fort Brown.

Q. Where were these extra guns placed in these arm chests, whether at Fort Niobrara or Fort Brown, or where?—A. They were placed in the arm chests at Fort Niobrara.

Q. Do you remember seeing the guns—rifles—put in the arm chests and the arm chests closed up for shipment at Fort Niobrara?—A. I do not believe I was present when the property was boxed up. It was boxed up sometime before our departure, and Captain Shattuck was in command of the company at that time.

Q. You have told us in what condition you found the chests as to other property being piled on top; this property was removed, was it, from the tops of the chests?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then were the chests opened, or not?—A. They were opened under my supervision and the arms counted.

Q. State in what condition you found the inside of those chests, as to the arms.—A. The arms were placed in the proper grooves for them, and they were battened down, or held down by cleats that fit in the boxes, to prevent their rattling around during shipment.

Q. They had been fixed that way before they had left Niobrara?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And were they in that same condition when you opened them that night?—A. They were in the same condition, sir.

Q. Did you count the rifles when they were opened up?—A. Yes, sir; I counted them.

Q. I will ask you another question, whether or not, before these rifles were shipped from Fort Niobrara, they were coated with cosmoline oil or any other kind of oil?—A. I believe they were coated with cosmoline oil at the time I looked at them at Fort Brown.

Q. When you looked at them was there any indication that they had been disturbed in any way whatever since they had been boxed up at Fort Niobrara?—A. No, sir; there was not; I did not take out all the rifles; I could count them without taking them out of the boxes; I picked up one or two from the top.

Q. And you did count the rifles in both boxes?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you remember that the requisite number of rifles were there, added to the other rifles that you found in the racks, and that you counted as away from there, to make up the number of 70?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. There was not a rifle missing, was there?—A. No, sir.

Q. Now, can you tell us anything about what rifles were in those boxes—I mean whether any of those rifles had been assigned at any time previously to anybody, and if so, to whom, in the absence of the property book, or would you rather have the property book before you go into that?—A. I can state without the property book that quite a number of those rifles that were packed had been used in target firing at Fort Niobrara, Nebr.

Q. I wish that you would tell me, as nearly as you can, just what rifles, giving me the names of the men who carried them—we will get the numbers later—were in that box that had been used in target practice or in any way by men to whom they had been assigned before you left Fort Niobrara for Fort Brown.—A. Well, Sergeant Blaney had taken part in target practice, and his rifle was in the box.

Q. Tell me why he was not with you and why his rifle was in the box, before we pass that.—A. He was not with us because he was on furlough.

Q. How long a furlough did he have?—A. I believe he had two months, sir; I am not positive.

Q. Well, he had reenlisted, had he not? He had a furlough on that account?—A. Reenlisted on the expiration of term of enlistment and then been given a furlough.

Q. And before he left on furlough he turned his rifle in?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that was in the box?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He had not returned from his furlough?—A. No, sir; he had not.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BULKELEY. Certainly.

Mr. PILES. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Connecticut whether it is charged that this gun bearing the name of William Blaney, in which the slip of paper was inserted, was one of the guns used on the night of this raid?

Mr. BULKELEY. It was claimed that it was identified as such by the experts of the Springfield Armory, who located eight or nine or ten shells as having been fired from this gun.

Mr. PILES. I just wanted to bring out that point.

Mr. BULKELEY. There is some claim that this gun, when examined at the Springfield Armory, bore marks of recent firing; at least it was dirty; but Blaney himself explained that. He said that on the morning he turned in his gun he had been to target practice on the local range in the fort with reduced ammunition, and, as he says, "I coated it with cosmoline oil."

Lieutenant Lawrason the morning after the affray, when he was ordered by Major Penrose to inspect and account for his rifles, first examined those in the gun rack and then went to the storeroom. I read from his testimony on pages 1585–1586:

Q. You made this examination, you and Sergeant McCurdy, your quartermaster-sergeant, and you thoroughly satisfied yourself, did you, that those boxes had not been opened since they left Niobrara?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that every gun was in there that was placed there before you left Niobrara?—A. I believe such to be the case, sir.

Q. And that not only from the counting of the guns, but from the general appearance, the undisturbed appearance, of the condition in which you found the guns?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And if the boxes had been opened it would have involved the removal of all this baggage which you found on top of them. Before we leave that I will ask you another question. You saw the guns put in the racks and locked up. How many keys were there to the gun racks by which those gun racks might have been opened that night?—A. There was only one key, I believe, to each lock. I know that on the bunch of keys the key that would unlock rack No. 1, for instance, would not unlock rack No. 2.

A careful microscopic examination of the marks upon the shells made by the firing pins, when compared with the marks upon shells fired from the same guns—all the guns belonging to this battalion which they had had at Fort Niobrara, after they were sent to Fort Reno, were dispatched to the Springfield Armory for the purpose of these microscopic experiments—were found to be so exactly similar that the experts found little difficulty in locating the shells or exhibits from the committee in the four guns which I have just considered. The conclusions reached by the experts—Lieutenant Hawkins and Inspector Spooner—were so convincing that they were never questioned either by the committee or any parties interested; but instead of tending to show the guilt of the soldiers, these mute utterances of the marks upon the empty shells attested their absolute innocence—in view of the position of those guns the night of August 13, especially the fourth gun, which, beyond any question, could not have been in the hands of the soldiers. If these views are correct, the combination of the shells and bullets necessary to establish the finding of a majority of your committee, that these shells and bullets "in combination" could only have been fired from a Springfield rifle, model 1903, falls to the ground.

General Crozier, the chief of the Ordnance Department, has been interested in the subject, and through his orders all these examinations were made. General Crozier says, Hearings, volume 3, page 2854:

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. That is to say, these bullets are apparently just such bullets as you would expect to find fired out of Springfield cartridges?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And assuming that these empty shells were the shells that held the bullets, then you would assume that it was a Springfield rifle from which they were fired?—A. Yes, sir.

I have already, I think, to the satisfaction of everyone, if the testimony is correct—and there is nothing to contradict it—separated absolutely the shells from the bullets. The shells came from the Frankford Arsenal and the bullets from the Union Metallic Cartridge Company, both of which make completed cartridges. A shell manufactured by the Frankford Arsenal, found in a house, would not, under any human probability, be associated with a bullet manufactured by the Union Metallic Cartridge Company. They do not do business that way. Continuing, General Crozier testified:

Q. But, aside from that premise, they might have been fired out of either a Krag or a Springfield?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They might have been fired out of a Krag carbine, also?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is to say, the Krag carbine and the Krag rifle and the Springfield rifle all have the same number of lands?—A. Yes, sir; and the bullet is the same for each.

Q. Each has four lands, and the bullet is the same?—A. Yes, sir; and the bullet is the same.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. You are only speaking as to the bullet now?—A. Yes, sir.

In commenting upon the examination of the guns, shells, and bullets examined by the experts of the Ordnance Department at the Springfield Armory, the facts established and the conclusions reached, the General, in his annual report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, page 36, in discussing these microscopic examinations, distinguishing marks, and the location of these shells in particular guns, says, and says truthfully and without bias:

The bearing of these facts upon the identity of the persons doing the firing and upon the time when the cases and bullets were fired in the guns is not a concern of this Department.

And they did not attempt to solve it. Under all the examinations of the Ordnance Department the evidence, putting all the circumstances of this investigation together, proves conclusively that these shells were, as these marks indicate beyond any manner of question, fired upon the target grounds at Fort Niobrara. It is remarkable, in connection with this examination, that all the shells located were in the guns of Company B, who brought from Fort Niobrara the box of empty shells, or cases, heretofore referred to.

General Crozier testifies (p. 2854) that the bullets taken from the houses might have been fired from a Krag, a Krag carbine, or a Springfield, and if fired from any one of the three would bear the marks of the same number of lands—the Krag and the Krag carbine were not unknown guns in the locality of Brownsville.

The difficulty in identifying bullets used in different rifles is best illustrated by referring to the testimony of Captain Ely, Twenty-sixth Infantry, to whom was exhibited two perfect cartridges, and he was asked to tell which was the Krag and which was the Springfield. After a careful examination he selected the Krag for the Springfield bullet.

I append his testimony, Hearings, volume 3, pages 2696–2697:

A. (Continuing.) If I was going to judge which of the two was the more probable, I would say more probably the new Springfield, from what seems to me to be the more pointed nose of the bullets.

Q. Those three bullets when shown to you seemed to be Springfield bullets?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they were all the same size and all the same general appearance except as they were disfigured by meeting with obstructions?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they seemed to you to have a more pointed nose than the Krag bullets?—A. They seemed to, although I would not say that it was impossible that they should be Krags.

Q. Now, Captain, is there any difference whatever in the actual form and figure of the two bullets?—A. I believe so; yes, sir.

Q. You think there is?—A. Yes, sir; I have taken them and compared them. I have taken the cartridges and compared the two, and it seems to me that there is quite a little difference.

Q. Is that plainly preceptible?—A. No, sir; it is not plainly perceptible.

Q. It requires very close scrutiny when the bullets are in the cartridges, before they have been fired?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To detect any difference between them?—A. Yes, sir; it does.

Q. And is it not next to impossible to detect any difference there may be after they have been fired, if they had gone through any obstruction?—A. Well, I would hardly say next to impossible, but it is difficult.

Q. Of the two bullets here which I show you, can you tell which is which? One is a Krag and the other is a Springfield.—A. I should say this was the Springfield.

Q. See if it is.—A. No, sir; it is not.

Q. That is the Krag, isn't it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That shows that you may be mistaken about it, doesn't it, as to the appearance?—A. Yes, sir.

It is hardly obligatory, Mr. President, in view of the conclusion I have reached in the matter of the shells and the bullets, but I think it proper, in view of the testimony in relation to the composition of the bullets, to state that up to the time of the discovery upon analysis by a Government expert of the Geological Survey it had been expressly claimed that no steel-jacketed bullet had been issued to the Army containing antimony. (See letter of General Crozier, Chief of Ordnance.)

Hearings, volume 3, page 3309:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ORDNANCE,
Washington, December 6, 1907.

Hon. JOS. B. FORAKER,
United States Senate.

SIR: You are informed that the history of jacketed bullets for .30 caliber small arms manufactured by this Department is as follows:

Various experimental compositions were tried, including some in which the core was composed of 97 parts lead and 3 parts antimony, but these were never issued to the service.

The first ammunition with jacketed bullets, issued to the service in 1894, had the core of the bullet composed of 7 parts lead and 1 part tin, and the jacket of German silver. In the same year bullets were also issued with a cupro nickeled steel jacket, and the same core composition as above.

In May, 1898, cupro nickel jackets were also used.

In the fall of 1900 cupro nickeled steel jackets were abandoned, and cupro nickel alone has since been used.

On December 16, 1902, the composition of the core of the bullet was changed to 27 parts lead to 1 of tin.

On March 11, 1903, it was changed to 20 parts lead to 1 part tin.

On October 24, 1904, it was changed to 16 parts lead to 1 of tin, and on March 18, 1905, it was changed to 36 parts lead to 1 of tin. The last mentioned has continued to be the composition to the present time.

The changes were made to keep the weight of the bullet constant, and were coincident with changes in the thickness of the jacket. It is, of course, possible that slight variations from prescribed proportions may have been obtained in manufacture.

The cupro nickel jacket is composed of 85 per cent copper and 15 per cent nickel.

The history of the bullet given above is for the Krag rifle ammunition up to March 11, 1903, since which date it applies to the bullets for both the Krag and the model of 1903 rifles, the same bullet being used in both.

2. The composition given for the guard cartridge in the handbook for the United States magazine rifle, model of 1903, caliber .30, page 46, is in error in giving the composition of the bullet, which should be 90 parts lead, 8.5 parts tin, and 1.5 parts antimony.

Very respectfully,

WILLIAM CROZIER,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Ordnance.

And the Union Metallic Cartridge Company, who had manufactured bullets for the Government, had likewise insisted that they had never used antimony (see the following letters):

Hearings, volume 3, pages 3336–3337:

THE UNION METALLIC CARTRIDGE COMPANY,
Bridgeport, Conn., June 13, 1907.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your letter of the 12th instant, making inquiry concerning the composition of the bullets furnished with the different cartridges, as enumerated, wish to advise as follows:

Springfield, model 1903 bullet—36 parts lead, 1 part tin.
Unjacketed guard cartridge bullet—9 parts lead, 1 part tin.
Krag metal-cased bullet—20 parts lead, 1 part antimony.

Trusting this information will be of service to you, we are,

Yours, truly,

THE UNION METALLIC CARTRIDGE CO.,
By J. ORCUTT, Manager and Superintendent.

Hon. JOSEPH B. FORAKER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

THE UNION METALLIC CARTRIDGE COMPANY,
Bridgeport, Conn., December 6, 1907.

DEAR SIR: With reference to our telephone conversation of this morning, it is my understanding that you desire to ascertain what particular bullets are represented by the mixtures given, which were as follows:

	Lead.	Tin.	Antimony.
	Per cent.	Per cent.	Per cent.
No. 1	95.70	2.02	1.97
No. 2	95.59	2.11	1.98
No. 3	96.36	2.05	1.29

While these mixtures do not represent any bullet which we manufacture, they come the nearest to a .30 Government, model 1898, bullet.

We trust that this information may be of service to you, and remain,

Yours, truly,

THE UNION METALLIC CARTRIDGE CO.,
By JEROME ORCUTT,
Manager and Superintendent.

THE UNION METALLIC CARTRIDGE CO.,
Bridgeport, Conn., December 10, 1907.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your telephone communication of the 7th instant, with reference to the composition of the Springfield bullets, 1903 model, wish to advise that they were made in accordance with the specifications furnished by the Government.

We refer to blueprint B–582, last date of revision being March 27, 1905, describing "Ball cartridges, United States magazine rifle, model 1903," as follows:

"Bullet: Weight, 220 grains; core, 36 parts lead, 1 part tin (about)."

Yours, truly, THE UNION METALLIC CARTRIDGE CO.,
By J. ORCUTT, Manager and Superintendent.

Hon. JOSEPH B. FORAKER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

The letters were all written, as testified by the superintendent, after a careful examination of the records at the factory. When it became necessary to connect the soldiers with the raid through the examination used, it also became necessary to prove the incorrectness of the reiterated statements of both the Ordnance Department and the contractors. After a visit to Washington and absorbing the breath of official atmosphere, the president and the inspector of the Union Metallic Cartridge Company had recalled to their recollection—without a record before them—that in filling one contract, and in violation of its provisions, they had manufactured a small part of the alloy of the composition as found by the chemical analysis; and it was also claimed that this particular lot of cartridges had, by chance, fallen into the hands of the Twenty-fifth Infantry at Fort Niobrara; but recollect, Senators, that the shells found by Captain Macklin at the mouth of the alley the morning after the firing, almost before daylight, did not belong with the bullets made by the Union Metallic Cartridge Company. The bullet taken from the post in front of Crixell's saloon did not prove to be a steel-jacketed bullet, such as were in use by the troops, neither was it a guard-cartridge bullet, which also were of different composition from that disclosed by the analysis.

COURSE OF BULLETS.

For the purpose of investigation, and to ascertain, if possible, the position from which the bullets found in the houses were fired, Lieutenant Leckie was detailed by General McCaskey, department commander, and visited Brownsville and made a critical and expert examination in the case of every house fired upon and reached the conclusion that all the shots fired into houses in the near vicinity of the reservation were fired from the street, and could not possibly have been fired from the wall of the reservation or from the porch of the barracks; but another officer sent for the like purpose reached an entirely different conclusion, and I have no doubt if we had continued to send officers there up to the present day each one looking through a gunshot hole, one or two in line, depending upon his own height, possibly, or his own abilities, or the glance of his eye, could locate a bullet and its course in almost any direction that was wanted. So I am not going to waste any time on that part of it.

MAJOR PENROSE'S CHANGE OF OPINION.

After listening to the evidence given at the Penrose court-martial and reading the evidence presented to your committee, Major Penrose renewed his first impression that his command was not involved in the affray, as testified by him.

Hearings, volume 3, pages 3025–3026:

Q. I want to know fully what produced this change in your mind, in your opinion, as to who did that shooting?—A. I am trying to give it to you, Senator. There was another question or two asked of me, if you will remember.

Q. I want you to explain it fully in your own way.—A. Yes, sir. Well, as I say, the darkness of this night and the finding of those shells—my opinion commenced to change at that time. Then there was the testimony that was produced before this committee as to the experiment that was made at the Frankford Arsenal, where they found that eleven shells were fired from one gun.

Senator FORAKER. A Springfield?

A. One Springfield rifle that had been locked up in the arms chest at Fort Niobrara and was not opened until the morning of the 14th of August. They claim that eleven—I think it is eleven—of those shells, or eleven shells, fired from that gun, were found in the streets of Brownsville. Those shells were brought down from Fort Niobrara to Brownsville. They were open, on the back porch of B Company. They were open there several days, I don't remember how long. I can see no way in the world that those shells could have been fired in the streets of Brownsville. There is another thing: I think they were taken out there and put there. That is the reason that I have changed my opinion, sir.

By Senator LODGE:

Q. You think those shells were put all over the town in order to give the idea that the soldiers did the shooting?—A. I think certainly those eleven shells were, sir.

Q. Well, but it is in testimony and, I think, uncontradicted, that shells were picked up at a great many points?—A. Yes, sir; so I understand.

Q. Your idea is that they must have been put there, at all those points?—A. That is my idea of it, sir.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Do you think those freshly fired shells that were found there at the mouth of the alley were brought down from Niobrara?—A. I think so now.

Q. And put there?—A. I believe they were, sir.

Q. Yet you say they were freshly fired?—A. They had the appearance to me. They had only been fired a month before.

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. Who do you think brought them from Niobrara?—A. B Company brought them down.

Q. Who do you think distributed them in the streets?—A. I don't know, sir, unless some of the people of Brownsville.

Q. How did they get out of the custody of B Company?—A. They were open on the back porch of B Company, and were left there for several days, Senator—this box was. I think the testimony so shows here.

Q. They were at least more accessible to the members of B Company than they were to the public at large?—A. Yes, sir; that would be very possible—that they were.

Senator SCOTT. I should like to hear the answer to Senator Pettus's question, if I can get it.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. If you have anything further to say in answer to the question of the Senator from Alabama, you will, of course, proceed with it and make full answer.—A. I should state in connection with that that there was the behavior of the men before this shooting occurred. They had been an excellent lot of men. We had never had any trouble with them; they were well disciplined, well drilled, easy to handle. From the time that this shooting occurred none of them was permitted to leave Fort Brown at all. We took them up to Fort Reno, Okla., and there they were confined absolutely to the limits of the post—the post proper. They were not permitted to leave it under any circumstances. I gave them extra drills, extra guard, and had them working at fatigue whenever they were not drilling or on guard, the whole day long. Those men took all that without a murmur or a complaint of any kind. There were five of the men who disobeyed that order and went to town. They were each tried, dishonorably discharged, and sentenced to eighteen months' confinement at the military prison at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., and that was reduced by the reviewing authority to six months. Those five exceptions were the only ones that disobeyed any of the orders that were issued at all. Finally the order came for their discharge. They were discharged at that post, a half a company at a time. They were paid off. They had anywhere from fifty or sixty dollars to, some of them, twelve or thirteen hundred dollars. They went to this little town, which was full of temptations, and, as I stated before, there was not a single man found drunk, nor was there a disturbance of any kind or character reported of these men, and I talked with the chief of police over the telephone frequently. Now, taking into consideration the conduct of these men both before and afterwards, and what I have before stated, leads me to believe that the men did not do that shooting.

The Senator from Idaho has noted the absence of a number of men from the post that night, apparently unaccounted for (and my attention has been called to the fact), when apparently all of the men are reported present. There are some Senators in this Chamber who are familiar from their own experience with the usual report of a first sergeant after a roll call. They have heard the report made after a great battle, in which many were unaccounted for, except as they lay prone on the battlefield and could answer to but one call. The usual report of a first sergeant is, "All present or accounted for," and he accounts for the men who are absent either on a pass, as it is his duty to know, detailed for guard duty, or located elsewhere. And these men, the record shows, as I find it in the Senator's speech, reading from the RECORD:

I call attention to another matter in this affair. The record shows that—

Private Lee stayed the night at a house in the city. Was out that night. (S. Doc., p. 128.)

Private E. Johnson (p. 132) stayed that night in town with his wife.

Private G. Johnson (p. 120) was sleeping at the corral and knew nothing about the matter until he was told about it afterwards.

Private John Streater (p. 134) was asleep in the corral. Never knew anything about it.

Private G. Thomas (p. 117) was at a colored woman's house in Brownsville and did not return until the next morning.

Private Hardin (p. 131) was absent from the quarters, sleeping at Lieutenant Higgins's quarters, and did not appear until the next morning.

Private Turner (p. 135) was absent from the quarters, sleeping at Lieutenant Hayes's.

Private Kirkpatrick (p. 133) was in the hospital.

Private John Brown (p. 151) was asleep in the baker shop.

Private Elmer Brown (p. 151) was asleep in the corral.

Private Newton (p. 140) was asleep in the quarters of Lieutenant West.

Private Jones (p. 139) was asleep in Captain Lyon's quarters.

Private Mapp (p. 141) was asleep in the bake shop.

Private Halley (p. 144) was asleep in the corral.

Private John Henry (p. 144) was in the quartermaster's corral.

Private Charles W. Hawkins (p. 140) was in town on a pass.

In addition to these absentees there were absent on duty within the post at the guardhouse four noncommissioned officers.

Private Miller was out on a pass.

I have heard, and other Senators have heard, a thousand times the report of the first sergeant—"All present or accounted for." The Senator from Ohio [Mr. DICK] in his own way and in his own experience has heard it.

I know that I have already wearied the Senate, but I have felt compelled to quote freely from the record evidence and have drawn only from the testimony to sustain my conclusions and belief that each and every member of this battalion of the Twenty-fifth Infantry is absolutely innocent of the charge of shooting up the city of Brownsville and, consequently, all are guiltless of any "conspiracy of silence," for which reasons they were discharged without honor in November, 1906; and for these reasons I joined with my colleagues from West Virginia, Ohio, and Indiana in the minority report of your committee and the supplemental report attached thereto signed by the Senator from Ohio and myself.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. R. 74) suspending the commodity clause of the present interstate-commerce law.

Mr. ELKINS. I ask that the unfinished business be laid aside temporarily.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from West Virginia asks that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from Connecticut will proceed.

Mr. BULKELEY. I should feel, Mr. President and Senators, that I had fallen short of my duty if I failed to record here the honorable record of the Twenty-fifth United States Infantry, as well as that of the Twenty-fourth, and the Ninth and Tenth Cavalry, for they all do honor to the United States Army, in which they appear not only as soldiers, but as worthy representatives of their race. I ask to include here, without reading, the official records as furnished me by the War Department:

OFFICIAL RECORD OF THE TWENTY-FIFTH REGIMENT, UNITED STATES INFANTRY.

The Twenty-fifth Regiment of Infantry was organized April 20, 1869, by the consolidation of the Thirty-ninth and Fortieth Regiments of Infantry, under the act approved March 3, 1869. From April, 1869, to May, 1870, the regiment served in Louisiana and Mississippi. From May, 1870, to May, 1880, it was stationed in Texas along the Rio Grande frontier. A part of the regiment was sent to the Indian Territory in 1872, serving there to May, 1880, when the entire regiment was sent to South Dakota. It garrisoned posts on the Missouri River to May, 1888, four companies being stationed at Fort Snelling, Minn., from November, 1882, to May, 1888, when the entire regiment was sent to Montana, serving there until April, 1898. It was stationed at Chickamauga Park, Ga., to May, 1898; at Tampa, Fla., to June, 1898; in Cuba, participating in the Santiago campaign, to August, 1898; in New York to September, 1898, and in Arizona and New Mexico, to June, 1899.

Four additional companies were organized at Fort Logan, Colo., in October, 1898, and served there to June, 1899, when the headquarters and eight companies left for the Philippine Islands, the remaining four companies being stationed in Arizona and Texas to September, 1900, when they were sent to the Philippine Islands.

The entire regiment returned to the United States in August, 1902, headquarters and eight companies being sent to Fort Niobrara, Nebr., and four companies to Fort Reno, Okla. Two companies were on temporary duty at Fort Des Moines, Iowa, from December, 1903, to April, 1904.

On July 23, 1906, headquarters and four companies were sent from Fort Reno, Okla., to Fort Bliss, Tex., where they are now stationed. Four companies left Fort Niobrara, Nebr., for Fort McIntosh, Tex., on the same date, and are now stationed there. Companies B, C, and D of the regiment left Fort Niobrara, Nebr., July 23; arrived at Fort Brown, Tex., July 28, 1906, and left for Fort Reno, Okla., August 25, 1906. Company A was on temporary duty at Fort Washakie, Wyo., from April 1 to September 7, 1906, when it left for its present station, Fort Reno, Okla.

Mr. BULKELEY. It is as honorable a record of service on the frontier, in Cuba, and in the Philippines as any soldiers of the Army possess. If character and good service are entitled to any consideration in the case of any accused, the good character of these men established by the evidence of their own officers, their long, faithful, and honorable service, both in war and in peace, entitle them to our consideration here.

The advent of the negro soldiers in the Arym, Mr. President, does not date in these late years; they were alike found in the ranks in colonial as well as modern times, and history records that in the Boston massacre, March 5, 1770, regarded as "the first act in the drama of the American Revolution," Crispus Attucks—not a soldier, as described by my distinguished friend, the Senator from Missouri, but a slave—was the first to fall. He was buried from Faneuil Hall with the other victims of that event. That event is celebrated down to this day, almost a hundred and forty years since; for a long time on the anniversary of the day it occurred, and after the close of the Revolution on the Fourth of July, as the more appropriate day to commemorate an event which really led up to dissolving the relations with the mother country.

At Bunker Hill the shot which laid low the British commander as he mounted the redoubt shouting, "The day is ours," was fired by Peter Salem, once a negro slave, fighting in the ranks with his white comrades. You will find them brave, patriotic, and heroic, both in victory and defeat, in the eight years' struggle for the new Republic from Bunker Hill to Yorktown.

In the war of 1812 negroes formed their full proportion of the crew of the fleet under Commodore Perry. A writer says:

Perry speaks highly of the bravery and good conduct of the negroes who formed a considerable part of his crew. They seemed absolutely insensible to danger.

Another, Commander Shaler, says:

The name of one of my poor fellows ought to be registered in the book of fame.

In the civil war negro troops could be found in both armies as they followed the flag of the contending hosts with loyalty until the surrender at Appomattox.

In the war with Spain the regiments of colored troops of the Regular Army were at the front in almost every engagement, and at the surrender the Twenty-fifth Infantry and the Tenth Cavalry were accorded an honorable position in the closing ceremonies of the war.

On the frontier of our own country and in the newly acquired possessions of the islands of the sea they have filled their places with credit and honor.

From the conclusion reached both as to the nonparticipation of the members of the battalion in the shooting up of Brownsville and the consequent injustice of their dismissal from the Army without honor, and the disabilities carried with such dismissal, I naturally turn to some proper means of relief and restoration. The President, in his last message on this question, states that Executive authority has lapsed by reason of the time limit and that legislative action is necessary to restore such authority. For many months applications for reenlistment in the Army, or for restoration, have been in the hands of the President or with the War Department, with the only proof the soldiers could furnish of their innocence—their own affidavits and certificates of good character and faithful service from their officers—but not one has been acted upon. The President has repeatedly called upon these soldiers to prove their innocence to his satisfaction—to a mind already confirmed in conviction of undoubted guilt—as a condition of restoration and so expressed over and over again. This requirement imposed the additional burden of removing this almost insurmountable bias.

The bill S. 6206, introduced by the Senator from Missouri, simply restores to the President the powers which have lapsed by reason of time and furnish no adequate relief to the soldier, but reenacts conditions with which it is absolutely impossible to comply.

The Congress has the power under the Constitution "to raise and support armies" and "to make rules for the government of the land and naval forces." At every session of the Congress it is exercising these powers in many ways, as in correcting military records of soldiers where an apparent injustice is discovered. I can see no reasons why like action can not properly be taken here, if the Congress is satisfied that the results of the long and patient investigations discloses the facts as I have reviewed and as disclosed in the testimony.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me just a word right here?

Mr. BULKELEY. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. In view of the fact that I have taken issue with the Senator in his conclusions as to whether or not any of these soldiers participated in this shooting, I wish to say just a word at this time as to my views of what should be done.

Mr. BULKELEY. I will be through in a moment. I should like to close up. I do not care to be interrupted at this time.

Mr. FULTON. I do not wish to say anything if it will interrupt the Senator in the course of his speech.

Mr. BULKELEY. I will be through in about a moment.

Mr. FULTON. All right.

Mr. BULKELEY. The bill S. 5729, introduced by the Senator from Ohio, protects the Government in the conditions imposed for reenlistment if complied with and requires the only evidence outside of the records of the committee's investigation which the soldiers can possibly furnish. Such legislation, I believe, is within our power and I trust will be enacted before the close of this Congress.

Permit me, in closing, Mr. President and Senators, to recall the words of a former commander of the Army, commenting upon the efforts that were making in the Congress to correct an injustice to a high officer of the Army during the civil war.

It was during the efforts that were made to restore to the Army Gen. Fitz-John Porter, who had been removed by court-martial or by order, and General Schofield, a great soldier and great commander, said (Schofield's Forty Years in the Army, pp. 465–466):

It suggests the reflection that even a Senator of the United States might better form his own opinions rather than adopt those even of the highest authority, when the only question involved is one of justice and not one of public policy, in which latter case differences of opinion must of necessity be reconciled for the purpose of securing unity of action.

Mr. President, I do not ask for these soldiers either pardon or clemency, but vindication from the charge of crime for which they have been punished without a hearing or the semblance of a trial by a civil or military tribunal and of which I am convinced they are absolutely innocent, but rather relief from the stigma of dismissal from the Army without honor and restoration to the rights and privileges of which they have been deprived and which can only be restored to them by the consideration and action of the Congress.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, as I do not expect to make a speech on this subject, and in view of the fact that I took issue with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BULKELEY] in the conclusion he had reached touching the question whether or not any member of this battalion was guilty of this shooting, I feel I ought to say that I do agree with the Senator from Connecticut that the bill which has been proposed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] is nevertheless the proper measure of relief, because while I became satisfied beyond any question in my own mind that this shooting was done by some few members of this organization, yet there is absolutely no proof whatever of the identification of any individual, and I can not bring my mind to consent to the proposition that because some few may have been guilty that all of these members, who were unquestionably innocent, should be made to suffer.

Nor do I believe that the burden of proof should be put on them. That is repugnant to all of the laws which we have looked upon as necessary for the protection of individual rights and the liberty of the individual. I think that where they purge themselves by making a proper affidavit, disclaiming any connection with the affray, they should be allowed to reenlist. I understand that in substance is what the Senator from Ohio has provided in his bill.

Mr. FORAKER. That is in substance the bill I have proposed. But it has also this very important provision in the second section of it, which I did not stop to comment upon the other day. There is a provision that nothing in the proposed act contained shall be construed to prevent the prosecution of these men, civilly or by court-martial, after they shall have been reenlisted, if at any time there shall be offered the slightest evidence tending to identify anybody as guilty. So that if they should all be reenlisted, as my measure contemplates, they will then be back in the Army, be under the command of their officers, where they can be kept under surveillance, if that be necessary, and in a situation where they can be ordered before a court-martial at any moment by the President or anybody else having authority to order a court-martial.

It seems to me, looking at it upon the theory that some of the men may be guilty, in which theory I do not believe at all, nevertheless the proposition embraced in my measure is the one that ought to be adopted.

PHILIPPINE COMMISSION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 17516) to increase the membership of the Philippine Commission by one member.

Mr. LODGE. The bill is identical with the measure passed by the Senate a few weeks ago, and I ask that it may be now considered.

The bill was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted etc., That the number of Commissioners constituting the Philippine Commission is hereby increased by one additional member, making the Commission consist of nine members. Said additional member shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall receive the same salary and emoluments as is now, or may hereafter, be prescribed by law.

SEC. 2. That the President is hereby authorized in his discretion to create by Executive order, and name, a new executive department in the Philippine government, and to embrace therein such existing bureaus as he may designate in the order; and in his appointment of any commission member he shall specify in his message to the Senate the department, if any, of which the appointee shall be the secretary.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CULLOM obtained the floor.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. CULLOM. I do.

Mr. OWEN. I ask that the "restrictions bill," so called, Calendar No. 588, be made a special order on the 8th instant, immediately after the morning business, and be disposed of, with its amendments, on that day.

Mr. LODGE. What bill is it?

Mr. OWEN. Calendar No. 588, the so-called "restrictions bill." It is a local bill for Oklahoma.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the following bill——

Mr. CULBERSON. I have no objection to that, but I do not know whether it is in order, inasmuch as Senate joint resolution 74 is now the unfinished business. If it can be done, I shall be glad to see it done.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to suggest that I shall object to any more special orders being made or special hours being given, except it may be, as this was formerly given, i. e., subject to appropriation bills. I shall have to object to any request unless it be coupled with a reservation for the consideration of appropriation bills.

Mr. OWEN. I ask for this order subject to appropriation bills.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. CULLOM. I do.

Mr. LODGE. We now have a unanimous-consent agreement, which is to be disposed of on Wednesday, and it seems to me at this stage of the session we ought not to mortgage our time ahead by special orders. The bill may be taken up, and we can agree on a time to vote, but this is a request for a special order, which would shut out everything else.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 15641) for the removal of restrictions from part of the lands of allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes, and for other purposes, be taken up for consideration immediately after the close of the routine morning business on Friday, the 8th instant, and that pending amendments and amendments to be offered and the bill itself be voted upon before adjournment on that day.

Mr. WARREN. I call the attention of the Vice-President to the fact that he has failed to include "subject to appropriation bills."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Not to interfere with appropriation bills. Is there objection?

Mr. TELLER. I will not object to the bill being made the special order, but I object to that part of the request which provides that the bill shall be disposed of on that day.

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma——

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. CULLOM. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. I rise to say that I do not want for a moment to stand in the way of the bill of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], but I do not want to see the Senate making special orders indefinitely for the future. I have a bill of my own which I want to get regularly before the Senate as soon as I can, and I am afraid that if we do not agree to vote on the bill of the Senator from Oklahoma on that day, but simply make it the special order, we may be indefinitely tied up with that measure as the unfinished business.

So I do not like to agree to the request, unless the Senator from Colorado will waive his objection to that part of it which provides that we shall vote on the bill that day.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois moves——

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator from Illinois withhold the motion for a moment?

Mr. CULLOM. I yield to my colleague on the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to say that I shall endeavor to have the Senate take up the agricultural appropriation bill immediately after the morning business to-morrow.

Mr. FORAKER. I call the attention of the Senator from Wyoming to the fact that there is a notice on the Calendar that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] is to speak in the morning on the Brownsville matter if he is able, and, if not, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is to read to the Senate his remarks. The reason why——

Mr. WARREN. I do not care to change the notice I have given, but I will say to the Senator that I have never so far had any difficulty, and I do not propose to have any hereafter with any Senator who wished to go on with a speech. I merely give the notice. I think there will be no misunderstanding and we will all agree.

Mr. FORAKER. I so understand. I was merely calling the attention of the Senator to the fact that such a notice had been given.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I insist upon my motion, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 47 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, May 5, 1908, at 12 o'clock meridian.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. WATSON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill. By unanimous consent that portion of the bill relating to the Geological Survey was passed until to-day, to be taken up the first thing. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill at page 76, line 17.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of skilled laborers and various temporary employees, $20,000.

Mr. NEEDHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 77, after line 17, insert:
"For gauging the streams and determining the water supply, $200,000, to be immediately available."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make it or reserve it?

Mr. TAWNEY. Unless the gentleman wants to say something, I will make the point of order.

Mr. NEEDHAM. I desire to discuss the point of order for a moment.

Mr. TAWNEY. Then, Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is not authorized by law.

Mr. NEEDHAM. Mr. Chairman, this amendment was discussed very elaborately in the two last sessions of Congress, and I desire to call the attention of the Chair to one feature of the pending bill that is different from the last bill as reported. On page 77, line 8, of the bill now under consideration appears this language:

Gauging streams and determining the water supply.

That is in this bill as reported from the committee. In former bills that language was omitted as they were reported from the committee to the House. This paragraph has been passed without objection, without amendment, and without any point of order being made against it. Consequently not only the Committee on Appropriations, but the Committee of the Whole House, has ratified by its action that language of the bill, and under all fair rules of pleading the committee should be bound by the language of the bill. My amendment simply seeks to perfect the subject-matter by making an appropriation in accordance with the bill as reported. Heretofore, on former bills, when the point of order was sustained, this language was not in the bill and the Chair held that such an amendment as I now propose would therefore not be in order. In addition to that, I desire to suggest to the Chair that, notwithstanding the fact that the bill when it originally passed the House made no provision for this work, yet when it finally passed the Congress it did make such a provision and this is therefore a work in progress. Therefore it seems to me that the point of order should be overruled.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. What would be the effect of the amendment now offered?

Mr. NEEDHAM. To appropriate $200,000 for the continuation of the investigations of the water resources and the measurement of streams.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. All over the United States?

Mr. NEEDHAM. All over the United States.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What is the amount now appropriated?

Mr. NEEDHAM. I think it was $150,000 last year, as I recall it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. How much of that was used?

Mr. NEEDHAM. I understand it was all used. The estimate is $200,000.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What necessitates this large appropriation?

Mr. NEEDHAM. This is the estimate, as I understand it. It was not all completed last year. This is the estimate as it comes to Congress from the Department.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I know they are doing very good work in my State.

Mr. NEEDHAM. I am not discussing the merits at this time, but simply discussing the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from California whether or not he is aware that on line 8, page 77, the language of his amendment is already incorporated in the paragraph which has been passed?

Mr. NEEDHAM. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that that was not in the former bill.

The CHAIRMAN. But it is in this bill.

Mr. NEEDHAM. And that is the reason I contend that it is in order to make the appropriation. The committee having passed that language and agreed upon it, without a point of order, without amendment, under all fair rules of pleading it is now in order to make an appropriation to carry that out.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, it is true that in the former paragraph the language "for gauging streams and determining the water supply" is included, but that language is not law. It never has been the law. There is, therefore, no authorization for the appropriation. The language was undoubtedly inadvertently included in this paragraph, but it does not constitute law. Congress has not authorized by law the gauging of streams, for the purpose of determining the water supply of the United States, and there is no statutory law, there is no authorization for an appropriation any more than there would be if this language was not in the preceding paragraph.

And I wish, Mr. Chairman, in addition to the point of order made against the proposed amendment, to make a point of order against the language on page 77, line 8, "gauging streams and determining the water supply." The paragraph is not concluded, and what follows here——

Mr. NEEDHAM. It is too late to make that point now.

Mr. TAWNEY. The paragraph has not been discussed at all——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order it is too late after the discussion of an amendment offered to make the point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. If an amendment is offered before the completion of the reading of a paragraph, certainly that does not cut off the point of order. Now, if the Chair will examine this language, this is in the nature of a caption for certain purposes, namely, for pay of skilled laborers, and so forth, and each one of these items is a subdivision of that paragraph. They can not, by offering an amendment before the complete reading of the paragraph, head off a point of order of a portion of the paragraph.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from North Carolina rise?

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. For the purpose of discussing the point of order. Mr. Chairman, the point of order made by the gentleman from California is very clear to my mind. The gentleman from California contends that inasmuch as the paragraph has been passed which specifies the work of the Geological Survey, and no point of order made to the paragraph specifying the work of the Geological Survey, that his amendment is therefore in order. The paragraph which reads "For the pay of skilled laborers and various temporary employees, $20,000," has been passed as well as the preceding paragraph, or subdivision of the paragraph, whichever you choose to call it, and the gentleman from California contends that the point of order made by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] is too late, and, therefore, his amendment is in order. The committee has passed the paragraph specifying the work to be done by the Geological Survey and that paragraph being passed over by the committee and no point of order being made thereto, it is now in order to amend the bill by making an appropriation for that part of the work specified and known as "the gauging of streams and investigation of water resources." That is all I wish to say.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make the further point of order that the reading of the paragraph is not completed and is not therefore subject to amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. This amendment is offered after line 17——

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. And upon this last point of order I desire to be heard but briefly, if the Chair will permit me. I am not depending wholly upon punctuation, realizing that punctuation is a bad guide, or at least a frail guide; but the punctuation is in accordance with my contention, and the language used is evidently in accordance with my contention. "For general expenses of the Geological Survey: For the Geological Survey and the classification of the public lands and examination of the geological structure, mineral resources," and so forth, enumerating the subjects—namely, "for pay of skilled laborers and various temporary employees, $20,000," all one sentence, all one paragraph, absolutely unintelligible except treated as a single paragraph. A fraction of the paragraph having been read the gentleman offers an amendment. That amendment is certainly not in order until the completion of the reading of the paragraph, and upon the reading of the paragraph I will ask recognition to make a point or order against the language, "gauging streams and determining the water supply," in the first portion of the paragraph.

Mr. DOUGLAS. If the gentleman will permit, where does the gentleman insist that the paragraph ends?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It ends with the appropriations under this heading.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Where in the text?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I have not the same text the gentleman has, and it is impossible for me to state without examiantion.

The CHAIRMAN. Where does the gentleman from Iowa contend the paragraph ends?

Mr. TAWNEY. Line 16, page 78.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It ends on line 16, page 78, in my judgment.

Mr. TAWNEY. It runs to line 16, page 78, where a new subject which is not included in the general caption begins—that is, for the investigation of structural material which is not specified in the preceding paragraph.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, that is obviously impossible.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not undertand the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DOUGLAS].

Mr. DOUGLAS. I submit, if the Chairman please, that that paragraph ends where the gentleman has introduced his amendment, at the close of line 17 on page 77. It can not be said to end at line 16, page 78. At least it is obvious the printer did not expect that, for he ended it with a semicolon.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I think outside of any other construction that may be put on this question, the committee has construed where this paragraph ends and where it begins. In the reading of the paragraph the committee has construed the question as if each one of these sentences were a separate paragraph, and I make the point that it is too late now for the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] to contend that this is an entire paragraph after the Chair and the committee have treated each one of these as separate paragraphs. More than that, Mr. Chairman, I think that the text itself shows that according to the custom of the House each one of these separate items is a separate paragraph. The purpose of reading under the five-minute rule is to bring each separate paragraph before the House for consideration and amendment. It is a matter of convenience in its consideration by the committee, and it is obvious that it is the usual custom and a convenient way in considering this proposition to consider the words "For pay of skilled laborers and various temporary employees, $20,000," as one paragraph, and "For topographical surveys in various portions of the United States, $300,000," as another paragraph, rather than consider each one of them as embraced in one paragraph and only subject to amendment as a whole. Therefore, I think that the gentleman's proposition comes entirely too late.

And as to the main proposition, whether it is existing law to provide for the gauging of streams and the determining of the water supply of the country, the Committee on Appropriations have provided in this bill for the consideration of that question by the Committee of the Whole, and the Committee of the Whole have enacted that provision into this bill by passing it without amendment, and therefore it is properly before the Committee of the Whole, and the Committee of the Whole can provide such appropriation as is sufficient to carry out the language of the provision.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] contend that the mere fact that that has been read by a clerk in the Committee of the Whole makes a law of it?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It does not make a law of it, but makes it a part of this bill. I undoubtedly contend, Mr. Chairman, that when the Clerk of this committee reads a paragraph and that paragraph is passed and another paragraph entered upon, immediately that we enter upon the second paragraph the paragraph that the Clerk has finished reading, by the enactment of this committee, under the rules of the committee, becomes a part of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Suppose that the paragraph read by the Clerk is contrary to the existing law. Does the gentleman claim that that repeals the statute?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is too late to raise the question after the paragraph is adopted. The Clerk reading the next paragraph adopts it.

The CHAIRMAN. You must raise the question when the question of appropriation is made. Does the gentleman contend that is an authorization of appropriation against direct statute?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; but when the Committee of the Whole has adopted into the bill a provision and there is no point of order raised against it, because it is the accepted ruling in this House that when a clause is once put in an appropriation bill, although it is contrary to existing law, and passed, it becomes a part of that bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Suppose it is against existing law, would that authorize an appropriation immediately after?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think it does if it is put in there and provided for without a point of order being made against it. I think clearly it does.

The CHAIRMAN. Then, according to the argument of the gentleman—and the Chair has no desire to argue the question, as it is the office of the Chair to decide and not to argue—according to the argument of the gentleman, the mere passing of this paragraph by the reading of the Clerk repeals all statutes contrary thereto.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not at all, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. It must of necessity if——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It does not repeal all statutes. It does not repeal any law.

The CHAIRMAN. If the appropriation asked for is contrary to existing law, it makes law, and the consequence may be contrary to statute law; the mere fact that this itself does no authorize an appropriation does not make a law.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I say the reading of the paragraph by the Clerk, without a point of order being made, has the same effect as if formally the House had voted upon it. I do not think the Chair will differ with me as to that. The question is whether the House adopts the provision as contrary to existing law if the point of order could be made; not that it changes existing law, but as to whether the point of order came too late. That is the question, and I say that all the precedents of the House of Representatives clearly point to the fact that whenever a paragraph has been adoped by the House, whether it is contrary to existing law or not, that it is too late then to make the point of order that it is contrary to existing law; and the effect of the point of order made against that appropriation carries the point of order to a paragraph that has already been adopted by the Committee of the Whole, and comes entirely too late to be made now.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the rule that covers the question consists of two portions. It provides, first:

> That no provision changing existing law shall be in order on an appropriation bill.

That is one branch of the rule. Then it also provides:

> That no appropriation of money shall either be reported or be in order to an appropriation bill where the appropriation is not authorized by existing law.

These gentlemen who advocate the amendment can not take the two ends of the dilemma. They can not contend that this is a separate and distinct paragraph, so as to prevent the point of order being raised against them, and then insist at the same time that the items be considered as separate paragraphs, so as to authorize the amendment that they desire to make. Where both the new language and the appropriation carried are a change of law, if the provision were read without the point of order being raised, and then an attempt made to increase the appropriation, it clearly would be in order under the decisions. But that is not this case. It is true that a provision changing existing law has been read and passed, and then another paragraph has been read. The sole question before the Chair is whether, although a provision has been permitted to remain in the bill which will change existing law if finally enacted, there not having been a point of order made, if an item is in order which provides an appropriation which at present is not authorized by any law. I submit that the distinction made in Rule XXI applies to this case—the fact that there is no authority in law—it does not say "in the bill," but "in law," for this appropriation; and the appropriation can not be made if the point of order be raised, as it has been raised here.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, regarding this paragraph, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the punctuation of the present bill and in the bill as it was passed last year. If you refer to the bill of last year, you will find that the first appropriation mentioned is an independent paragraph with a large number of independent paragraphs thereafter. In this bill the punctuation mark after the word "namely" is a colon. The subdivisions of the bill are divided by semicolons and periods. You could not well connect the paragraph—directly as part of the preceding paragraph, and then connect it with every paragraph that follows. I take the position that this committee having allowed the paragraph to be read where it appeared in the bill in exactly the same words as the bill was finally passed last year, that the House was satisfied that the paragraph for the gauging of streams is now a pertinent matter, that it is a work in progress, and not subject to the point of order.

Mr. WALDO. I want to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that it has been the practice in this House for the past two or three years to treat paragraphs of this kind as separate paragraphs and as subject to amendment, and not treat separate paragraphs as one subject. Now, here are four or five or ten or a dozen subjects in these paragraphs, and they have always been treated as separate paragraphs.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed there is no precedent as to what constitutes a paragraph in a general appropriation bill under consideration in the Committee of the Whole. Ordinarily it would occur to the Chair that the paragraph should contain one substantive proposition. But it occurs to the Chair that under the practice which exists as to printing bills it would be very bad practice to establish the precedent of determining the paragraph by the substantive proposition rather than by the printer's indention.

In the present instance, if the gentleman from Minnesota will examine the bill carefully he will observe that after the end of line 17 there is a period; at the end of line 20 there is a semicolon; after line 23 there is another semicolon; a semicolon after the word "dollars," in line 25; a period after the word "dollars," at the end of line 2, page 78, and so on, so that there is no regularity of punctuation as between the different parts of this substantive proposition.

The Chair is clearly of the opinion that a paragraph ends with the word "dollars," in line 17, on page 77, and that the point of order made by the gentleman from Minnesota comes too late, because the paragraph to which it refers has been passed; and that the amendment offered by the gentleman from California is in order, so far as place is concerned. The Chair has yet to decide the question as to whether it is in order so far as its object is concerned.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Has the Chair completed his decision?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has decided that the printer's indentations constitute the paragraphs.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to make the point of order that this appropriation is not authorized by law.

Mr. TAWNEY. I have made that point already.

The CHAIRMAN. That point of order has been made.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Has the Chair decided that?

The CHAIRMAN. Not yet.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This amendment is not offered to the paragraph which changes existing law, but it is offered as a separate and independent paragraph, with a paragraph intervening, between it and the paragraph wherein reference is made to the subject, and if there is not some existing law for the appropriation it can not be in order. It occupies a different position from an amendment offered to a paragraph changing existing law. There is no law authorizing this particular work which he asks the appropriation for, and the mere fact that the subject is referred to in the bill does not change the situation so as to authorize the appropriation.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair will hear me just one moment in answer to what the gentleman has said, this question comes up in this way: Here is a provision for the general expenses of the Geological Survey. The House enacted into this bill a paragraph providing what shall constitute the work of the Geological Survey. That has been enacted by the House, notwithstanding it is contrary to existing law, because no point of order was made against it at the proper time. Therefore the House has already decided what it will appropriate for in reference to this Geological Survey. Now, the question is merely to determine how much we shall appropriate to carry out what the committee has already decided shall be in this bill, and therefore, I take it, it is too late for the gentleman to make the point of order that it is contrary to existing law.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not. I make the point of order that it is not authorized by existing law.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Or the point that it is not authorized by existing law, because the proper place for the gentleman to have made the point of order that it was not authorized by existing law was when we had the preceding paragraph before the committee and were determining on what matters we would appropriate money for the Geological Survey. But that having already been decided by the House, it is too late now for the gentleman to raise the question, when it is merely a question of carrying out what the committee has already ordered to be done.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. That portion of the bill from line 3 to line 15 does not appropriate any money.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly not.

Mr. MANN. Now, the inhibition in the rule is against the appropriation for an object not authorized by law. Does the gentleman contend that the next item, from line 18 to line 20, if it is not authorized by law, is not subject to a point of order?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly I do, because——

Mr. MANN. Upon what could you make a point of order then? You can not make a point of order upon lines 3 to 15, because there is no appropriation there, and it does not come within the inhibition of the rule.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; but it carries with it the idea of an appropriation. It fixes what shall be done.

Mr. MANN. Carrying with it the idea of an appropriation is something that is not in the rule. The rule provides that no appropriation shall be in order which is not authorized by law. Now, there is no appropriation in the paragraph to which the gentleman refers. He says you can not make a point of order there on account of that, and then you can not make a point of order on the other, because you have not made a point of order on the first one, and a point of order is not in order on the first one. Where would you land?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But the point of order was in order on the first one.

Mr. MANN. There is no appropriation in the first one.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is in the portion of the bill that determines whether it is contrary to law; it is not a mere appropriation of money.

Mr. MANN. It is an appropriation of the money that comes within the inhibition of the rule.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is that portion of the bill that provides what shall be appropriated for that makes it contrary to existing law.

Mr. MANN. It is the part of the paragraph providing in such a case what the appropriation is for; the other is like the whereas, or a recital merely.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question.

Mr. MANN. If I have the floor, I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HOUSTON. The question is whether or not lines 3 to 15 contain an authorization of an appropriation "for general expense of the Geological Survey" without designating the amount of each special item.

Mr. MANN. They can not authorize an appropriation, because that is not the law. A recital in an appropriation bill can not authorize an appropriation; the point becomes available when the appropriation comes to be made.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the point made by the gentleman from Illinois is not well taken. It is the universal practice of the House to discuss the subject-matter of a paragraph in an appropriation bill—to discuss the different items before reaching the item of appropriation itself. If the Chair will recollect, a few days ago we discussed the paragraph relating to appropriations for forest reserves. At the end of that paragraph a lump-sum appropriation was provided for the various purposes indicated in the paragraph. Various points of order were made successively against provisions and authorizations contained in that paragraph on the ground that such provisions were not in accordance with existing law, though there was no appropriation made at any point in the bill for the particular or specific purpose indicated by certain language contained in the paragraph. Now, the House has passed this paragraph providing for certain investigations. It seems very clear to me, therefore, that while there is no specific appropriation for the purpose of carrying out the work provided for in the language referred to, the fact that the House has passed the item, has approved the language, clearly makes it in order to make a specific appropriation to carry out the object of the legislation, this amendment being simply a modification of this language, which is not now subject to a point of order.

I do not agree with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] that the provision with regard to gauging streams would have been subject to a point of order if the point of order had been raised. It provides—and I have discussed that question on several occasions—for the investigation of water, a mineral resource; but it is unnecessary to discuss that question now, because the House has passed the paragraph, and we are now simply amending an item that has been passed and adopted, which we have a right to do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that two years ago the present occupant of the chair, sitting as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill, in a decision of some length going into the precedents, decided that the proposition to continue the gauging of streams is not authorized as continuation of a public work and is not authorized by the legislation creating the Geological Survey.

The Chair is clearly of the opinion that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from California is subject to a point of order, because the appropriation is not authorized by existing law. It is the contention of the gentleman and those who have supported his claim that because the committee passed that portion of the paragraph having reference to gauging of streams, determining the water supply, without anybody having made a point of order against it, that therefore the appropriation is in order. The Chair thinks not. The gentleman from Alabama, in a statement which he made to the Chair, stated that the House had enacted that proposition because we had passed it without anybody having objected to it or having raised a point of order. The House alone can not enact legislation, the Committee of the Whole can not enact legislation, and if there be anything in the paragraph passed contrary to existing law and the point of order is afterwards raised on an appropriation for that item that it is contrary to existing law, the mere fact that we have passed it does not authorize the appropriation and does not change the law. In other words, it is very clear to the Chair, and it must be to everybody who thinks about it, that the mere fact that we passed an item does not authorize the appropriation or does not change existing law. The gentleman from California proposes an amendment for which there is no authority in law, and the Chair therefore thinks the mere fact that we passed the item makes no difference, and that it is subject to the point of order, and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. NEEDHAM. Does the Chair hold that this is not a work in progress? I made the point that it is a work in progress.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. If the gentleman from California cares to dig into the musty tombs of the dead past and will hunt up the decision, about two pages long, made by the Chair on this same proposition two years ago, I think he will be satisfied. The Chair at least is satisfied with his previous decision and adheres to it.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. SMITH of Michigan having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, joint resolution of the following title:

H. J. Res. 173. Joint resolution for the relief of the sufferers from the cyclone which occurred in the States of Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana on April 24, 1908.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

For paleontologic researches relating to the geology of the United States, $10,000.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I listened the best I could amidst the confusion to the decision of the Chair, just rendered, but I missed some of it, I fear, and that I may not lose any of it, I desire to ask the Chair what the Chair decides as being a paragraph in the sense that we use that word.

The CHAIRMAN. The printer's indentation.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, for instance, beginning with line 24 and ending with line 25 with the word "four" and ending with the word "dollars" would be a paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That is the way I thought I caught the Chair's decision, and I am glad to know that.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the preparation of the report of the mineral resources of the United States, which report shall hereafter be published in two octavo volumes and as a distinct publication, the number of copies, printing of separate chapters, and mode of distribution of which shall be the same as of the annual report, $75,000.

Mr. NEEDHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 78, line 11, insert, after the word "dollars:"
"And for the further examination of the mineral resources and products of the national domain, $200,000, to be immediately available."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that amendment.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph of the bill just read by the Clerk.

Mr. NEEDHAM. Mr. Chairman, the amendment was offered and read, and I think it is too late for the gentleman to make that point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. NEEDHAM. Yes. This language is the language of the organic act, and it seems to me it can not be contended that this is subject to a point of order. It simply follows, as I say, the language of the organic act establishing the Geological Survey, and unless the gentleman can point out wherein the language is subject to a point of order, I do not care to take the time of the Chair longer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair first desires to state to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MACON] that his point of order to the whole paragraph comes too late. It is the rule that a point of order against a proposition must be made before any amendment is offered to it. The amendment had been offered and read.

Mr. MACON. But the gentleman was recognized before I was.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, but that does not alter the rule of the House, because the amendment had been offered.

Mr. MACON. The Chair could not very well recognize both at once. The gentleman was recognized for the purpose of offering an amendment. Just as soon as I had an opportunity of getting the floor, I did, even while the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] was on his feet. I then made the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it not a fact that the gentleman sat in his seat and listened to the reading of the amendment before he rose to his feet?

Mr. MACON. That is a fact; yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the gentleman's point comes too late to the whole paragraph. The Chair will now hear the gentleman from California.

Mr. NEEDHAM. Mr. Chairman, I have simply to say that this is the language of the organic act, and I do not believe that a point of order will lie against it. Unless the gentleman making a point of order will point where it is obnoxious to the rules, I do not think it is incumbent upon me to argue the point. It seems to me very clear that it simply follows the language of the organic act and is certainly in order.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, if it is authorized, then the amendment should be to increase the appropriation to $75,000 and not proposed as a new paragraph. It is true that the organic act creating the Geological Survey is as follows:

A Director of the Geological Survey. * * * To have the direction of the Geological Survey and the classification of public lands and the examination of the geological structure and mineral resources and products of the national domain.

It is under that authority that the appropriation has been made or that the appropriation of $75,000 is carried; and if this be added, then if the gentleman wants to increase the appropriation for that purpose, the gentleman should have offered his amendment increasing the appropriation to the amount specified and not propose a new paragraph which involves in effect what the Chair has just ruled out, namely, his amendment for $200,000 for the gauging of streams on the theory that water is a mineral.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. That is the purpose of this separate paragraph, to whip the devil around the stump by securing an appropriation of $200,000 for the purpose of gauging streams on the theory that water is a mineral.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I suggest the gentleman argue also that it is not germane to this paragraph——

Mr. NEEDHAM. That is offered as a separate paragraph.

Mr. FITZGERALD. An appropriation for investigation is not germane to a paragraph for printing a report.

Mr. TAWNEY. I put that in as additional ground that the amendment is not germane to the paragraph.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. For the purpose of discussing the point of order. Mr. Chairman, the amendment of the gentleman from California is not offered as an amendment to the preceding paragraph. The preceding paragraph carries $75,000 for preparation of a report of the mineral resources of the United States. The pending amendment was offered by the gentleman from California as a separate paragraph entirely, as is the custom under all appropriation bills of this character and as has been done time and time again. Now, this amendment is certainly in order; it is bound to be in order. It is in the exact language of the organic act creating the Geological Survey, which I have before me. The language of the organic act is:

Provided, That this officer—

Meaning the Director of the Geological Survey—

shall have the direction of the Geological Survey, the classification of the public lands, and the examination of the geological structure, mineral sources—

Meaning examination of the mineral resources—and products of the national domain.

Now, the preceding paragraph, to which the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] referred, carrying $75,000, is for a report of the mineral resources of the United States. This amendment offered by the gentleman from California is for an examination of the mineral resources and is in the exact language of the organic act, and whatever the purpose of it is, being in the exact language of the organic act, it is bound to be in order, and I can not see how the Chair can properly rule otherwise.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to ask the gentleman from California whether or not he proposes this as an amendment to the paragraph or as a separate paragraph?

Mr. NEEDHAM. I propose it as a separate paragraph. The word "and" should not have been in there. It should have been "for the further examination."

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the Clerk reported it as a separate paragraph; that is the understanding.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California desire to withdraw the amendment and offer it in a new form?

Mr. NEEDHAM. Yes, sir; I offer it as a separate paragraph and ask that the word "and" be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be changed and considered as offered as changed.

There was no objection.

Insert, page 78, line 11, after the word "dollars:"
"For the further examination of the mineral resources and products of the national domain, $200,000, to be immediately available."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the same point of order. This is a new amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; it is a new amendment.

Mr. TAWNEY. Then I make the same point of order against it.

Mr. BONYNGE. Will the gentleman state what his point of order is—on what ground does he base it?

Mr. TAWNEY. I make the point of order on the ground that it is not germane to the provision and is not authorized by law.

Mr. BONYNGE. The gentleman from California offers it as a separate amendment, if I understand it correctly. I desire to ask the gentleman from California if he has not offered it as a separate paragraph?

Mr. NEEDHAM. Yes; I have not offered it now as an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the proposition. The organic act creating the Geological Survey contains this language, quoted by the Chair in a former decision on this proposition:

Provided, That this officer shall have the direction of the Geological Survey, the classification of the public lands, and the examination of the geological structure, mineral resources, and products of the national domain.

This amendment provides for a further examination of the mineral resources and products of the national domain, bringing it squarely within the statutory authorization, as the Chair thinks, and being exactly in line with what was held at least the last two years on this same subject, the Chair thinks that the amendment is not subject to the point of order, and therefore the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. NEEDHAM. Mr. Chairman, this subject was very elaborately discussed in the two last sessions of Congress, and it does not seem necessary to go into an elaborate discussion of the merits of the proposition at this time. I take it if this amendment is agreed to by the committee and is permitted to remain in the bill, that then it will be within the discretion of the Director of the Geological Survey to say how he shall expend this $200,000, and it is expected that an investigation of our water resources and the measurement of streams—both having gone on now for many years, until both have become of the highest value, and both so necessary, in fact, for the conservation of our national resources—will be continued.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Will the gentleman yield for a question? If $20,000 was adequate for the purpose when you made the other amendment, do not you think $200,000——

Mr. NEEDHAM. No; $100,000——

Mr. BUTLER. What was the appropriation last year?

Mr. NEEDHAM. The appropriation last year was $100,000.

Mr. BUTLER. What is the recommendation of the Department?

Mr. NEEDHAM. Two hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. TAWNEY. Let me say in reply to the gentleman from California [Mr. NEEDHAM], that there is no recommendation from the Department for a cent for this purpose.

Mr. NEEDHAM. I have understood that there is.

Mr. TAWNEY. Not one; no, sir. There has been no estimate at all for the proposition embodied in the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

Mr. BONYNGE. Is there an estimate for the gauging of streams?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes, sir. This is not the gauging of streams in the national domain. It does not say for the purpose of gauging streams. Now, while water may be a mineral it is not one of the mineral resources of the United States.

Mr. NEEDHAM. Mr. Chairman, I meant to say, of course, there was an estimate made for the gauging of streams and carrying on the investigation of the water resources of the amount which I suggested. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that it will be a matter of good administration for the Director of the Geological Survey to determine how this amount of money will be expended, and I take it that he will expend it in this direction. As I say, it seems to me that the House and the country are so overwhelmingly in favor of an appropriation of this kind that I will not take up the time of the House to further discuss it.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I have not heard all the debate on this paragraph. Therefore I may not by what I say contribute anything new to the discussion. However, I know that this particular branch of the Geological Survey has been doing work in my section of the country, and it has been valuable work. It has been of great assistance to the State of New Jersey and a great assistance to the River and Harbor Committee and the other Departments of the National Government. Now, of course, I understand that it is no argument to stand here and say that they assisted the State; but, in doing work that is valuable to the National Government and the various Departments thereof, they have also placed valuable information within our reach. I know the representative of this Department has spent a great deal of time investigating the streams and the sources of water supply in the mountains of the State of New Jersey, and right in my district. They have placed within our reach information which is going to help us to prevent the terrific and disastrous floods that have been of periodic occurrence there in the last ten or fifteen years. The Government has published the result of its investigations, and those publications find their way into the hands of the various municipalities along the line of the streams that are fed by these water sources, and a great deal of good has been done in this way. The heads of these municipalities are in much better condition now to guard against floods by reason of the operations of this department than they ever were before, and it is hard for me to see how any State or municipality could have carried this work on properly. For instance, it was necessary to make these particular investigations in at least three States, and whatever might have been suggested would have had to meet with the consent and concurrence of those different States. But here the Federal officer comes in, having no particular interest except the general interest that the National Government has in the situation, investigates and reports what the situation is, not only in one locality but in other places, and shows how action in one place will affect the situation in other places, so that a common policy may be adopted by means of the operations of the men working for this department and along this particular line.

I do not know, of course, what the situation is in California or what has been done in other parts of this country, but I can say that so far as the activities of this Department along this line have come beneath my observation they have resulted in nothing but good. The appropriation asked for is a modest one; the money has always been honestly and efficiently spent, and this particular line of work has been carried on in a manner that is absolutely beyond criticism, so far as I know.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] is discussing the question of the gauging of streams?

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I am.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman state what application that provision has to the gauging of streams?

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I gathered from the cross fire that went on a little while ago that it has something to do with it.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I assume that if this amendment carries the Director of the Geological Survey will feel justified in using it for the purpose of gauging streams and determining the water mineral resources of the United States.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman mean that if Congress makes an appropriation authorized by law that some official of the Government will be justified in using it for a purpose not authorized by law?

Mr. MONDELL. No, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is what the gentleman has said.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not mean anything of the sort. I mean that if Congress makes an appropriation the head of the bureau or Department charged with the administration of the law and disbursement of the appropriation will use the appropriation for the purpose authorized by law. And I think there can be no doubt in the mind of anyone who has given the matter any considerable amount of consideration that water is not only a mineral, but one of the most valuable mineral resources of the country, perhaps the most valuable of the mineral resources of the country.

It is used for irrigation, it is used for navigation, for domestic and municipal purposes; and the many and manifold uses of this valuable mineral are such that its study becomes one of the most important objects of study under the Survey. Mr. Chairman, it is very important indeed that this work should be carried on, and that it be carried on continuously and systematically in all portions of the country. Nothing is more important than that we shall have accurate information, running through a series of years, as to the flow of streams. It is important from the standpoint of irrigation, it is important from the standpoint of reclamation by drainage, it is important from the standpoint of the use of water power in manufacturing. It is important from the standpoint of water for municipal purposes, and we shall neglect a great public duty if we do not continue systematically and under a sufficient appropriation this most important work, to the end that we may have statistics available to all our citizens as to the amount, character, and the duration of the flow of streams.

Now, I believe the Director will be justified in using this appropriation for this purpose, and I assume that if the appropriation is made he will use it for this purpose, and the amount appropriated is none too great for the work. The hundred thousand dollars appropriated last year, I call to the attention of my friends from the East and Middle States, was largely used in the West, because the officers of the Geological Survey felt that their first duty under the appropriation was to determine the water supply upon the public lands; and unless the appropriation be increased, as it is proposed to increase it under this item, there will not be sufficient appropriation to distribute generally throughout the country and carry on this highly important work. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I hope that the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the amendment will not be adopted.

In the first place, Mr. Chairman, I believe in being honest with myself and with the House. I can not see how any man can justify the appropriation of $200,000 out of the Public Treasury, under the amendment as offered, when he knows that he is voting, not that it shall only be used for that purpose, but that the head of the Department will use this money for an entirely different purpose from that expressed in the amendment. Gentlemen get up here and talk about expending this money for gauging the streams in the States not in the national domain. Do they have any assurance now from the Geological Survey that the money is going to be expended in the State of New Jersey, in the State of New York, and in other states outside of the national domain? If it is proposed to continue the gauging of streams in the manner in which that work has been carried on heretofore, why are we not asked to make an appropriation for that express purpose?

Mr. NEEDHAM. Will not the gentleman make a point of order against such a provision?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will make the point of order, because it is not authorized by law, and because, as I have said formerly in regard to this expenditure, that more than one-half of it is expended entirely outside of governmental functions. It is expended in accordance with the statement made by the Director of the Survey when before the committee two years ago, primarily for the benefit of prospecting investors in water power. That was the reason, Mr. Chairman, why this appropriation was not reported two years ago and three years ago nor this year. You talk about the necessity of gauging streams in the semiarid and arid sections of the country. I trust no man on the floor of this House will be deceived by that argument. Under the irrigation law there are ample funds for the gauging of all streams connected with irrigation projects anywhere within the arid or semiarid sections of the country in the national domain. Why should you feel justified in expending this money for the gauging of streams on the idea that you would be investigating the mineral resources, even conceding water as one of the mineral resources of the country, which I do not admit.

Nobody denies the fact that water is a mineral, but I claim that no man can truthfully assert, or sustain the assertion, that it is one of the mineral resources of this country. Therefore you are limited to the national domain, and the gauging of streams in the national domain in connection with irrigation projects; and all of that stream gauging is provided for in the reclamation act, and is paid for, or ought to be paid for, out of the reclamation fund.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the statement of the gentleman from New Jersey illustrates why this amendment ought not to be adopted. He will not claim that the streams which have heretofore been gauged and are now being gauged in New Jersey are for the purpose of determining the mineral resources of the State of New Jersey. The streams that are being gauged in other States outside of the national domain are not being gauged for the purpose of determining the mineral resources of those States. The money is being expended for the purpose of determining the flow of various rivers, and also for the purpose of determining water pollution in connection with municipalities. That is what this money has been expended for before, and what it is being expended for this year, and it has no relation whatever to the investigation of the mineral resources of the United States.

But much has been said and doubtless will be said with regard to the advantage to navigation of this provision. When General Mackenzie was before the committee, who, as we all know, has for many years had charge of the river and harbor improvements of the United States, I asked him this question:

Is the gauging done on the rivers that are navigable, that come under the jurisdiction of the War Department?

General MACKENZIE. To tell you the truth, I do not know very well to what extent the gauging work of the Geological Survey is done. We make a great many gaugings in connection with our work.

The CHAIRMAN. You make systematic gaugings yourselves in connection with river and harbor improvements?

General MACKENZIE. Yes, sir; such as may be necessary and where the information is not at hand. Of course if it is in a published report we would avail ourselves of that.

Mr. SHERLEY. It is claimed by the advocate of the policy of governmental gauging of streams that by the gauging over a sufficient period of time, to accurately arrive at conclusions as to the volume of water, that you can determine in large measure the ability to make navigable streams that are supplied through the smaller tributaries. How far is that view shared by yourself as to the value of this information? For instance, take the gauging of the streams that are within the watershed of the Ohio River, and that determines, if carried out elaborately enough, the volume of water flowing into the Ohio River. How far would that information be of practical value in enabling the War Department to reach a conclusion as to the depth of water that might be maintained in the Ohio River by dams or otherwise?

General MACKENZIE. Such information might be of value in connection with plans contemplating the construction of reservoirs at headwaters of tributaries, but the information does not necessarily have much bearing on the plans which have been approved by Congress for the improvement of the Ohio and are being carried out by the Engineer Department, such plan being that of slackwatering the Ohio—building dams to hold up the water.

Mr. SHERLEY. I was not using the Ohio River because of any specific reason, but simply as an illustration. Would it be of value in other cases, or is its value more or less problematical?

General MACKENZIE. The value is more or less problematical. No general statement can be made as to what improvements the use of such class of information can be advantageously applied. You can never tell, in connection with these improvements, where that information would be valuable. Of course I can speak in connection with the upper Mississippi River, which I had in charge for seventeen years. We made originally a series of gaugings by which we determined the approximate discharge.

So all this manufactured argument for the purpose of trying to impress upon this House the importance of this subject by asserting upon this floor that these stream gaugings are made for the purposes of the Engineer Corps of the War Department, to aid them in carrying on their improvements, has absolutely no foundation in fact. But I want to impress upon the members of this committee that if this appropriation is for the gauging of streams, and not for the investigation of the mineral resources of the United States, then it should not be made, because on the face of it it expresses a lie, and there is no man on the floor of this House who will dare assert that any executive officer would be justified in expending a dollar of this money in the gauging of streams as heretofore upon the subterfuge that water being a mineral is therefore one of the mineral resources, for that reason they would be entitled to gauge streams for the purpose of determining the navigability of certain streams or the pollution of water in connection with municipalities.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am interested in the gentleman's speech, but I want to ask him this: Is not the Government of the United States directly interested in the irrigation business, and therefore in finding water and the quantities and kinds of water?

Mr. TAWNEY. The Government of the United States is not only interested, but is engaged in the business of irrigating the arid and semiarid lands of the country, and for that purpose the irrigation act provides for the gauging of streams, and the expense of that work is paid out of the reclamation fund, from which it ought to be paid.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I agree with the gentleman that the money for irrigation and gauging of water should be directly appropriated for that purpose, and that money should not be used by any kind of subterfuge.

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, I have answered the gentleman's question, and I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the subject of irrigation does not need to concern the mind of any member of this committee in connection with this amendment, for the reason that the irrigation work of the United States is carried on under the reclamation act and paid for out of the reclamation fund.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask that I may have two minutes to reply to one matter referred to by the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will yield the two minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming is recognized in his own right.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I understood the gentleman from Minnesota to say that the irrigation law provided for gauging the streams upon which the Government is engaged in irrigation work. There is no provision whatever in the reclamation law for the gauging of streams or the determination of water resources, and that work can not be properly carried on by the Government under the reclamation law and by use of the reclamation funds, except that it may be carried on in connection with some project upon which the Government may be engaged or has in contemplation.

I desire to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that of the hundreds of streams in the arid region which are utilized for irrigation the Government is doing work on comparatively few of them; that a large amount of the irrigation development of the country is being done by private enterprise, and that even on those streams where the Government is engaged in the work of reclamation there is no authority for gauging or determining the water supply except as may be necessary for the determination of facts relating to the projects in which it is engaged.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit an inquiry?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly, I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is no use for me to ask the gentleman from Wyoming whether he is aware of the fact, because he is, that the gauging of streams and underground water for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not a certain area of land can be irrigated is an essential part of the project of the United States, and is not that an essential part authorized by law, and are they not doing it and paying for it out of the reclamation fund?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman well understands my views in regard to water being a mineral resource.

Mr. TAWNEY. Are they not now gauging the streams under the Reclamation Service and paying for the gauging out of the reclamation fund, and is not that an essential part of the reclamation project?

Mr. MONDELL. The Reclamation Service is engaged in gauging such streams as it is at work upon and so much as may be necessary in order to determine the water supply available for a particular project, but certainly the gentleman from Minnesota will not claim that the settlers upon Government irrigation projects in the arid regions should be compelled to pay for the general gauging of streams and determining the water supply throughout the whole Western country. The reclamation fund is a fund reimbursable; it must be repaid by the men who settle on the land, and these funds should not be used, and they are not used, and I assume that they will not be used, for the general purpose of stream gauging even in the arid regions. In that region much of the work is carried on by private enterprise, by the farmers themselves, and the Government in this stream-gauging work is only giving the assistance in development of these mineral resources that it ought to give in good conscience for the development of all the mineral resources of a newly developed and developing country.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the amedment offered by the gentleman from California. I desire to strike out the word "two," in the second line of his amendment, and insert the word "one," so that it will read "$100,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by striking out the word "two" and inserting the word "one," so that it will read "$100,000."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I shall not undertake to discuss the special importance of stream gauging at this time, but I shall address myself to the proper question of what sum, assuming that Congress is going to legislate for such purpose, should be appropriated. I consider that it is unfortunate that an appropriation will be carried in the language of the amendment, because it is always unfortunate when we give an administrative branch of the Government money to be expended under general terms, whatever may be the private understanding as to how it is to be expended. I regret that if Congress is to vote such a sum, it could not be voted in direct terms for the purpose.

The $200,000 asked as an estimate was asked on the supposition that the gauging of streams would not only be as extensive as they have been in the past, but would be further extended to the gauging of underground water in the Hawaiian Islands. Yet there has not been a speech made here to-day in advocacy of the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. NEEDHAM] that had any reference whatsoever to that fact, and to a large part of the membership of the House it was not a known fact. I do not believe that we propose at this time, without something more of reasons therefor than was given us, to undertake that project of gauging the underground waters of the Hawaiian Islands. Now, it may be interesting to the House, both as showing the funds needed and also showing the tremendous increase in appropriations that are going on, to read what has been expended for this purpose heretofore.

For the fiscal year 1895 there was expended $12,000. For the fiscal year 1896, $20,000. For the fiscal years 1897 to 1900, inclusive, three years, $50,000; for the fiscal years 1901–2, inclusive, $100,000. For the fiscal years 1903–1906, inclusive, three years, $200,000, and for the fiscal year 1907, $150,000. For the fiscal year 1908, $100,000. The committee will notice the very rapid increase, an increase in the course of some thirteen years from $12,000 to a maximum of $150,000 for the fiscal year 1907, and for the past year of $100,000. As an illustration of how we can expend money without necessity therefor, it is to be borne in mind that while in 1907 this Department had $150,000 for this purpose, for the present year it had only $100,000, and yet there was no complaint made by the Department that the fund was not sufficient. I submit to the committee in all candor that we ought not to permit the zeal of special advocates or of the men engaged in this work to carry us off our feet.

I have been a friend of the Geological Survey. I have fought for appropriations for it and I have helped to increase appropriations for it. I would do it again when I thought it was necessary, but I want to submit now that $200,000 for this purpose—and it is frankly admitted by the gentleman from California [Mr. NEEDHAM] that the form of his amendment is simply to get around the parliamentary status and that he expects this $200,000 to be used for this specific purpose—I submit to the committee now that $200,000 is altogether disproportionate to the sums we are expending for other purposes and that are equally as important as the gauging of streams.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to ask the gentleman if, as a member of the committee, he will not be willing, providing those offering this legislation are willing to accept $100,000, to let the amendment show that this $100,000 shall be used for the gauging of streams?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will say to the gentleman frankly that for my part I had infinitely rather legislate this money with an express statement as to the purpose than to beat the devil around the bush by a general statement, with an understanding that the Survey is going to use the money for this special purpose. And I would be more than willing, but the thing I want to impress upon the committee is that whether we appropriate in general form or in specific form, we ought not to be carried off our feet as to the amount of the appropriation. Two hundred thousand dollars is altogether disproportionate to the sums we are giving that Department to expend for other purposes, just as important and just as widespread in their influence. It can not be defended, and the fact that the committee left out the appropriation ought not to make those advocates of it ask for a sum altogether beyond the bounds of reason. I trust that the committee if it determines to appropriate any sum will appropriate such sum as bears a proper proportion to the entire work of the Geological Survey.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa rose.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. CAPRON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, bill of the following title:

H. R. 17516. An act to increase the membership of the Philippine Commission by one member, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 6616. An act to authorize the extension, enlargement, and alteration of the public building in the city of New Haven, Conn.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. SHERLEY. I will yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I was going to propose a substitute.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will read it in my time, it may be that I will accept it in lieu of my amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, believing that if this money is to be appropriated for gauging streams it ought to be fairly appropriated for this purpose, and believing that we ought not to encourage the Departments to construe language so as to permit them to use money for one purpose that is appropriated by law for another purpose, I desire to propose that by unanimous consent the committee substitute for both the pending amendment and the amendment thereto of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] the exact language of last year's bill, viz:

For gauging streams and determining the water supply of the United States, and for the investigation of underground currents and artesian wells, and the preparation of reports upon the best methods of utilizing the water resources, $100,000.

I ask unanimous consent that that may be substituted for both the pending amendment and the amendment to that amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SHERLEY. For my part, I will accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment as a substitute, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I do not offer the substitute in the ordinary sense, but I ask unanimous consent that it be substituted for the pending amendment and the amendment thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the substitute which he has read be substituted for the amendment and the amendment thereto. Is there objection?

Mr. NEEDHAM. Mr. Chairman, while I personally believe that the amount in this amendment should be larger, in the interest of good legislation, if no point of order is made against it, I shall not object.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

For gauging the streams and determining the water supply of the United States and for the investigation of underground currents and artesian wells and the preparation of reports upon the best methods of utilizing the water resources, $100,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken, and the substitute was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the continuation of the investigation of the structural materials belonging to and for the use of the United States, such as stone, clays, cement, and so forth, under the supervision of the Director of the United States Geological Survey, to be immediately available, $50,000: Provided, That no part of this or of the following sum shall be paid as compensation or emolument to any person not regularly and continuously employed by, or whose entire time is not devoted to the service of, the United States, nor shall any part thereof be paid to any person who is in the employ of any State, county, municipality, or institution not under the control and direction of the United States Government.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the word "fifty," in line 21, page 78, and inserting in lieu thereof "one hundred."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Page 78, line 21, strike out "fifty" and insert "one hundred," so as to read "$100,000."

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I have proposed will place the bill in the same condition, so far as this item is concerned, in the amount at least, as last year's appropriation and the one preceding last year. This particular appropriation is very important in the United States, for three purposes. The United States Government is engaged in building a canal across the Isthmus of Panama; it is engaged in building public buildings all over the United States and spending therefor, on an average, about $20,000,000 every year. It is engaged in the Reclamation Service, a service the importance of which can not be overestimated and the importance of which is admitted by everybody. Anything that would have a tendency to assist the United States Government in the better performance of these various duties ought to have the earnest consideration and support of the Congress. I do not know that it is necessary to go over the ground again, because two years ago and last year we went over it, and we placed $100,000 in the bill at each time. It has been used to a great advantage and has been a great saving on the part of the Government in its own business of building buildings and in the construction of the canal and irrigation work. But beyond that, in my judgment, the greater benefit comes from the fact that all these experiments that are made by the Government in this work tend, when published and the results spread broadcast, to the benefit of all the people of the United States. The tests of cement and cement material and the proper method of mixing them to bring the best results have resulted, in the estimate of the Supervising Architect, in more than $2,000,000 of benefit to the United States within the last year. This benefit goes out and takes in everybody who is engaged in that business, every man who is engaged in the cement business, in the construction of material into which that enters as one of the elements, and every man who is engaged in the building of buildings of any kind. The people are all interested in having the greatest publicity given to anything that will have a tendency to cheapen and improve the building material of the United States. Especially is that true when the price of lumber has gone to and is maintained at the high place that it now is. There is not an item in the bill that appeals more directly to all the people of the United States than this particular item. Every man who builds a building, whether a cottage or a mansion, has a direct interest. I believe we ought by all means to increase the amount to $100,000.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. Would it not be a proper amendment, instead of limiting this appropriation to the investigation of structural material belonging to and for the use of the United States, to let it apply to the investigation of structural materials within the United States?

Mr. NORRIS. Well, I will say in answer to the gentleman——

Mr. HARDY. Just let me explain——

Mr. NORRIS. That this particular wording was the wording that was put into the bill two years ago on an amendment offered by myself after a point of order had been sustained to a different wording, and it was retained in this form in the bill, and it is necessary to so remain in order to avoid that point of order.

Mr. HARDY. It seems to me, if the gentleman will allow me, that the whole people of the United States will be chargeable with the expense of this investigation, and much of the land of the United States on which the investigation will be equally pertinent does not belong to the United States.

Mr. NORRIS. I agree with the gentleman fully.

Mr. HARDY. I think the amendment ought to go further, and let it apply to any and all.

Mr. NORRIS. It will be subject to a point of order then.

Mr. HARDY. Maybe it will be agreed to, if it be equitable, just as the last amendment was.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] stated that this money had been properly expended during the past year. Does the gentleman know how it was expended?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] may have five minutes more.

Mr. NORRIS. There are various other gentlemen who want to discuss this question.

Mr. SHERLEY. I want to ask the gentleman a few questions.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, the gentleman contends that this money has been properly expended?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHERLEY. There is a good deal of proof as to how it was expended, and I want to know if the gentleman is familiar with how this money has been expended and who is receiving a good part of it?

Mr. NORRIS. I take it that the Committee on Appropriations is not satisfied with the way the money was expended.

Mr. SHERLEY. Of course, it is not a matter of special importance about the committee's view point, but it is important that the House should know.

Mr. NORRIS. I take it that the gentleman himself is expressing the views of the Committee on Appropriations, of which he happens to be a member.

Mr. SHERLEY. I believe it is a proper inquiry, inasmuch as the gentleman is taking exception to the committee's view and wants to double the amount, to find out if the gentleman is advised as to how the money has been expended. Does the gentleman know that a good deal of it has been expended in paying State officials and college professors in State institutions?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes, sir. I presume that will come up just as soon as this is disposed of, because I propose to offer an amendment to strike out the proviso which the committee has added here and which I presume was put in for the purpose of avoiding the expenditure that the gentleman suggests.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the gentleman consider it is proper to expend the money that way?

Mr. NORRIS. I do; yes, sir.

Mr. SHERLEY. I simply wanted to find the view point of the proponent of the amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. I think it is proper to expend the money in the way that I understand it has been expended, and that means that this advisory board, consisting, some of them, of men who are not employees of the Government, but who are experts in this line.

Mr. SLAYDEN. You mean not regularly employed?

Mr. NORRIS. Not regular employees. I do not see anything wrong with employing those men occasionally when needed for the purpose of making tests or for the purpose of making scientific investigations along the line proposed by this appropriation.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the gentleman know what work has been done at the Watertown Arsenal in the way of testing?

Mr. NORRIS. Somewhat. As a matter of fact, the work done there does not conflict with the work done under this particular appropriation.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the gentleman know what the cost at the Watertown Arsenal is as compared with the work done by the Geological Survey?

Mr. NORRIS. I have a list here of the tests that have been made, and if I had sufficient time——

Mr. SHERLEY. That is not the question I asked——

Mr. NORRIS (continuing). I can give the gentleman the price of each item and the cost of each test, but, as a matter of fact, since the gentleman refers to the arsenal at Watertown, there never has been any real conflict between these two particular institutions in experimentation. The Watertown Arsenal is for a different purpose. It is a different kind of work entirely, but one that is important, one that I would not do away with, but it has nothing to do with building material—cement material—and could be of no assistance in the great operations that the Government has to undertake.

Mr. SHERLEY. I undertake to say to the gentleman that the gentleman is mistaken in regard to the amount of work that has been done and is being done at Watertown.

Mr. NORRIS. I admit "the gentleman" can possibly be mistaken; but I simply turn that round and say that, in my judgment, the gentleman from Kentucky is mistaken, although he may have had much better opportunity for investigation than I have.

Mr. SHERLEY. I will demonstrate the fact in a few minutes as to whether the gentleman is accurate as to what he says.

Mr. NORRIS. And I will do some demonstrating, too.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I think I can answer the gentleman. At Watertown the machines are principally used in the testing of metal and brass.

Mr. SHERLEY. Why, does not the gentleman know that they are testing cement? I know, if the gentleman does not, because I saw a few months ago such work that was done there.

Mr. NORRIS. They test it in but a few instances. They tested a set of pillars.

Mr. SHERLEY. But I have seen the work that was done there.

Mr. NORRIS. They are not doing any work of that kind at Watertown now.

Mr. SHERLEY. No; because an advisory board, without any authority of law, gave it to the Geological Survey, where it is costing for the work a great deal more than at the Watertown Arsenal.

Mr. NORRIS. Exactly. The gentleman complains in one breath that this work should be done at Watertown and then he complains in the next because some of it is done there.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman is not accurate at all. The gentleman has complained——

Mr. NORRIS. That is the effect of what he said.

Mr. SHERLEY. The reason for having these tests made elsewhere was the distinct lobbying of the Geological Survey for work that could be more economically done at another place in the country equipped for doing the work.

Mr. NORRIS. I concede the gentleman is earnest and honest in making the statement, but still I do not believe that he is right when he makes the statement.

Mr. SHERLEY. I make it from what I saw at Watertown myself.

Mr. NORRIS. They are to do entirely different kinds of work. The Watertown Arsenal makes experiments and tests for the Army.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the gentleman contend that the only tests made there are for the Army itself?

Mr. NORRIS. Well, practically.

Mr. SHERLEY. If he does, he is mistaken.

Mr. NORRIS. Steel and other things of that kind.

Mr. SHERLEY. And cement.

Mr. NORRIS. They may have tested a few pillars in the past, but they are not prepared to do it to any extent.

Mr. SHERLEY. Why, the gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. NORRIS. They have not the proper machinery nor the men to do that kind of business.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. NORRIS. On the other hand, we are equipped for that at St. Louis, where they are making experiments under the last appropriation; and, as a matter of fact, have been in the past making experiments, not only there but elsewhere, that have been of the greatest assistance to the entire country and that can not be performed by the machinery and outfit at Watertown.

Mr. SHERLEY. But they could, by a consolidation of all these bureaus into a proper one, do the work cheaper and more of it.

Mr. NORRIS. Why, you have a Bureau of Standards existing here now for the making of these tests in regard to machines for weighing and things of that kind. But it is entirely different from the men who go out in the country and test the materials of which cements and building materials are made.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, I just want to say one word in reference to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska, and I do sincerely hope that the amendment will be adopted by the committee and the amount appropriated for this purpose be increased. Aside from the work that has been done by the Government at Watertown and elsewhere in the testing of cement, I know that in my own district under this appropriation a great deal of very valuable work has been done in testing a clay that is found in that part of the country——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. For whom was the test done?

Mr. DOUGLAS (continuing). And the tests have been exceedingly valuable, not only to the Government in the practical use of the material, but also in enlightening the people of the country generally with reference to the value of the clay and its qualities.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman please explain who made the tests?

Mr. DOUGLAS. They were made, under the direction of the Geological Survey, by professors in the Ohio State University. While this is true the work was done under this appropriation by men of experience under the direction of the Geological Survey, and the results of their work were given to the country generally, and I do not see why the fact that this work was done under the Geological Survey by men who were not in the employ of the United States militates against the necessity for the appropriation or the advisability of it or the value of the work that was done.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does not the gentleman think the men who own these clay beds would probably pay for these tests themselves, in order to advertise their value?

Mr. DOUGLAS. That is a general proposition which might be urged with reference to a large number of appropriations made by Congress.

Mr. TAWNEY rose.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I see the chairman of the committee desires to speak on this subject, and I gladly yield to him. I want the gentleman in charge of the bill to explain to the country how this money is expended; if private individuals are employed, and who first employs them, and why, they are employed, and why they examine the clays, and how soon after that the United States Government goes there and buys the product, if that is done at all.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask the attention of the committee for a few moments, because I consider this a very important general proposition, and I want to state frankly to the committee why the appropriation was reduced from $100,000 to $50,000.

In the first place, it was reduced because upon investigation we found that a large part of the money is being employed in making tests in private laboratories, making tests in various scientific schools, in State universities, and other educational institutions; that the money is being expended to pay professors who are in the employ of those institutions; that the tests are being made—not of materials belonging to and for the benefit of the United States as the law provides, and that, in the judgment of the committee, that fact alone justifies a reduction of the appropriation.

When the appropriation was made for the testing of structural materials belonging to and for the use of the United States, it was not contemplated by Congress that these tests should be made anywhere else except in the laboratory of the Geological Survey itself. It was not intended, and the law did not authorize the testing of any material not belonging to the United States, or not for the use of the United States. That is one reason why the committee felt that $50,000 would be ample to conduct the investigations during the next fiscal year, as the law contemplates these investigations shall be conducted.

Let me call your attention to the fact that the appropriation for this service in 1906 was only $7,500. Prior to 1906 we were testing building materials of all kinds. Prior to that time the Geological Survey had not entered upon this project or enterprise; but because they were connected with the fuel tests that had previously been authorized in St. Louis, and had machines loaned to them with which they were making tests during the exposition, they came back and secured from Congress an appropriation of $7,500, and the Geological Survey itself said, "If you will give us this $7,500, you may write in the law that the tests shall be completed July 1, 1906."

That was in 1905. This appropriation of $7,500 was made for the fiscal year 1906, and they willingly consented that if Congress would give them $7,500 to complete the work they would agree that the work should be completed at the end of that fiscal year 1906.

For the fiscal year 1907, instead of their completing the work, they came back to Congress and told Congress that they wanted $100,000 to continue the work, and after a very severe struggle the $100,000 was finally granted. Then again $100,000 was appropriated for the current fiscal year. Now, these two appropriations were for the purpose of providing the equipment for the testing of structural material. Assuming that they have supplied themselves with the necessary equipment, what is the necessity for continuing the appropriation of $100,000 for this purpose, when the Watertown Arsenal ever since 1888 has been making tests of building materials of all kinds in forty-four of the forty-six States of the Union, conducting these tests upon an appropriation of only $15,000 annually? What is the necessity for continuing this appropriation of $100,000, unless it is for the purpose of continuing on the pay roll of the Government the professors and other employees whom they have had during the current fiscal year and during the last fiscal year, paid out of these two appropriations for structural material and coal tests?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. TAWNEY. I ask that I may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAWNEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, there is another reason, and before I discuss that I want, in verification of the statement I have made, to read from a letter addressed to me by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. ADAIR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAWNEY. Certainly.

Mr. ADAIR. Out in my country we have a great many companies that do a stone-crushing business, and the first thing that is done is to send it to Columbus to have it examined and the expense is paid by the Government. These are private enterprises. The same thing is true for clay products for the manufacture of tile, and so forth. Now, is all this being done at the expense of the Government and out of this appropriation for private enterprises?

Mr. TAWNEY. Absolutely, and under language that prohibits it from being done. I addressed a letter to the Secretary of the Interior on the subject of the expenditure of these two appropriations—this one and the one which will follow—and I have here his letter giving complete detailed statements of the people that are employed and paid out of these two appropriations. They number a great many men. The letter is dated March 30, 1908. I will read only extracts that appear in the hearings that bear directly upon this point. I read from page 406 of the hearings:

The following were employed during the larger portion of their time on regular duties connected with college instruction, and were appointed in a consulting capacity to the Geological Survey and paid only for time devoted to such consultation, and the proportion of working time for which they were actually so employed in the service of the United States has been about one-third in each case, except as otherwise indicated.

Then follows:

Prof. R. H. Fernald, consulting engineer, gas-producer tests, is professor of mechanical engineering, Case School of Applied Science, Cleveland, Ohio, at about $3,000 per annum. His Survey compensation is $10 per day when actually employed.

He is allowed a stenographer at $2.50 per day when actually employed.

Prof. N. W. Lord, chief chemist, is professor of chemistry in the Ohio State University, Columbus, Ohio, at about $1,800 per annum. His Survey compensation at $10 per day when actually employed.

He is also allowed a stenographer at $2.50 per day when actually employed.

Prof. L. P. Breckenridge, consulting engineer, steam tests, is professor of mechanical engineering, University of Illinois, Urbana, Ill., at about $3,000 per annum. His Survey compensation is $10 per day when actually employed.

Edward E. Somermeier, assistant to chief chemist, is professor of chemistry in the Ohio State University, Columbus, Ohio, at about $1,200 per annum. His Survey compensation is $8 per day when actually employed, his working time in the service of the United States being about one-half.

Prof. Charles A. Davis, consulting expert, peat investigations, is professor of geology of the University of Michigan, at about $1,500 per annum. His Survey compensation is $7 per day when actually employed.

Then there are fifteen engineers, chemists, geologists, and collaborators named in this letter, who receive compensation from $5 to $10 per day when called in consultation.

Tests and laboratory analyses were conducted in the cities of Berkeley, Cal.; Pittsburg, Pa.; St. Louis, Mo.; Columbus, Ohio; Washington, D. C.; Denver, Colo., and Norfolk, Va., up to January 1, 1908, and such tests are now being conducted in the same cities, and in no case in buildings owned or rented by the United States, excepting in the offices of the Geological Survey in Washington, D. C.; one small building rented from February 1, 1906, to February 1, 1907, in St. Louis, at a total rental of $387, and a temporary washery and coking plant erected by the Survey at Denver, the land rental therefor being $5 per annum.

Then I asked the Secretary:

Under what authority are you conducting these tests in laboratories or other institutions wholly within the jurisdiction of the States?

Mr. GARFIELD. We are conducting those tests under the authority of employment of those individuals whose names you have read for the making of certain classes of tests. They have their own laboratories in the institutions named in the list you have read, and we pay them at the compensation given, $10 a day, or whatever the compensation is, and out of that they are to provide their own laboratories for doing the work, and the college authorities have consented to the use of their laboratories and their physical apparatus for that purpose.

So that this money is being expended in the laboratories in these institutions, and the authority claimed for it is they have employed certain individuals who are members or who belong to the educational institutions to do the work for the Government of the United States. Then I asked him this question:

The CHAIRMAN. What is the necessity of employing all of the laboratories and so many of the State employees, because these professors are employed by the States or by private institutions for the purpose of conducting tests in regard to structural materials "belonging to and for the use of the United States," and also analyzing and testing materials belonging to the United States? What is the necessity of going outside and covering the entire United States or using the laboratories in the various institutions of the various States for the purpose of making these tests, which are wholly of material "belonging to and for the use of the United States?"

Mr. GARFIELD. As to the first question, we have not those laboratories ourselves, and it would mean that we would have to supply the persons employed as scientific men with the necessary laboratories and physical apparatus.

Now, gentlemen, when they secured the first appropriation of $100,000 it was on the express statement of the representatives of the Geological Survey that that money was not necessary for making the tests, but all of it would be necessary for making tests and supplying the United States laboratory with its equipment for making those tests. And when the second appropriation of $100,000 was made it was with the understanding that that was to increase the equipment; that the work of the technical bureau of the Geological Survey was necessary in order to meet the necessities for the service and increase the equipment. As a matter of fact, they have not spent it for that purpose, but spent much of it in the employment of people outside of the Government service, who could not receive their compensation under the statutes of the United States if the law or accounting officers of the Treasury Department of the Government properly performed their duty.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman's time be extended ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Minnesota be extended ten minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CAULFIELD. Does the gentleman favor permanently employing these specialists or experts, or would he deprive the Department of the right to call in their services as needed?

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman I would say that this question is a much broader question than most of us think it is. We must here and now draw a line between commercial tests and original scientific research tests. I have a list here of all of the laboratories of the United States, and gentlemen who desire to inform themselves as to the number of testing laboratories, if they will turn to the hearings, will find the names and locations of all of them. They are engaged in the work of making commercial tests. That work is entirely outside of and independent of governmental work. The Government of the United States, in the matter of making scientific tests, should limit the field of its activities to original scientific research work and let the commercial world take care of the commercial tests.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman permit a question right there?

Mr. TAWNEY. In just a moment. All the tests referred to by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DOUGLAS] are commercial tests, and the test of the stone from the quarries in the State of the gentleman who interrupted me [Mr. ADAIR] are all commercial tests. This scientific research work, both commercial and original scientific work, has been going on here in our Government in a sort of haphazard way, until to-day every Department of the Government has a testing laboratory; every Department of the Government has a complete equipment; every Department of the Government is maintaining a force of men for the purpose of carrying on the same commercial and original scientific research work.

It is for that reason, Mr. Chairman, that the committee carries a provision in this bill calling upon the Academy of Sciences to investigate this whole subject of governmental scientific work and report to Congress its conclusion on the consolidation or some plan of consolidating this work whereby the scientific research work of the Government will be carried on in one Department, in one bureau, and in one only, and when the final result is obtained the people of the United States and the world will know where they can obtain the final result of these original scientific investigations. In that way we will also stop the duplication of scientific work that is now going on in all the Departments of the Government. It is for that reason that the committee has recommended this provision, and I want to say that under the law we are entitled to call upon the Academy of Sciences for just that sort of report. That institution was incorporated in 1872 by an act of Congress—and the character of that institution and its standing to-day in the scientific world is equal to that of any like organization in the world—and we reserved when we passed that act the right to do this very thing. I submit, in view of all the scientific work going on in all the different bureaus of the Government, that we can far better do this, and that we owe it to ourselves and to the people that some proper measure should be taken for a consolidation of this scientific work, both in the interests of higher and better results and also in the interest of economy. When that organization is created, I would say to the gentleman from Missouri, I would be in favor of the Government of the United States then employing the best scientific men that money can employ and equipping that bureau with the very best equipment for scientific work that can be obtained. That, in my judgment, is the practical, sensible way for us to do, and if that provision is adopted by the House, then there will be no necessity for a further extension of this work in private laboratories and in laboratories throughout the United States. The Government of the United States should do this work under its own supervision and not under the supervision of any private institution, I care not what reputation that institution may have. I now yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask my distinguished friend this question: If it is profitable for commerce to invest these large sums of money for these tests, whether it would not be profitable for the Government, as the owner and builder of public buildings to the amount of more than a billion of dollars, to invest in tests of this kind?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman that I know his interest in public buildings, and that Government construction long before the Geological Survey testing plant was authorized was the most substantial of any building work in this country. The material for all the building was tested—and is to a great extent tested to-day—in the laboratory of the Supervising Architect. That argument is like the argument of the gentleman from Nebraska, who claimed that the Geological Survey is making tests for the Reclamation Service for the Isthmian Canal. There has been no test made for Isthmian Canal construction. If they have an agreement among the various Departments here whereby one bureau or one testing plant is to do this work and another testing plant that work, that may be; but I maintain, and I care not how careful the heads of the Departments may be to avoid duplication, that as long as we maintain the organization, as long as we maintain the equipment in all the Departments for scientific research work, so long will duplication continue, and you can not avoid it.

Now, let me read what Secretary Garfield said, and his suggestion is along the line of the position of the committee:

> I think that the scientific work of our Government ought to be brought together in some fashion, and I think it can be done if the suggestion which has been made, that the Executive be given authority to rearrange and redistribute this work, is followed. It was my idea when the Department of Commerce and Labor was organized that the act was broad enough to permit the President to do that, but we found that he could not remove the scientific work from the Treasury Department and that the hands of the Executive were tied; that he could not rearrange and redistribute that work. It should be done. If you gentlemen here in Congress can get the scientific work reorganized you will do a great work for economy and efficiency.

Now, in view of the Department itself taking that stand and making that recommendation, we felt that carrying out that suggestion was not only wise, but it was our duty to do it. There is no organization in this country, from the standpoint of the Government and from the standpoint of science, so capable of considering this question and reporting on the kind of organization that we should have for this original scientific research work as the Academy of Sciences. As I said before, it is a scientific organization that stands the peer of any scientific organization in the world. There are but forty active members, as I am informed, belonging to the organization, or its active membership is limited to that number. To become a member of that organization is the height of the ambition of every scientific man in this country. Now, following along that line, if we adopt that policy, then there is certainly no necessity of continuing further these large appropriations for scientific work in all the different branches of the Government.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, of which I am a member, is naturally very much interested in this question. Before stating the benefits accruing through this service to our Government in constructing public buildings, I will refer briefly to the arguments presented by the gentleman from Minnesota. His claims or contentions are that private tests have been made at public expense. I can answer that with one authoritative statement, namely, that 95 per cent of the money appropriated has been expended at the Government testing station at St. Louis, Mo., and not one single test has been made by them except upon the request of the Supervising Architect, the Reclamation Service, and other branches of the Government. That disposes of that.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. No; I am going to keep on for a little while, and then, when I have time, I will yield to the gentleman. The gentleman has had twenty minutes and I have had barely one. Furthermore, there is absolutely no objection, Mr. Chairman, on the part of those who understand this subject to a consolidation of this service. If the Committee on Appropriations had come in here with a bill to consolidate all these different testing plants to be superintended by the Academy of Science or by any officials of the Government, no objection would have been raised by us; but as long as that is not done, and as long as we have no such consolidation, I claim that it is to the highest interest of the United States Government to continue the tests which we have started. In the judgment of the Supervising Architect, who is a very conscientious and painstaking official, we are saving to-day as a result of these tests more than $2,000,000 a year upon the score of buildings which the Government erects annually, namely, 10 per cent on approximately $20,000,000 which the Government expends on an average for new buildings per annum.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is it going to bring the cost of Government buildings down to that of ordinary buildings, because Government buildings now cost more than ordinary buildings erected?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The Government buildings cost more because they are not built for five, ten, twenty, or even fifty years, but they are erected to last for a hundred years and more.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will look at the items they bring in for repairs to Government buildings, he might change his views upon that subject.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. There may be repairs, Mr. Chairman, because in many cases alterations come under the head of repairs, and Members of Congress are very skillful in designating an item as repairs when in reality it is an alteration. As to the durability of Government buildings, we only need refer to the San Francisco earthquake and the terrible conflagration following it, when the Government buildings almost alone resisted the power of the flames as well as the earthquake. Mr. Chairman, only in this morning's paper we read of two great conflagrations due to the fact that combustible material had been used in the construction of buildings. Is it not time for us to find material nearly as cheap as that which is now being used as a result of the governmental tests which will obviate and prevent such calamities in the future? The fact is that the fire losses in the United States to-day amount to more than twenty times more than in any other country.

Why? Either because we build more carelessly or we use material which is more combustible than the material used in other countries. I have the figures here, but I have not time to present them. If permitted, I will insert them in my argument. But that factor alone, Mr. Chairman, should induce this House to continue these tests, because they are for the purpose of developing material—cement and reconcentrated cement—which will resist the power of fire and consequently reduce to a minimum not only these tremendous financial losses, but also these terrible losses of life.

Mr. CAMPBELL. May I ask if after a test has once been made of a cement it is necessary to make another test of that same cement?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Well, they are improving the cement and they are improving the way to make it. They are using new materials every day for the purpose of making cement.

Mr. DALZELL. Location has a good deal to do with it. Cement may be permanent in one place and not in another.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. We only started a few years ago. We are on the threshold of this great question; and if Government money is to be expended for any purpose whatsoever, it seems to me this is one of the most meritorious purposes that could be imagined.

Now, as to the machines used in the Watertown Arsenal. As I have said in reply to a statement made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], at least a majority of these machines are not powerful enough to make the tests necessary for construction. They are built especially to be applied to brass and other metals, but not to cement and reconstructed cement. Then a question has been raised about the number of machines used in private laboratories. Yes; they are used, Mr. Chairman, by professors for the purpose of instructing students. It is true some valuable tests have been made, but what kind? The material was furnished and the bricks were furnished by interested manufacturers, and naturally they sent their very best samples and not the kind which is generally used for building purposes. So that disposes of these private machines which are now in use. As to the Government tests carried on in St. Louis, the question has been asked what the money has been expended for. It has been spent for these purposes:

Tests of sand and gravel for use in concrete and reenforced concrete for the Isthmian Canal, the Reclamation Service, the Supervising Architect, and the assembling of this concrete and reenforced concrete into forms, and tests thereof, will cost about $30,000. Tests of clay and clay products, chiefly bricks and tiling, to determine their strength for use in public structures by above bureaus, are estimated to cost $10,000. Tests of building stone for use of the above, to determine the strength and durability of same, will cost $10,000. Tests of fire-resisting material to determine how structural material assembled into public buildings can be made more fireproof and more fire resisting, will cost $10,000. The inspection and testing of cement for the Isthmian Canal may cost $53,000. This was not previously estimated and provided in the appropriation.

Hence it will be noticed that the minimum estimates are in excess of the current appropriation. If the committee had taken into consideration all those useful purposes to which these tests are applied, they should have increased the appropriation over and above $100,000 instead of cutting it down to $50,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Now, as to these gentlemen, the so-called "national testing board," I want to read just one paragraph of a letter from the Supervising Architect, Mr. James Knox Taylor. He says:

> In this connection I want to take occasion to tell you of what immense benefit the work of the national testing board has been to our office. Through their efforts we are able in the majority of instances to secure materials such as clay products, gravel for concretes, stone for construction in the various localities, and so forth, that constitute a large saving in the direct cost of buildings to the Government, and I should feel extremely sorry if, through any failure of appropriation or peculiar wording of the act, this work should fail to be continued. It seems to me that when the Government can obtain at a very small cost and personal expenses, or a minimum salary at the most, the services of prominent engineers and scientists throughout the country, even though they may not be Government employees, it would be an immense loss to the Government not to secure such services, especially as if they were forced to pay for such advice the fees charged would probably be very large.

This means, Mr. Chairman, if we did not have this official testing plant, if we would not vote to maintain it and increase its usefulness by proper appropriations, we would expend for private services perhaps three, four, or five times the amount which this plant costs us to-day.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I referred in my introductory remarks to the losses by fire. I have the figures here now, and I might as well state them for the information of the House. In the United States in the last ten years, from 1897 to 1906, inclusive, the losses by fire were $2.70 per capita. The per capita fire loss in six of the leading European countries in the same time was only 33 cents per capita. Now, do not these figures alone satisfy the average Member of this House that we should look into the question of building materials, so that private enterprise might profit from the investigations carried on at the expense of the Government?

As I stated before, Uncle Sam himself is very largely interested, because we own more than $1,000,000,000 worth of public structures. We do not insure our public buildings. Why? Because we build usually with fireproof material. If we would insure and not build with fireproof material, the expenses would be ten times as large as the little appropriation asked for here for the continuation of these tests. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. It is a common parliamentary trick to put up a straw man and then destroy him.

With the major portion of the remarks of the gentleman from Missouri I not only take no exception, but heartily concur. There is no man at all informed who will question for one moment the value of accurate scientific information as to the strength of structural material. Certainly no American, living in a country that is famous for its advance in practical science, will ever question that proposition. But the condition that confronts the committee is not the condition suggested by gentleman, but a very practical one. It is simply how we propose to have work done and whether the Government shall confine its work to that sort of original research that naturally belongs to Government, and to governmental activities as beyond the range of private capacity, or whether it shall go into that broad, extensive field of making for the individual all of the ordinary tests that can be made by him, and in the absence of Government work will be made by him. Whether by a bureau properly organized and economically administered, or whether we shall continue to yield to the demands of the Geological Survey, many of which are made by a species of lobbying by no means commendable.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman yield to me for one question?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Can the gentleman state any instance where tests have been made at Government expense for private individuals?

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, I cite as an illustration, that many letters were sent to me by Louisville men, and I knew that they did not come by accident, and subsequently found they did not, that stated that $100,000 had been saved in regard to the use of certain sands in making cement in the vicinity of Louisville. Now, that material was examined, and I am not saying that in that instance it was not properly examined, but it was not material belonging to the Government, and not examined because it was going to be owned by the Government.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. They are used by the Government, are they not?

Mr. SHERLEY. The question is whether these tests were made for the benefit of the Government or a private individual. They were not for the benefit of the Government, because the Government did not own the material and did not expect to own any of it soon. The gentleman from Missouri may smile, but the proof shows, and it is not denied—the written proof—that there were any number of cases at commercial centers where they made such tests, and they justify it on the theory that inasmuch as the Government will have activities there, or may have to buy materials there, in that sense it is governmental. But in the sense of the Government owning the material or expecting to own the material tested, it was not governmental.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. One more suggestion. Would the gentleman restrict the usefulness of such a Government plant because of the fact that the material is not to be confined to Government materials?

Mr. SHERLEY. No. The gentleman is putting up another straw man, and I have not time to discuss him. The point is this, the real point: Whether the investigation shall be an investigation that looks to determining certain fundamental facts, for the guidance not only of the Government, but for all the people of America, or whether the test shall go beyond that into the examination of every possible piece of material that may be brought. I wanted to show the difference between one kind of work and the other. The gentleman from Nebraska took exception to a statement of fact made by me as to the work done at Watertown. I repeat that Watertown, until an order issued by a board without authority, commissioned without authority of law, was continuing the examination not only of iron and steel, but cement, hemp, rope, and all manner of material subject to such tests; and during the entire history of that Bureau, extending over more than twenty-odd years, it has had a little over $300,000, and its annual appropriation for recent years has been $15,000.

Mr. CAULFIELD. Has its operation been quite as extensive as those conducted by the Survey?

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, no; and properly not as extensive, because its operations were limited to proper governmental functions. Now, those functions are the doing of those things for the people that the people can not do for themselves properly. Whenever you undertake to have the Government go out into the domain of private enterprise, then there is no limit. Now, the history of the work of the Geological Survey in this branch is recent. It is within my memory as a legislator, which is not long. I remember when they came here asking an appropriation in connection with the St. Louis Exposition. I spoke for it, stood for it, worked for it. I had no hostility then, and I have none now, to a proper expenditure for governmental work along these lines; but finding, as the committee has found, work being done, not by Government officials in Government laboratories, on Government material, or on other material for the purpose of determining fundamental, scientific facts, but finding that the Department was using the money to hire professors in various universities, finding that they were doing a lot of work in regard to ordinary testing that is being done and can be done in hundreds of places in America, the committee thought that, pending a reference of the matter to the National Academy of Sciences we could afford to reduce this appropriation, and then, upon their report, make a proper establishment of a proper bureau.

Now, I want to show the committee the number of institutions in America where they can make structural tests of iron, steel, and concrete.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Of what kind?

Mr. SHERLEY. They have machines with capacity running all the way up to 200,000 pounds. What is the size of the machine in St. Louis?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Would the gentleman be willing, representing the Government of the United States, to profit by private enterprise?

Mr. SHERLEY. Why, of course "the gentleman" would.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Or would he be in favor of having a testing plant of our own?

Mr. SHERLEY. Of course I would be in favor of taking advantage of any fact, developed by anybody, anywhere, on a scientific proposition. Does the gentleman think that the Government is to bind itself in swaddling clothes and to take advantage of no fact unless the fact is developed by it at its own expense? If individuals throughout the country are making tests, it is proof of the fact that it is not a governmental function, but a private individual function, and that they can continue it?

Mr. CAULFIELD. Would not the gentleman's remarks pertain largely to the work done by the Agricultural Department also? Is it not a fact that these tests made by the Agricultural Department are also made by the various States of the Union?

Mr. SHERLEY. No; it does not apply at all, and if the gentleman wants to get my position accurately, I will state it again. Of course there is a boundary line where men may be in doubt, but, generally speaking, the function of a government in regard to research is to do those things that relate to the fundamentals, and that by virtue of the cost are beyond the power of the individual to do, and not to do those things that simply relate to the ordinary work of commercial corporations and companies, and which they would naturally do without governmental aid.

Mr. CAULFIELD. What is the difference between testing soil for a farmer and testing material for a builder? What is the difference in principle?

Mr. SHERLEY. This is the difference, that the farmer is not and can not be in a position, without great expense, to do that testing.

Mr. CAULFIELD. Can the builder do it?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes. The people who employ large quantities of building material are able to test it and do test it. I have not stated, and I do not now state, that the Government ought not to test structural materials, but I say that these tests ought to be for the purpose of finding out the fundamentals, and not simply for the purpose of determining, for anybody who may come along, whether certain sand in a certain locality is good or bad sand, or whether certain stone is of a certain grade or not. That can be done by private enterprise. Now, in regard to the structural strength, if the gentleman will get the hearings, and on pages 519 to 529—in very fine print—he will find a list of the places where testing machines of compression and tensile strength are in use for the United States.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. We know all that.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman may know all that, but the gentleman gave the impression that the work had to be done by the Government or it would not be done at all.

Now, I want to read to the committee some of the testimony of the most efficient man in this connection that it has been my fortune to come in contact with, a man who knows more on this subject than almost any man in America, and that is Mr. Howard, who has had charge of the work at Watertown.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, I want to ask you something about the range of material tested in your laboratory and testing apparatus at Watertown. What is the range of material that has heretofore been tested there?

Mr. HOWARD. It has embraced all classes of constructive materials.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any other department of the Government, in your judgment, equipped as well as the Watertown Arsenal for making tests of all kinds of constructive material?

Mr. HOWARD. No, sir. There is no other department so well equipped. The testing laboratory was organized for general testing. It will be noted that the first appropriation mentioned iron and steel, but that was taken in a general and broad sense, and work from 1880 down to a very recent period has comprised all classes of constructive material.

He states that in the past year he had only been at work on iron and steel work, and he was asked how that came about:

Mr. HOWARD. The programme of tests for the present fiscal year has been confined to tests of iron and steel, cutting out the test of cements, mortars, concretes, brick, and provisionally pig irons.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you cut out wood also?

Mr. HOWARD. Wood was qualifiedly cut out.

The CHAIRMAN. By whose authority was this done?

Mr. HOWARD. Our instructions came from the Ordnance Department.

The CHAIRMAN. The Ordnance Department of the War Department?

Mr. HOWARD. Of the War Department.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know whether or not the instructions from the Ordnance Department sent to you were in accordance with an agreement among the heads of different Departments engaged in testing work, that your plant should be limited to iron and steel exclusively, and that, provisionally at least, the testing of pig iron and wood was taken from your jurisdiction?

Mr. HOWARD. I understood it was an agreement between the heads of Departments that the Watertown laboratory should be confined to tests of iron and steel, and that the tests of other materials of construction should be carried on by other parties of this agreement.

Mr. SHERLEY. How much work had you been doing in the way of testing materials other than iron and steel?

Mr. HOWARD. Of recent date, cements, concretes, plain and reenforced, had been given prominence, since the engineering advances were along the lines of reenforced concrete; the Watertown laboratory was endeavoring to meet the demands of current engineering practice by furnishing information along this prominent line of civil engineering; from 1900 or 1901 down to the present time, a period of six or seven years at least, a considerable part of the work had pertained to cements and concretes. There was also a series of tests on the strength of brick and brick piers, since so far as known there were no other places in the world in which the strength of brick piers was being determined.

Mr. SHERLEY. Were you able to do a sufficient quantity of work to meet the needs of the commercial world, speaking generally, for the information that you were furnishing?

Mr. HOWARD. I thought we were furnishing it quite rapidly, and that we should accomplish at a prompt date enough work of that kind to fully meet the demands of engineers.

Now, that is the testimony of a man more competent than any other man I know of to speak about this. The work that was done there was done at an insignificant cost compared to the cost of the work being done under the supervision of the Geological Survey, and it was the highest order of work, as evidenced by the fact that the reports of the work of the Watertown testing establishment are considered a standard and quoted by all the scientific writers of the country, and have been so quoted for twenty years past.

Now, when the committee, having in view all these facts, comes in and asks Congress to go slow, pending a full inquiry by the most eminent scientists of America into the establishment of a permanent bureau, we are met with the argument that we have no appreciation of the magnitude and importance of the work done. No man questions that, but the effect at this time of giving the Geological Survey this appropriation is to encourage it in a species of lobbying that is more than reprehensible, and I hope it will not be done.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I should like to ask the gentleman if he has found any cases where the Government of the United States has made examinations for private individuals, for private purposes, at the expense of the Government?

Mr. SHERLEY. I can answer the gentleman in this way, that there have been repeated tests made of material not then owned by nor in contemplation of purchase by the National Government, and it was so testified before the committee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The reason I asked the question is that I had this experience: I was at a certain watering place in the State of Kentucky, and there had been an excellent well discovered—a well of mineral water, owned by a poor man and an accommodating man. He wanted the Government to examine it. I wrote to Secretary Wilson and asked if he would examine it. I told the man that I did not believe he would. The Secretary wrote me back that he would not, that it was for a private purpose, and he had no authority to do so.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think that is true, although the gentleman will bear in mind that the original appropriation contemplated the furnishing by private parties of material for examination. I have no quarrel with the Department for having tested material that did not belong to it. My position is that there should be a distinction as to the character and purpose of the test. The Government should undertake tests of any material, not only for governmental purposes but for the purpose of determining fundamental scientific facts in connection with the subject; and if the Government should go beyond that line—which is more or less a narrow one—into the domain of examination of all manner of things, not to determine some fundamental scientific fact but to classify particular specimens, is, to my mind, a leaving of the Government function and going into that of private business. Now, the proposition is splendidly stated by Mr. Howard as to the purpose that should characterize an institution of this kind. He says:

> The tests have been chiefly of an investigative character, directed to the development of physical laws and constants, which may be made use of in the constructive arts and which tend to the safe and economic use of materials.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. Then again I read:

> Mr. HOWARD. I think the work has been such. That is to say, the Watertown tests have been exhaustive, but within limits, of course. The whole field has not been covered. The tests have been fundamental, many of them, and designed to serve as a basis upon which subsequent work must rest, at the same time taking up tests which are of immediate, practical use for engineering purposes.

He very clearly brings out the distinction, and it is a fundamental distinction. What we are asked to do is to permit the Geological Survey to go along in an extravagant fashion, without any fundamental limit fixed to its work and without any real consideration by men capable of determining what should be the extent of its activity. What the committee has asked is not to stop this work short off, but, pending a report by this national society of scientists, that we may reduce the appropriation and have the Bureau proceed cautiously, slowly—a request founded, in my judgment, on common sense and justice.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the amendment be now closed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman to withhold that for five minutes. I have some things that I wish to say.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that two gentlemen have applied to the Chair for time.

Mr. TAWNEY. I move that all debate close in ten minutes.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have five minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman that he make it fifteen minutes, and then the gentleman from Alabama may have five and the gentleman from North Carolina have five minutes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Very well. I move that all debate close in fifteen minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota that all debate close in fifteen minutes.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to unnecessarily prolong this discussion, but the suggestion has been made that there has been duplication of testings of structural material at the Watertown Arsenal. In addition to the information which was obtained in the hearings before the committee, I sought the Director of the Geological Survey and asked if he had any further information on that point. He submitted to me a letter from the Chief of Ordnance, General Crozier, dated April 28, addressed to the Director of the Geological Survey, which I will read. It is as follows:

> WAR DEPARTMENT,
> OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ORDNANCE,
> Washington, April 28, 1908.
> Hon. GEORGE OTIS SMITH,
> Director United States Geological Survey, Washington, D. C.
> DEAR SIR: In response to your inquiry I am glad to say that I have had no difficulty at the Watertown Arsenal in proceeding in accordance with the terms of the agreement which was reached in consultation with the national advisory board as to the division of testing work between the technological branch of the Survey and the testing laboratory at the Watertown Arsenal. Since the agreement no new work of testing structural masonry, or constituents thereof, has been taken up at the Watertown Arsenal, and I have had no information as to the tests of metals, especially those relating to mechanical engineering, which were agreed upon as being in the province of the Watertown Arsenal, having been taken up by the Geological Survey. The Watertown Arsenal has never concerned itself with the tests of fuels, so there is no question of covering the same ground with respect to them.
> Very respectfully,
> WILLIAM CROZIER,
> Brigadier-General, Chief of Ordnance, United States Army.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. SMALL. Just a question.

Mr. TAWNEY. I want to know if the gentleman justifies any outside organization or any organization composed of representatives of bureaus of the Departments of the Government legislating so as to destroy the legislative functions of any governmental institution?

Mr. SMALL. I am not sure that I quite catch that academic question of the chairman.

Mr. TAWNEY. The facts are that this agreement referred to in the letter is an agreement between the various Departments of the Government who have scientific testing plants, and they propose under that agreement to limit the functions of these various Departments, not to those things that the law expressly authorizes, but to those that the board say they shall exercise.

Mr. SMALL. I think I understand the gentleman. In other words, the gentleman complains of the appropriation and criticises the Geological Survey because he says there is a duplication, and then he finds fault with the different Departments of the Government because they enter into an agreement to avoid duplication.

I submit that the gentleman is inconsistent, and that he is seeking to find something on which to base criticism against this appropriation. This letter distinctly settles the proposition that there has been no duplication at the Watertown Arsenal, and I wish in addition to that to submit another proposition. The distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], who has just taken his seat, admitted that we ought to have these tests. The chairman of the committee said he would like to have a separate bureau established, in which the most distinguished experts of the country, regardless of compensation, could be employed to make these tests for the benefit of the people. But he says that there is a provision in this bill, as there is on page 175, for referring this whole matter to the National Academy of Sciences. Until that report has been made, until some tangible proposition has been submitted to this House, for a consolidation of the testing work to be carried on by the Government, it does not lie with the Committee on Appropriations to make any opprobrious criticism or condemnation of this work, which has been so long recognized, and for which appropriations have been made from year to year. Until we reach some method of more intelligent consolidation, until a bureau shall have been established, this work—which is admittedly of great value—ought to be prosecuted just as it has been heretofore. It should be continued. I do not understand that there is a single line in the hearings; I do not understand that there is a single line in the report of the committee; I do not understand that the chairman of the committee or any member of the committee deny that this work has been of great benefit to the Government. The objection, however, is made that there is duplication. Other objections are made, but I think that this appropriation ought to be continued because of its admitted value.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I would not detain the committee at this time or ask the time, but one of the members of this Geological Survey has called my attention to certain figures and asked me to call the attention of the House to this fact. The main argument that has been made as to why this increase should not be granted has been on the proposition that experts outside of those employed by the Government have been paid these appropriations and that the appropriations have been used in that way and not for governmental purposes or governmental employees. Now, I am informed by one gentleman, in charge of one of the bureaus, who I am satisfied has examined the question and understands the facts, that the hearings before the committee show that 30 per cent of the appropriation for the last year were expended for the purchase of machinery to carry on these testings. That 40 per cent was spent for salaries for men employed by the Secretary, Government employees, and that only 5 per cent of last year's appropriation was used to pay for the services of men employed outside of the Government and outside of the bureau. Now, I think that disposes of the argument that this fund is being used to pay college professors outside of this bureau to do this work. Five per cent is a mere bagatelle. It may be that here and there it is necessary to draw in an employee or some scientific man who is not in the Government, but if that statement is correct—and I have it from one of the gentlemen in charge of this bureau who, I have no doubt, is absolutely correct in reference to it—5 per cent of the total fund is so small that it absolutely does away with the argument when it is shown that 95 per cent of the appropriation by Congress has absolutely been used along the lines of purchasing machinery and for general purposes. Now, aside from that, I wish to say this in reference to these experiments. Gentlemen contend that the Watertown Arsenal is all we need. Now, my understanding has always been that the Watertown Arsenal tests are strictly for the Government.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, he is misinformed. There have been quite a number of tests for private concerns at different times.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, if there are, it is done along those lines that the private concerns make the argument to the Watertown people that it is necessary to investigate their private matters——

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman is again mistaken. The proof shows there have been any number of instances of direct application.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will state to my friend that the only thing I know about it—there may have been direct applications and the work may have been done; I can not say what has not been done—but on several occasions I have communicated in the last ten years with the Watertown Arsenal in reference to such matters, and I never could get them to consider the proposition.

Mr. SHERLEY. Have you offered to pay for the work?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It never got to that proposition.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is one of the important points of the proposition.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. They said that they were doing governmental work, general work, and as far as I have been able to ascertain personally they have not gone into the general tests for the public at large, as I understand it. Now, it may be that they have gone into some of this work; I can not deny that; I have not been there and I do not know what they do, but I do know that it is in the interest of the public that they have governmental experts who shall investigate structural materials, who shall investigate fuel tests, who shall go into all these questions for the benefit of the people of the United States. If you have a great corporation like the United States Steel Company, that has millions of dollars at its command, there is no difficulty in the world of its obtaining scientific men to make all the investigations it wants, but when you come to the average citizen of the United States, he is not able to employ the time of scientific men along these lines when he wants to develop his resources and develop the property in his neighborhood, and it is to his interest and the interest of the people that there should be a bureau of the Government that can carry on this work.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, just a word in reply to the gentleman from Alabama. The gentleman is arguing in favor of the Government going into the business of making commercial tests. Now, if the Congress of the United States feels that it is justified in authorizing the carrrying on of commercial tests, then this $50,000 in additional to that recommended by the committee would only be a drop in the bucket. We have got to draw the line between commercial and original research work. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman made one other statement which confirms the correctness of the recommendation of the committee, namely, that $50,000 is all that is necessary to carry on this work during the fiscal year. He says of the appropriation 50 or 60 per cent, I do not know which——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I said 30 per cent—here is a memorandum which was handed me—30 per cent was spent for purchase of machinery, 40 per cent for salary for governmental employees, and only 5 per cent for salaries outside of the Government.

Mr. TAWNEY. Then, Mr. Chairman, 30 per cent of this appropriation having been expended for equipment, what is the necessity of duplicating that equipment every year? Thirty per cent of $100,000 having been expended for equipment and only $40,000 for salaries outside of those who were employed outside of the Federal Government, there is absolutely no necessity for the additional $50,000, on the statement of the gentleman himself.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. They have got the machinery up now, and they are in better position to use more money for these testing purposes.

Mr. TAWNEY. They had the same expenditure years before, and we have the right to assume they have their equipment now and are prepared to carry on the investigations and the tests that they will be required to make in the next fiscal year.

Mr. NORRIS. Is it not true that examination on behalf of the Geological Survey before your committee has given you an estimate as to how they expect to divide this $100,000? A good deal of it is to be used for the purchase of additional machinery.

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not know that they have, but I do maintain that if we have got to renew this every year——

Mr. NORRIS. It is additional equipment.

Mr. TAWNEY. Even additional equipment. We have been having other tests made, plants that have been testing for all Departments of the Government. We have testing plants that are testing commercially when commercial interests pay for the tests, but I submit $50,000 is all that this Bureau will require for making the tests and utilizing the equipment which we have heretofore purchased out of appropriations made during the last two years. I sincerely hope that the amendment will not be agreed to. I now call for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 87, noes 37.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I move another amendment to the paragraph. I amend by striking out lines 22, 23, 24, and 25, on page 78, and lines 1, 2, and 3, on page 79. That is the proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] moves to strike out the proviso.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the proviso be read.

Mr. TAWNEY. Let the proviso be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] moves an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 78, beginning with line 22, strike out the following proviso: "Provided, That no part of this or of the following sum shall be paid as compensation or emolument to any person not regularly and continuously employed by or whose entire time is not devoted to the service of the United States, nor shall any part thereof be paid to any person who is in the employ of any State, county, municipality, or institution not under the control or direction of the United States Government."

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to take up very much time of the committee in discussing this proposition, because it has been somewhat discussed already, and there are others who desire to talk about it. As I understand the proviso, it is put in by the committee practically for the purpose of getting rid of the advisory board that it has been admitted is one of the means by which some of this money, although a small portion of it, has been expended in the past. Now, there is an advisory board of which the Supervising Architect is chairman, and I understand that they invite eminent engineers who are not "continually and continuously" in the employ of the Government to meet with them and go over some of the scientific propositions that are involved in the consideration of the subject. And, I believe, that since it is a scientific subject, it ought to be considered from scientific standpoints. We ought to be in a position to avail ourselves of the services of any man when he may be needed occasionally to carry out the real intent of the law. And now, Mr. Chairman, in order that the House may understand how this question is viewed by those governmental employees who have the matter in hand, I want to read a portion of a letter from the Supervising Architect of the Treasury. He says:

In this connection I wish to take occasion to tell you of what immense benefit the work of the national testing board has been to our office.

Now, he is speaking from the standpoint of one who has charge of all the public buildings in the United States.

Through their efforts we are able, in the majority of instances, to secure materials, such as clay products, gravel for concrete, stone for construction in the various localities, etc., that constitute a large saving in the direct cost of buildings to the Government, and I should feel extremely sorry, if through any failure of appropriation or peculiar wording of the act, that this work should fail to be continued. It seems to me that when the Government can obtain, at a very small cost and personal expenses, or a minimum salary at the most, the services of prominent engineers and scientists throughout the country, even though they may not be Government employees, it would be an immense loss to the Government not to secure such services, especially as if they were forced to pay for such advice the fees charged would probably be very large.

In many instances, I understand, in the meetings of this board the Government pays only the expenses of the men whom it invites—a board, by the way, selected by the President of the United States—and it strikes me that the proper administration of office and the proper expenditure of this money, if we want to get results, ought to be the two things considered, and those who have it in charge ought not to be tied by restricting them to men who are in the employment of the Government all the time and continuously.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman kindly tell the committee of the authority in law for the creation of this board?

Mr. NORRIS. Probably there is no authority; there may not be; but I say, so far as the board are concerned, they are working without any compensation to speak of.

Mr. TAWNEY. I beg the gentleman's pardon as to that.

Mr. NORRIS. There may be some who are paid.

Mr. TAWNEY. They are paid whenever they work.

Mr. NORRIS. They ought to be. Those who are employed by the Government of the United States are paid regularly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Thirty-three outside of the Government service are paid.

Mr. NORRIS. So far as I am concerned, if we had a hundred outside of the public service, I think it would be a good thing, if we got good results.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the gentleman know that one of the most eminent scientific societies in the country is required by its charter to freely advise the Government in these matters?

Mr. NORRIS. That may be.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does not the gentleman think it would be better for it to be carried on under existing law?

Mr. NORRIS. My point is, when we want to get some scientific analysis, or some scientific subject considered scientifically, that we ought to be able to go out and get some men competent to consider it, whether they belong to the Government service or not; and if they work for the Government in that respect, then the Government ought to pay them for their services.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, if this amendment is agreed to and the proviso is stricken out, we might as well abdicate our legislative functions to the chiefs of the Departments of the Government in respect to the expenditure of all appropriations made for the public service. We have statutes to enforce the observance of the laws which Congress has heretofore enacted for the purpose of protecting expenditures of public money. In this case these laws have been violated. The limitation proposed to be stricken out is intended to prevent this. If you want to give unbridled authority to the executive department to expend this money, then adopt the amendment.

The attention of the Secretary of the Interior, when before the committee, was drawn to the fact that there was no authority for the appointment of the board—the supervising board of engineers. It may be, and is entirely proper, and I am not criticising the organization of a board composed of Government employees for the purpose of supervising any particular work or making a report to any particular Department; but when you take an organization composed of the heads of the various bureaus and add to that organization as many men outside of the Government service as have been appointed on this board, without authority of law, and then justify it by refusing to limit the appropriation as we propose in this instance to the Government service, there is absolutely no use, then, of further continuing the limitations heretofore enacted or enacting limitations hereafter for the purpose of restricting appropriations.

Now, I find on examining the hearings, that this board is made up of thirty-three scientists and engineers outside of Government employees, and they are wisely selected from the different States, not only for consultation in respect to Government work, but for use when the time comes for securing appropriations for the Geological Survey. The chief activity of every one of these men has recently been in writing to Members of Congress, not informing them that they were members of this board and part of a governmental institution created not by authority of law, but in violation of law.

Now, if you strike out this limitation, of course it will be notice to the Department that they are at liberty to expend the appropriation which we make as they see fit, regardless even of the existing limitation upon their rights to employ or expend appropriations for people outside of the Government service without express authority. I do sincerely hope that this House will in this instance at least, after having increased the appropriation to a hundred thousand dollars, limit the expenditure of that appropriation to the Government service and not aid in carrying on the various private institutions throughout the country that we are to-day supporting in part.

I have here an editorial from the Pittsburg Dispatch, of April 27. "A mistaken cut" is the title.

In the pruning of the sundry civil bill Mr. TAWNEY'S Committee on Appropriations has threatened the existence of the testing laboratory now temporarily located at Carnegie Technical School in this city.

Now, Mr. Chairman, why should the Government of the United States contribute toward the maintenance of the testing laboratory in the Carnegie Technical School in the city of Pittsburg?

Mr. DALZELL. The contribution is just exactly the other way. The contribution is by that institution to the Government work, and not by the Government to the institution.

Mr. TAWNEY. The testing that was referred to by Secretary Garfield in his hearings as being done at Pittsburg, Pa., is done in the testing laboratory of the Carnegie Technical School.

Mr. DALZELL. Without charge to the Government.

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not care whether it is without charge to the Government or not. From this editorial it would seem that the Government had been contributing from this appropriation; and from the testimony of Mr. Garfield it appears, too, that there has been some contribution to some institution at Pittsburg for that purpose.

Then, Mr. Chairman, if we are to embark upon this kind of service, why should we not limit the number of employees who may be employed outside of the Government service? There is not an accounting officer who, if his attention be called to the existence of this supervisory board, would or could under the existing statute, pass the account for the compensation of the members of this board.

Mr. NORRIS. Is it not true that in the last year there has only been paid out of this fund the sum of $565 on account of this board that you are objecting to?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not know how much has been paid, and I do not care.

Mr. NORRIS. And that includes their expenses.

Mr. TAWNEY. If they have authority to pay out $500, they have authority to pay out $100,000. The lesser necessarily involves the greater. It is the principle of the thing that I object to. I believe that when the Congress appropriates for the Federal service the expenditure of that money should be to those who are employed in the Federal service, and not employed by the States or in outside institutions, and I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand the situation at all as does the gentleman, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. Now I read this in a bulletin issued by the Geological Survey, as giving probably the origin and history of the existing system:

For a number of years investigations of structural materials have been carried on throughout the country, but without attempt at coordination, until a small appropriation was made to enable the United States Geological Survey to perform work of this kind. The Survey, recognizing the value of cooperation, at once invited technical societies to take part in the work; consequently a joint committee on concrete and reenforced concrete, composed of leading engineers and professors of engineering from the American Society of Civil Engineers, the American Society for Testing Materials, the American Engineering and Maintenance of Way Association, and the Association of American Portland Cement Manufacturers, was invited to assist in planning the work to be done by means of the appropriation. An advisory board, composed of leading engineers throughout the country, was created by President Roosevelt and this board has had general supervision of the work.

So that, so far as we have gone now, the contributions are made, not by the United States to private individuals or private institutions or for the benefit of private institutions or private individuals, but the contributions are made by those institutions and individuals to the work of the United States, and for the purpose of coordination and cooperation.

Now, let me read you a portion of a letter that I received from the president of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers, a gentleman who has no interest in the matter at all, save as he is interested in it from a purely scientific standpoint:

About three years ago President Roosevelt appointed a number of engineers members of the national advisory board to advise the technological department of the United States Geological Survey in reference to tests to be carried out on structural materials and fuels, the object being to develop new sources of supply and also to show the best use to which these natural resources, in the shape of fuels and structural materials, could be put. An enormous amount of work has been done by the Geological Survey technological department under the advice of this advisory board, the results of which are shown in the professional papers issued by the department. The national advisory board serve without any compensation whatever, and have merely been paid a nominal sum to cover any part of their traveling expenses, and nothing more. The amendments to the sundry civil appropriation bill now prohibit the Geological Survey technological department from accepting any advice and prohibit them from appropriating money to anyone excepting permanent employees. This, of course, attacks the foundation of the whole scheme by means of which the Government was able to receive the advise (gratis) of some thirty or forty of the most prominent engineers in the country. Just what the object of this movement on the part of Congress is, it is difficult to see. As a matter of fact, the Panama Commission has asked this department to test cements during the coming year for them to such an extent that if they do this work alone it will more than exceed the sum of $50,000 appropriated; so that it is quite evident that unless an immediate movement is made, this will practically kill the entire technological department of the United States Geological Survey. The Panama Commission also has requested this department to make tests on fuels, which will involve a very large expenditure, and this department makes tests on practically all the coal furnished to the Navy and the United States Government generally, as well as making the enormously valuable investigations into gas producers, boilers, and all kinds of fuels scattered all over the country.

In view of these facts, it seems too bad to stop the work when it is reaching a point where it is of the greatest service to the country at large.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Does not the gentleman know that, notwithstanding the statement in that letter, there is no provision prohibiting the receiving of advice from these people? And does not the gentleman know that the only provision is that they can not receive any money, and that the statement is untrue? I assert from my knowledge that a number of his statements are equally inaccurate.

Mr. DALZELL. It is provided in this bill:

That no part of this or of the following sum shall be paid as compensation or emolument to any person not regularly and continuously employed by, or whose entire time is not devoted to the service of, the United States, nor shall any part thereof be paid to any person who is in the employ of any State, county, municipality, or institution not under the control and direction of the United States Government.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. And there is not a syllable there prohibiting the receiving of their services or advice. Most of the gentleman's statements are about as accurate as that.

Mr. DALZELL. They receive their traveling expenses—a very insignificant amount of money.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The gentleman has read the statement that if this provision is adopted the Government will be prohibited from receiving the advice of these men. There is not a syllable of truth in that statement——

Mr. DALZELL. The practical effect of it is that.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa (continuing). And every other statement on the subject is just about as accurate as that.

Mr. TAWNEY. What is the name of the author of the letter?

Mr. DALZELL. He is president of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers, and his name is H. G. Stott.

Mr. TAWNEY. From what State?

Mr. DALZELL. He writes me from New York.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, the committee reported a provision for the investigation of structural material, and recommends an appropriation of $50,000. The House in Committee of the Whole has increased it to $100,000. I understand the proviso involves the administration of the appropriation and seeks to control the manner in which it shall be expended, and that is all there is involved in the proviso which this amendment seeks to strike out. It has been stated and not denied that the purpose is to eliminate what is known as the "national advisory board."

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit me, while that may be the effect, it is by no means the chief purpose. The chief purpose is to prevent the employment of men who are paid salaries by State schools and colleges.

Mr. SMALL. If the gentleman had time and I had the time to yield to him, I venture to say that a reading of the hearings would make him qualify that statement.

Mr. SHERLEY. But the gentleman who helped to prepare the proviso knows something about the reasons for it, whatever the hearings may say.

Mr. SMALL. I have the hearings here.

Mr. SHERLEY. That has nothing to do with what actuated the committee.

Mr. SMALL. Oh, I can not go into what actuated the committee.

Mr. SHERLEY. But the gentleman has gone into it, and when he is corrected says that the hearings show something else.

Mr. SMALL. All the information the House has to go by is what is conveyed in the hearings. It may be important for the committee to know that the national advisory board was appointed, not by the Geological Survey, not by the Secretary of the Interior, but by the President of the United States.

Mr. TAWNEY. Under what authority?

Mr. SMALL. I am not discussing the question of authority. I say that it ought to commend itself to the gentleman from Minnesota to know that it was created by direct action of the President of the United States. Some members of the board have compensation and some have no compensation, but that does not enter as a material factor into the merits of this amendment. The President may not have been authorized to appoint a national advisory board, and yet the Secretary of the Interior, through the Director of the Geological Survey, had the right to employ temporarily and pay consulting experts.

I say it is a question of administration, and the question that we are called to pass upon is whether the Director of the Geological Survey and the President of the United States shall be confined to those who are continuously employed by the Government from day to day and by the year, or whether they may call upon experts scattered over and throughout the United States, experts and mechanical engineers, expert scientists, for their opinion in consultation in order to aid the Geological Survey in the administration of that Bureau.

Now, as a proposition, I think there can be but one answer upon its merits. If it will yield best results, if it will be for the benefit of the people of the United States in getting the best information as to structural materials, they ought not to be confined simply to the benefit of the advice and services of men who are constantly in the employ of the Government; but in an expert matter of this kind the Geological Survey ought to have the authority to call upon eminent engineers and scientists and get the benefit of their learning and experience in the fields in which they have achieved wide reputation.

Now, the object of the proviso inserted by the committee is to prevent the executive officers of the Government from getting the benefit of this expert advice; and if the employment of these experts has been a benefit to the people of the Government, it ought to be continued.

As I said a moment ago, nothing can be found in the hearings before the committee to justify the conclusion, and no gentleman from the committee will make the statement that the result of this investigation of structural materials has not been for the benefit of the people; and if that proposition is true, they ought to have an opportunity to make these investigations under the best expert advice obtainable, and to this end specialists and trained engineers and chemists should be consulted by the scientists in the regular employ of the Department. It is not a question whether the national advisory board was created by authority of law—we will assume that there is no authority, we will assume that it has no legal entity—that is not the proposition, but the question is whether in the expenditure of this money it shall be expended in the employment of trained scientists to enable the Director of the Geological Survey in the investigation of structural materials and in the investigation of fuels to get the best results for the people of the United States. [Applause.]

I append the following letter from the Secretary of the Interior:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, April 28, 1908.

Hon. JOHN H. SMALL,
House of Representatives.

SIR: In reply to your letter of April 27, requesting report as to statements made by the chairman of the Appropriations Committee in respect to expenditures for the appropriations for testing structural materials and testing fuels under the supervision of the Director of the Geological Survey:

Your inquiry as to whether any part of these appropriations has been expended in compensation to the members of the national advisory board for their attendance in Washington, or elsewhere, for the purpose of influencing appropriations for the conduct of the investigation of structural materials and fuels, may have been made with particular reference to the statement of the chairman of the Appropriations Committee on page 407 of the hearings, as follows:

"I know of men whose names are in this letter who have been before Congress at this session urging certain legislation along the line of the investigations they have heretofore been making for the Government," and the proviso in the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported to the House on April 25, as follows:

"Provided, That no part of this or of the following sum shall be paid as compensation or emolument to any person not regularly and continuously employed by, or whose entire time is not devoted to the service of, the United States, nor shall any part thereof be paid to any person who is in the employ of any State, county, municipality, or institution not under the control and direction of the United States Government."

This proviso, taken in connection with the statement of the chairman of the committee, seems to be misleading and to create the inference that the appropriations for investigation of structural materials and testing fuels have been expended in the Geological Survey for the purpose of interfering with or influencing legislation.

I have investigated the matter and find that it can be stated, in direct reply to your inquiry, that no payment whatever has been made from the appropriations mentioned to any member of the national advisory board on fuels and structural materials, or to any person connected with the investigations of structural materials and fuels, or to any other persons for the purpose of having them urge legislation or appear before Congress or its committees or confer with Members of Congress in respect to legislation, or for any other purpose than such as directly appertains to the investigations and tests. Indeed, the definite understanding with the members of this branch has been that they shall not take any part in urging legislation relating to these tests.

The national advisory board on fuels and structural materials meets as a board once each year for the purpose of discussing the investigations and tests which have been conducted and of considering future operations. At this annual meeting the various investigations relating to structural materials and fuels being conducted by the Government under the supervision of the Director of the Geological Survey and in the other Government offices, such as the Forest Service, the Supervising Architect's Office, etc., are reported to this board, which considers the informal reports made with reference to the continuations of tests which have been begun and advises whether or not the investigations and tests have been carried sufficiently far, from an engineering point of view, to give the data necessary for the Government's use, and the board also proposes new lines of investigation which it may be desirable to inaugurate.

As stated in the hearings, this board is made up of representatives from the leading engineering and technical societies and associations and allied organizations of the country, and its advisory capacity has been invariably exercised in respect to technical features for the best interests of the Government.

The executive committee, composed of five members, meets at other times than the annual meeting referred to for the consideration of special matters in regard to the investigations, and from time to time some one of the members of the board is requested to conduct a special investigation, for which he is peculiarly qualified by reason of his wide experience and professional standing, for which he is reimbursed from the appropriation at the rate of $10 per day when actually employed, plus his necessary traveling expenses. I may add, incidentally, that the Government secures in this manner the best expert work obtainable at a very low amount of expenditure.

The members of this board were nominated by the organizations which they represent because, it is believed, of their peculiar fitness for advising the Government in relation to the investigations and tests. Every member is a well-known expert along certain lines, and it may be safely asserted that the Government is thus permitted to avail itself of their services on the board entirely on account of their professional interest in the determination of the various problems considered by them and their patriotic willingness to advise, practically free of cost to the Government, in the proper solution of these problems.

In the adoption of the detailed programme resulting from the board's deliberations the Government secures absolutely trustworthy data, and the reports of the operations of the structural-materials laboratories and the fuel-testing plant are received by the engineering profession and the public in general as authentic information. In this connection it may be stated that the demands for the published reports and bulletins relating to these investigations and tests are such as to exhaust the ordinary supply and the more important ones in a very short time, and in no case have I learned that the reports made of these investigations have been seriously criticised or the authenticity or reliability of the statements of results questioned. The constant effort, which meets with reasonable success, of the advisory board and the officers in charge of these investigations and tests is to make them not only of great benefit to the Government in its utilization of structural materials and fuels, but also to secure for them recognition as the standard of accuracy for the engineering world and the public in general. This accomplishment is very greatly attributable to the excellent advice of the national advisory board on fuels and structural materials.

Very respectfully,

JAMES RUDOLPH GARFIELD,
Secretary.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, just a word. I suppose there can be no two opinions on the question that the action of the President in appointing this advisory board deserves the highest commendation. There are, undoubtedly, officials in the Government who believe that in their respective branches they know it all and do not need any outside advice from anybody, and they would simply proceed to spend $100,000, or whatever the amount may be which Congress appropriates for their purposes, for the sole benefit of their own employees. But here, under the advice of the Director of that Bureau, the President appoints an advisory board, whose members give their time and their knowledge and their experience practically gratis to the Government of the United States. Who are the members of that advisory board? I do not think they have been stated. There is the Supervising Architect, the Director of the Reclamation Service, the Chief of Ordnance, officers of the Engineering Corps of the Army and of the Isthmian Canal Commission, and the most skilled engineers selected from the National Engineering Society. These gentlemen have given their time and their knowledge gratis, as I said before. I perhaps ought to modify it to the extent of saying that their traveling expenses amounted to about $500 last year. If it were a serious omission on the part of the Committee on Appropriations to leave out this proviso, as the chairman states, they are incriminating themselves, because it was not in the last bill nor was it in the bill two years ago. They now want us to stand before the country and take the position that we do not need the advice of anybody. We do not need the advice of these experts, who have made the tests of structural material a life avocation, they say. We simply take the stand that our own officials are thoroughly competent to do that work; but if those officials themselves find it necessary to consult experts, certainly Congress ought not to stand in their way of affording the country the knowledge which experts are willing to offer gratuitously.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this provision is not simply to destroy this commission. I think that was least in the minds of the committee, but it was to prevent professors in various State colleges and other universities and establishments from being employed by the Government for doing the very work that in many instances they would be doing anyhow under their State or collegiate employment. A great deal has been said about wanting to tie the Department down to the knowledge contained within the Department. Well, if I had been quite as strenuous an advocate of the Geological Survey as some of the gentlemen, I would think that that knowledge was more than sufficient for all the purposes, but I am prepared to admit they need advice and I do not want in any way to interfere with their getting advice, and nothing that we have done does interfere with their getting advice. In the first place, there is now a body composed of the most eminent scientists in America, subject to call at any time, a body that has a standing in the scientific world infinitely beyond the standing of the men who have been chosen in this instance. Not only is that true, but I object and seriously object to a commission being appointed by the President or anybody else without warrant of law, and I object to the money of the United States being expended, whether it is $5 or $5,000,000, without warrant of law. When the gentleman seeks to justify it by the fact that the President has appointed a commission, he has but added to the gravity of the offense, rather than lessened it, and it is not a justification that the commission is appointed for a good purpose. All bad tendencies in government start by being undertaken from good motive and for a good purpose.

Mr. SMALL. Does the gentleman contend that the Director of the Geological Survey has not the power to employ an expert for a temporary purpose?

Mr. SHERLEY. No; "the gentleman" does not contend anything of the kind.

Mr. SMALL. Is not that all the Director has done?

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman does contend this, that there is not a line of law that authorizes the appointment of a commission for the purpose of advising the Geological Survey how it shall spend this money, and there is not a line of law, in my judgment, that warrants the payment of such a commission, which has no law for its existence. If the gentleman can show the law, I will withdraw any opposition that I have to the present programme; but if he can not, then he ought not to ask men who believe in government by law rather than government by men to justfy this departure from the law, simply because the President has done it and it was done for a good purpose. I do not deny that it was done for a good purpose and with right moive, but I do deny the warrant for doing it, and Congress ought not to countenance it. Congress ought not to countenance disregard of law.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does the gentleman not think it would be an advantage to the Government and promote this entire matter if we could go outside and get the benefit of the investigations made by the States and by various others?

Mr. SHERLEY. There is nothing on earth to prevent that in the proviso——

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The proviso prohibits the payment——

Mr. SHERLEY. It prohibits them employing in their work men who are in the employ of any State, county, municipality, or institution; but if the gentleman will permit me, I will again state to him that the greatest body of scientists in America are required by the law creating them to give to the Government of the United States information on these matters whenever it is asked for.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the Chair has recognized the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DOUGLAS] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], and I move that all debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that all debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in ten minutes.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, I was not going to insist at all upon being heard upon this amendment, although it is true that I have taken great interest in the matters referred to in this section of this bill. Now, I am perfectly willing to admit, as a general rule, that the contention of the chairman of the committee is an eminently wise one, and that perhaps it is, as he claims, a dangerous thing to allow the head of any Department or bureau, without any defined responsibility or limit, to employ men outside of the Government employees to do special work for the Government. But after all, when it is, as it is in this case, universally admitted by everybody, the gentleman from Kentucky and the gentleman from Minnesota neither of them denying that the results of this work on the part of the Government has been eminently satisfactory, then the question for which they contend, I submit, is almost wholly an academic question. Whether or not the President ought to have appointed this advisory board I am not saying. Whether it is, as a custom, wise to employ outside help I am not contending. But here is the fact: We have provided this appropriation, and its purposes are declared to be "for the investigation" of certain valuable truths in connection with the Government service. Then, I insist, why not permit the Government to go wherever it can get the best sort of information and the best sort of men for investigating these subjects? I do not believe there is any danger in the proposition, and it strikes me as an eminently practical and proper one.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, it is unfortunate that the character of this commission has been brought into this discussion. There is a provision of the statutes which prohibits the acceptance of voluntary personal services by any officer of the Government, so that unless some provisions were made to pay the members of this board the acceptance of their services would be in violation of the law. Section 3681 of the Revised Statutes provides:

No accounting or disbursing officer of the Government shall allow or pay any account or charge whatever growing out of, or in any way connected with, any commission or inquiry, except courts-martial or courts of inquiry in the military or naval service of the United States, until special appropriation shall have been made by law to pay such accounts and charges.

And this expenditure for this commission, or "board," as it is termed, is expressly prohibited by law.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield to an interruption?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Right on that point, do you mean to say when it is impracticable for the Government here to go to my city or home or neighborhood to investigate a certain subject and there is a professor there in one of our great colleges who can do it, that there is no law empowering the Government to employ that man to do it who is already on the ground with the machinery to do the work?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I say, unless there is authority specifically given to which the gentleman can point that the official is prohibited by this statute from accepting the voluntary services or for paying for them out of any fund except specifically provided for that purpose. As I only have five minutes I hope to be permitted to continue. It is not conceded, as the gentleman from Ohio states, that the result of the work of this board is beneficial or wise.

I am one of those who believe that no money should be expended in payment of services of any person unless he is in the regular employment of the Government, and has taken the oath of office prescribed by law. What does this proviso do? It prohibits the payment from the appropriation to any person who is now employed by any State, county, or municipality, or by any institution that is not controlled by the Government of the United States.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Will you permit me to suggest that it also provides that nothing shall be paid to anybody who is not continuously employed by the Government?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; and I am in favor of it. I am in favor of it because, in my opinion, that provision is proper.

The mere fact that somebody for a good purpose appoints a commission that is not authorized by law does not justify these expenditures. At no other time in our history has it been of so much importance that there should be kept separate and distinct the work of the Federal Government and the work of the various States, counties, and municipalities. There is a board created by Congress composed of eminent scientists which is compelled, under its organic act, to furnish just the information desired by various bureaus as is furnished by this board. Gentlemen say that these men are not paid compensation. Let me call their attention to the memorandum submitted by the Secretary of the Interior, on page 428 of the hearings, in which he states that they are paid five or ten dollars a day for their services, not for traveling expenses. Some of them have been appointed by the Director of the Geological Survey, and some of them as collaborators by the Chief of the Forestry Service. I hope the provision will remain in the bill. I hope this system of working up a lobby by retaining distinguished gentlemen in various parts of the country who are willing to accept even the trivial compensation provided and when the time comes for the appropriation write beseeching letters to every Member of Congress, whether acquainted with them or not, will be discontinued.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent for one minute. I think I can elucidate this matter a little bit, for I have had some personal experience. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Tennessee that the motion was made by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] to close debate in ten minutes, was unanimously carried, and that time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. NORRIS. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 50, noes 57.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] took their places as tellers.

The committee again divided, and there were—ayes 54, noes 51.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the continuation of the analyzing and testing of the coals, lignites, and other mineral fuel substances belonging to the United States, in order to determine their fuel value, and so forth, under the supervision of the Director of the United States Geological Survey, $150,000.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the word "one," in line 8, and inserting the word "two," so that it shall read "$250,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Page 79, line 8, strike out "one" and insert "two," so as to read "$250,000."

Mr. DALZELL. A very great portion of this day has already been spent in discussion of questions with which the committee is perfectly familiar. It seems to me useless that we should take up very much time in the discussion of this amendment. It relates to a matter with which the committee is thoroughly familiar and which was discussed a year ago and two years ago. The amount of the appropriation in 1906 was $202,000; in 1907 it was $250,000; in 1908 it was $250,000, and the purpose of this amendment is to secure this year an appropriation of exactly the same amount as was in the last appropriation bill.

In my judgment this is one of the most important matters in the whole bill. The United States is the greatest coal owner in the world, and I do not know but that it is the greatest coal consumer in the world. I think they say the United States has something like 50,000,000 acres of coal land, and that does not include, as I understand it, the deposits of coal in Alaska.

One of the most important questions in connection with this matter, that I do not now propose to discuss unless I am compelled to do so, is the question in which the whole country and the people of the country are intensely interested, to wit, ascertaining the causes for the explosions in mines which result in deaths appalling in number—more appalling when we compare the fatalities in this country with those abroad. As I say, I shall not go into that question, because it is not necessarily involved in this bill. It simply illustrates, however, what a comprehensive question this coal question is. I believe the committee is persuaded that the amendment ought to be agreed to, and for the present that is all I have to say.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Before the gentleman takes his seat I want to ask him a question. I could not hear the gentleman very distinctly as there was so much elocution on this side. I want to know if this amendment will arm any Department with authority to investigate mine explosions?

Mr. DALZELL. I think the paragraph is broad enough to cover that, though it does not contemplate it. It is for a continuation of work. It is nothing new. It is a continuation of work already under way.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How long have we had a similar law?

Mr. DALZELL. Why, the first appropriation was made in 1905.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Have many mines been examined?

Mr. DALZELL. Oh, there has been a great deal of work done. The gentleman will find, if he refers——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. As to the cause of explosions and disasters?

Mr. DALZELL. If the gentleman will refer to the letter of the Chief of the Geological Survey to the Secretary of the Interior, which is published in pamphlet form, he will find what has been done and what remains to be done.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this amendment. It should be adopted and this item increased to what it was last year, so that the Federal Government may help solve the peat-fuel problem. It is an important matter and would justify the expenditure of this sum. This is not a proposition which especially interests any State or section of the country. Peat deposits are scattered all over this land, in practically every State and Congressional district. There are perhaps 40,000,000 acres of those peat bogs, of more or less depth; and if it can be handled, dried, and briquetted to advantage, it will prove to be a very valuable asset. So far the handling of this material has not been a commercial business, for the reason that the problem of economical drying has not been solved.

During the last few years, and especially since the panic of 1903 and the high price of coal, companies have tried to turn those peat deposits into commercial profit and have failed. Their so-called "secret processes" have not turned out to be financial successes. In those enterprises and experiments considerable money has been lost by individuals in our State, and very likely in other parts of the country. How can it be most economically dried? That is the first question to be experimented with until it is solved, and the Federal Government should bear the burden and expense of that solution for many reasons. It is not an attractive proposition for private capital, for experiments and readjustments in perfecting machinery and appliances would be expensive, and the result, if successful, could not be kept a secret. Nor should it, for all should have the benefit of it. Those deposits are distributed over such a wide area, in comparatively small quantities, that they could not possibly be controlled by a trust.

Many of those peat bogs are close to cities, villages, and hamlets, and the introduction of this fuel would act as a competitor and keep down the price of coal. Peat could not be shipped any long distance at a profit, and its value would consist in its proximity to the consumers, so that the cost of transportation would be very light.

In the movement now being agitated for the preservation of our forests the wood lots on the farms throughout the eastern part of this country play an important part, and if peat could be substituted for wood the drain on the wood lots would be stayed and the problem of reforestization could be more easily solved.

Formerly wood was the only fuel, and is yet the only fuel in many country districts. It is consequently nearly exhausted. Coal is being consumed very rapidly, and because mines must be sunk deeper and thinner layers worked its production is from year to year becoming more expensive. Peat has been for years used in other countries for fuel, but in those countries labor has been and is much cheaper than here, and those peoples are disposed to put up with an inferior article. In this land of enterprise and invention we believe that by giving our experts and scientists a fair chance they will be able to invent a process for the preparation of peat which will make it both useful and profitable.

This may be paternalism, but there is no difference between $150,000 and $250,000 worth of paternalism. It is purely educational. The National Government is engaged in educational work along many lines. Practically all the money spent through the Department of Agriculture is for that purpose. Individuals can not be expected to undertake this work unless they are philanthropists and are willing to spend their money for the public good.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman from New York permit an interruption?

Mr. DRISCOLL. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does the gentleman understand that this appropriation of $250,000 is for "analyzing and testing of the coals, lignites, and other material fuel substances belonging to the United States," and not a dollar of it can be expended for the investigation of the peat indusry in his district?

Mr. DRISCOLL. I do not claim it can. I simply say that the United States is the largest owner of peat bogs in this country, just as it is the largest owner of forest reserves and coal lands in this country; and since all the people are interested, and all the people will get the benefit if any process be developed which will be successful and profitable, then all the people should bear the burden of the experiments.

One hundred thousand dollars would be a large sum for any individual or corporation to risk in this experimental work, but the National Government will not feel it, and it will be borne equally by all the people throughout the land. This work by the Geological Survey should not be stopped or cramped. But it can not go on without this appropriation, and therefore the amendment should prevail.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will pass, and that the members of the committee will not oppose it. I consider this one of the most valuable investigations that can be made by the Government, and in the brief time that I have I will give attention to only one point—that of lignite coals. The Government of the United States owns great tracts of land to-day in the public domain in which there are enormous bodies of lignite coals and of algæ coals, to which the lignite coals belong. Within recent years it has been ascertained, partially by myself and by some others working in the same fields, that those lignite coals are sources from which very great value can be obtained by their use as gas producers. It has also been ascertained by work that is going on to-day in Oklahoma that those lignite coals may become the sources of great quantities of oil. The oil is being abstracted from them and sold as a commercial product. It is necessary that further investigations on that line be made, and they can not be made by individuals, but they can be made by the Government. There are great districts in the West that have no fuel supply unless we have it in these algæ coals and lignite coals.

We believe that utilizing the algæ coals and the lignite coals for the oil and the gas that they produce in such enormous quantities an immense source of power will be developed and put where it can be utilized for the purposes of the people of great districts of this country. That experimental work, purely theoretical and scientific work, can not be done by individuals. I have been engaged in that to some extent myself, and this work has reached the point where individuals can go no further. It is proper scientific work for the Government to undertake. We do not ask that it be done as commercial work, but simply that it be carried on for the purpose of investigating the value of lignite coals and these other coals for fuel and power purposes.

If this appropriation is cut down, as suggested by the committee here, I believe sufficient funds will not be on hand to do this work. I will say, further, that I have not been asked to make a suggestion here by any member of the Geological Survey Department. I am not even acquainted with the gentlemen of that Survey; but I make this statement because of my knowledge of the subject, gained through twenty years of study and investigation of it. [Applause.]

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, the coal-testing work done by the Government at St. Louis has been of great practical value to the entire country. One of the commercial problems of the most serious nature that the business element of the country has had to consider for some time has been the probability of a comparatively early exhaustion of the fuel supply. The experiments made at St. Louis have demonstrated that there are economical ways of using one fuel supply, which if generally applied will arrest the waste that has indicated a disastrously early termination of the entire supply of fuel in the country.

The great State of Texas in its whole area has, I believe, according to the geologists who speak in terms of exactness, no true coal, but we do have vast stretches of land underlaid with lignite, which for years has been known to possess commercial value. The extent of that value was not comprehended until the experiments made at the St. Louis Exposition. The importance of that work was brought home to the people of Texas by its demonstrations of the possibilities of the economic use and the general economic value of such fuel supply as we have. For this reason I sincerely hope that the House will give its support to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, it is claimed by the advocates of this amendment that the expenditures of the appropriation results in great good to the people of the country. How? What has been done for the benefit of the country by the expenditure of this money? It was intimated by the Secretary of the Interior in his testimony before the committee that there were probably $35,000 saved to the Government in the purchase of its coal. It developed that the saving was due in all probability to the establishment of improved engines in the Departments of the Government. The fact is that the expenditure of this money results only in advertising favorite, established coal fields and in listing other coal fields with equally as good a fuel as unfit for uses to which it has been successfully applied. Most of this money has been spent in the old coal fields of Pennsylvania and West Virginia, Ohio, and Indiana.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Will the gentleman give us some authority for the statement he has just made that the money has been expended to exploit the coal fields in some of the old coal States?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes; it has been spent to exploit the old coal fields in West Virginia, Ohio, Indiana, Pennsylvania, and Kentucky.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman allow a suggestion? If this statement is true, that it was merely expended in that way, then these testing plants should be located in the West for the purpose of testing the new coal.

Mr. CAMPBELL. They neglect to test the coal in the Middle West.

Mr. BONYNGE. Does not the gentleman know that there is a testing plant in St. Louis and one at Denver, and that at Denver they are testing the coal of the new fields in the Rocky Mountain region?

Mr. TAWNEY. And does the gentleman know how much that costs?

Mr. CAMPBELL. It does not cost $250,000.

Mr. Chairman, I say this in answer to all the arguments made, that this is for the purpose of getting a better fuel for the Government. The scheme was never dreamed of until there was a small appropriation provided for the establishment of an experimental plant at the St. Louis Exposition, and then it grew into these enormous proportions that now threaten the establishment of another expensive bureau in the Government.

Mr. DALZELL. The report is that during the last year forty-three different coals were examined—Wyoming, Utah, New Mexico, and Colorado—with a view to giving a coke coal for a low-grade coal?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes; and I still maintain that the most of the money was spent in the old-established coal fields of the country. Now, we got good coal in all parts of the country, and it was consumed by the people for every use to which fuel is put, by private individuals and concerns as well as by the Government, before these testing plants were ever dreamed of. These testing plants have not improved an ounce of coal. They have advertised certain coal fields and certain coke-bearing coal. And they have broken up certain enterprises by publishing the statement that they were not located in a region that contained coke-bearing coal.

Mr. BONYNGE. Will the gentleman yield? Will the gentleman state where that occurred?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will. It was in Cherokee County, Kans., in my district.

Mr. BONYNGE. Were not those ovens closed down before that?

Mr. CAMPBELL. This Bureau published a bulletin stating that the coal surrounding these coke ovens was not coke-bearing coal.

Mr. BONYNGE. Is it not true that they closed down in 1903 and this bulletin was not published until 1904 or 1905?

Mr. CAMPBELL. They may have closed down temporarily on some other account, but they did not close permanently until after the publication of this bulletin.

Mr. BONYNGE. Were they not closed down and remained closed down before the bulletin was published at all?

Mr. CAMPBELL. No; they were not.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would like five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I would like to ask the gentleman if the fact stated in the bulletin was true—did the Department tell the truth about it?

Mr. CAMPBELL. It was not the truth. Coke was made in those ovens of coal mined in that field that was merchantable throughout that section of the country. The testing plant at St. Louis was offered coal by a producer a few miles from the coke ovens and they refused to take it. His offer was refused, but they took a carload of coal from a coal company 18 miles away from there, in the other end of the coal field, and made a test and upon that test published their bulletin.

It is told in the Department's annual report how some of this money has been spent. It says:

A detailed paleobotanical microscopic examination was made of samples of the oil shales which are associated with the lead and zinc deposits of southwestern Wisconsin, for the purpose of determining the causes of the localization of the hydrocarbons that seem to have influenced the distribution of the ores. As this investigation seems likely to offer a satisfactory explanation of the origin of the oil and gas in older Paleozoic rocks, plans have been made to continue it and extend it to some of the areas of Ordovician and Silurian oil and gas.

Now, that is all-fired important to the people of this country. [Laughter.] Most important.

The report continues:

As this investigation seems likely to offer a satisfactory explanation of the origin of the oil and gas in the older Paleozoic rocks, plans have been made to continue it and extend it to some of the areas of Ordovician and Silurian oil and gas.

Now, that is interesting, as well as important!

Mr. GRAHAM. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that 2,254 of these tests were of gasoline and alcohol, outside of the matter of coal entirely?

Mr. CAMPBELL. We do all those things for ourselves, and we have been doing those. The people were privately testing their coal and oil and gas, and they have tested their gasoline, and they found how it all worked long before this appropriation was ever dreamed of.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The gentleman is correct in thinking this Bureau has interpreted alcohol to be a mineral fuel.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am not surprised at their finding anything. Mr. Chairman, we have been developing coal and oil and gas without the aid of the Geological Survey. We have been putting these products upon the market without the aid of the Geological Survey. We have discovered and are producing in my district six of the geological formations that they discuss in their annual report. They did not aid in the discovery or the development of a single one of these industries. They go on now and say that they are making a map of these fields, making some report of what they contain. Why, God bless them, the country knew what they contained before they ever went out there to make their maps and reports. This appropriation will result in saddling upon the Government another bureau, providing for another lot of officers who will become a continuous expense upon the people of the United States without contributing a corresponding benefit in return.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I just want to say a word in behalf of the recommendation of the committee for an appropriation of $150,000 for this service. In view of the disposition on the part of Members and their apparent desire to have the Federal Government take over the exercise of all functions belonging to private interests, I know that it is unnecessary to say anything, or that anything that I can say or that anybody can say can be said with the hope of defeating this amendment.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAWNEY. In just a moment. I have only five minutes. I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the appropriation of $250,000 carried in the current law was not for the doing of that which we propose in this act. Nobody has proposed to enlarge the scope of this work that would necessitate an increased appropriation. The current law, for which $250,000 was appropriated, covers the entire United States, covers investigations of any coal field that the Geological Survey may see fit to engage in, while the Appropriation Committee recommends $150,000 for analyzing and testing the coals and lignites and other fuels belonging to the United States. To that extent you can justify the appropriation of money from the Federal Treasury. Beyond that extent you can not justify it, and $150,000 will be ample for the testing of all the coals and all the lignites belonging to the United States. Under the current appropriation the authority exists for testing coal or fuels all over the United States, and the committee felt that in restricting this testing work to the fuels and lignites and coals belonging to the United States $150,000 would be ample for that service.

Mr. Chairman, I insist that there is no estimate of the amount necessary for carrying on the work provided under the language under which the proposed appropriation of $150,000 is made. If you intend to extend this service to the coal fields of Pennsylvania and West Virginia and Indiana and the other States and continue the work of investigating and inquiry into the relative heat units of the coal of different producers in these States, then you will have to enlarge the language under which your appropriation is made, for under the existing language in the bill you can not investigate anything but the coals belonging to the United States.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman speaks about elaborating the language, and that is what I have in mind. Why can not this be inserted:

And the causes of explosions in mines located in public lands.

Then we will get some good out of it and save human life.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, a proposition of that kind is pending now between the two Houses on the legislative appropriation bill, and this is not the time to consider embarking upon that new enterprise proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee. I simply want the committee to understand, when they are voting to increase this appropriation to $250,000 it is for the investigation of coals and fuels belonging to the United States, and this I do not think we are justified in doing. Do the Members of this House realize the fact that we are confronted to-day with a deficit of between fifty and sixty-five million dollars at the end of this fiscal year? That we will have a certain deficit of not less than $150,000,000 at the end of the next fiscal year? That in the meantime we absorb our entire surplus, and this will necessitate issuing, before the end of the next fiscal year, certificates of indebtedness to meet governmental expenditures? In view of those facts, I do not think we are justified in engaging in the business of investigating the coals and the lignites owned by the coal barons of this country. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and pending amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must put the motion made by the gentleman.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman from Minnesota to withhold his motion for five minutes.

Mr. TAWNEY. No; I can not do it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. All right; it will take more time than that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that all debate be now closed on this paragraph.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. CLARK of Missouri) there were—ayes 95, noes 59.

So the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. DALZELL) there were—ayes 66, noes 83.

Mr. DALZELL. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered.

The committee again divided, and the tellers (Mr. TAWNEY and Mr. DALZELL) reported that there were—ayes 81, noes 79.

So the amendment was agreed to. [Applause.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. After the Clerk reports the amendment, so it will be pending.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the word "substances," line 5, page 79, "and the causes of explosions in mines located in lands belonging to the United States."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is made.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Minnesota will allow it to go over until to-morrow.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I will reserve the point of order. I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WATSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 21260, the sundry civil appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

WILLIAM KEYES.

Mr. BULKELEY. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5999) to correct the military record of William Keyes, to report it favorably with an amendment, and I submit a report (No. 604) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendment was to add at the end of the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion now standing on the records of the War Department against the name of William Keyes, late private in Company B, One hundred and forty-second Regiment New York Infantry Volunteers, and to grant him an honorable discharge from said organization: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Ordered, That 2,000 additional copies of Senate Document No. 246, Sixtieth Congress, first session, "Irrigation in Imperial Valley, California," etc., be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

DELAWARE FORCES IN THE REVOLUTION.

Mr. RICHARDSON submitted the following resolution, which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Librarian of Congress be directed to send to the Senate copies of all the accounts, papers, and documents relating to Henry Fisher, of Delaware, and the Revolutionary forces, an active patriot in that colony, which papers, and so forth, were transmitted by the Secretary of State to the Library of Congress in 1903.

RELATIONS WITH COLOMBIA.

Mr. BACON. I submit a resolution for which I ask present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas the President on January 18, 1904, transmitted to Congress for its information all correspondence not theretofore transmitted touching the relations of the United States with Colombia and Panama, which correspondence included the refusal of this Government to accede to the request of Colombia for arbitration: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the President is hereby requested, if not, in his judgment, incompatible with the interests of the public service, to communicate to the Senate all correspondence since January 18, 1904, relative to any further request by Colombia for arbitration, if such request was made, and any response of this Government thereto.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. FORAKER. I suggest to the Senator that from the reading of the resolution the impression upon my mind is that it would be more appropriate in executive session.

Mr. BACON. It is simply a request to the President, resting entirely in his discretion, if compatible, in his judgment, with the public interest.

Mr. HALE. Of course if any papers came in, they would be sent to executive session, I take it.

Mr. BACON. The President, undoubtedly, would do so if he desired. Everything is left in the control of the President.

Mr. FORAKER. Messages from the President are promptly laid before the Senate and read in open session, and until they are read, presumably, at least, we do not know anything about their contents.

Mr. BACON. The President always, when he desires to do so, sends a message as confidential, and if he sees proper he will do so in this instance, though in the former instance he did not. I hold in my hand what he transmitted before in response to exactly a similar resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

PROTECTION OF GAME IN ALASKA.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 14789) to amend an act entitled "An act for the protection of game in Alaska, and for other purposes," approved June 7, 1902. This bill, I will say, will cause no discussion whatever, and I have asked the consent of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Missouri is here, ready to go on with his remarks. After this matter is disposed of, which I am assured will take no debate, I shall ask for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana asks for the present consideration of the bill indicated by him. The bill has been heretofore read. Is there objection to its consideration?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INTERNATIONAL PRISON CONGRESS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed:

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 5, 1908.

COMPANIES B, C, AND D, TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays Senate bill 6206 before the Senate. It will be read by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 6206) for the relief of certain former members of the Twenty-fifth Regiment of United States Infantry.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. WARNER. With pleasure.

Mr. CLAPP. Desiring to place it in the RECORD in connection with the Senator's speech, if he will yield I should like to ask the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] one or two questions in reference to the matter.

Mr. WARNER. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. I should like to ask the junior Senator from Idaho, in view of his investigation of this subject, his best judgment as to the number of troops who actually participated in the affray at Brownsville, if he cares to state.

Mr. BORAH. When I made the investigation in reference to this matter I did not have in view the question of determining definitely the number whom I might conclude from the evidence participated in the affair, but in my opinion, from the view which I now take, there were twenty-five or thirty who were either actually engaged or were participants in it at that time in the way of knowing that it was going on. I should say, from the hurried examination which I have made of the matter since the Senator called it to my attention, that at least thirty were participants in it in the sense of having knowledge that it was going on, of whom some ten or fifteen were actually engaged in the affray.

Mr. CLAPP. I am much obliged to the Senator.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, the witness relied upon by the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] to contradict the testimony of Mr. and Mrs. Rendall, Mr. Martinez, Mrs. Leahy, and Herbert Elkins as to the first firing being inside the reservation is the regimental scavenger, Matias Tamayo, a Mexican.

To understand the testimony of the scavenger it should be understood that between the barracks and the wall separating the reservation from Garrison road is a distance of 85 feet; that inside the garrison wall and between it and each of the barracks are three outbuildings—a woodshed, an oilhouse, and a sink; that these structures are within a few feet of the wall of Garrison road; that between them and the barracks is a roadway used exclusively for the benefit of the command occupying the fort; that on the night of the shooting the scavenger with his mule and iron cart was at or near the corner of B

Company barracks and between it and one of the outbuildings I have named. When firing began he was emptying an ash can into the bed of his iron wagon; that thereupon, as is inferable from the evidence, he became frightened and drove away at a Tam-o'-Shanter pace, although Tamayo swore that he drove away leisurely. On this point the sergeant-major of the regiment, who was sleeping in the Administration Building, 175 or 200 yards from the entrance to the reservation, testified:

Q. Now, right in that connection, you knew the scavenger?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. What was his name?—A. I think his name is Tamayo.
Q. Did you hear him or his cart that night?—A. I heard his cart.
Q. What attracted you to Tamayo's cart?—A. I thought it was artillery.
Q. That is, he was going so fast with that mule of his that you thought it was artillery?—A. Yes, sir; the shaking of the cart together.
Q. So that if that mule was walking, it was a pretty fast walk, was it not?—A. Yes, sir; that mule wasn't walking. That cart was being maneuvered very rapidly.
Senator FORAKER. It had an iron bed, hadn't it?
The WITNESS. Yes, sir; I think it had.
By Senator WARNER:
Q. It made enough noise for six or eight iron beds?—A. Yes, sir; it made a great racket.
Q. And did it not occur to you then to wonder, as you have stated somewhere, I believe—I may be wrong about that—if the people of Brownsville had a Gatling gun?—A. Yes, sir; the court required me to state exactly what my impression was at that time, and I told them what my impression was at that time.
Q. That you thought it was a Gatling gun?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Now, when was that rushing over there of the scavenger, with reference to this voice that you heard saying, "I want all of you?" Was it about the same time?—A. They were very near together.
Q. Was the voice before you heard the rattling of the cart?—A. Well, I could not be positive about it, really. They were so close together I could not tell which was first or which was second, really. There was very little time between them, I know that.
Q. Did you not think, as to Tamayo, from the way his cart was going at the time, that it would be likely, if anybody shouted, that he would want them?—A. That he would want them?
Q. Yes; want the soldiers' assistance, the way he was frightened?—A. No, sir; I am quite certain that it wasn't Tamayo, because I have heard his voice and am familiar with it.
Q. You know his voice?—A. Yes, sir; this voice I heard, it was a deep guttural, a bass voice.
Q. And Tamayo has a tenor voice?—A. A lighter voice than that.
Q. This was a deep voice?—A. Yes, sir; a deep guttural.
Q. Now, what was the distance from the administration building, where you were, to the place where you heard this voice?—A. Probably it might be 175 yards.
Q. I think possibly in your testimony you may have stated it was 200 yards.—A. Possibly; I could not say definitely.
Q. And you have thought over this?—A. I would not be positive about this distance. It wasn't over 200 yards.

In addition to the fact that Tamayo was badly frightened, from his own statement, he put himself in a position where it would have been difficult for him to have seen the commencement of the shooting at the point from which it was testified it had occurred.

In his affidavit, given early in the morning of the 14th of August, 1906, Tamayo said: That about 12.10 a. m. on the morning of August 14, 1906, he was in the rear of the quarters occupied by B Company, Twenty-fifth Infantry; that about this time a shot was fired by some person unknown in the street just outside the wall dividing the military reservation from the town of Brownsville, Tex. It will be noted that he here first locates the shooting just outside of the garrison wall, and this affidavit, as the evidence shows, was taken within a few hours after the shooting, at the suggestion of Captain Lyon.

In his testimony before the committee, Tamayo said:

Q. You have spoken of the alley here between Elizabeth and Washington streets?—A. Oh, you were talking about this here. [Indicating.]
Q. What do you call this alley [indicating]?—A. The Cowen and Yturria alley.
Q. The Cowen and Yturria alley. That is between Washington and Elizabeth streets?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. With reference to that alley, where was that first shot fired from?—A. Right along here [indicating].
Q. Right along——A. Right here [indicating on map].
Q. You have marked a good many places there.—A. It was right here, the first shot, and then I heard the next one.
Q. That is, about half way from the barracks road to Fourteenth street?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Right along there in the alley?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. In the alley?—A. Yes, sir; there is where I heard the first two shots.
* * * * * * *
Q. And there was a fusillade or a volley, was there?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Now, which was it, a volley or a fusillade, or how?—A. It was a fusillade, I think—lots of shooting.
Q. Well, but was it shooting right along, quick?—A. Yes; a kind of skirmish.
Q. Skirmish; one right after another, "tap," "tap," "tap," "tap?"—A. Yes, sir; pretty hard.
Q. About how many persons would you think were in it, from the discharges, discharging their firearms?—A. I would think it must have been about 8 or 10.
Q. At least that?—A. At least; yes, sir.

Major Penrose in his testimony before the court-martial in reference to Tamayo, said:

I asked him what he had seen or heard and he told me, as near as I can recall it, that he was at the sink of B Company, and he first heard a shot or two and then a fusillade behind him, and he thought they were shooting at him or his mule, and he jumped into his cart and drove away.

I here quote further from the testimony of Tamayo, showing the position he was in at the time of the commencement of the shooting:

Q. Now, the wood shed was between you and the town?—A. Yes, sir; but the wood shed was pretty far from me, on the other side of the road.
Q. I know; but the wood shed was between you and the town?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. So that you were back of the wood shed?—A. Yes, sir; I had the wood shed right there in front of me; but I could see between the wood shed and the privy what was going on in town [indicating].
Q. Between the wood shed and the sink?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And what is the distance between the wood shed and the sink?—A. About 8 feet.
Q. And you could see there, and see through where the shot was coming from?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. You could see the flash?—A. No, sir; I couldn't see it on account of those houses being so close there on the alley.
Q. And you were looking in that direction, then?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. You were not looking at the porches of the barracks at any time?—A. It wasn't any use for me to look at the porches——
Q. Wait a moment; let us not argue about this. Were you or were you not looking at the porches?—A. I could see both at the same time. I could see the town and I could see the porches. (Pp. 1224 and 1225.)
* * * * * * *
Q. Could you or not have told whether there was a shot fired from the barracks or not?—A. Yes, sir; from the back of the barracks; I could have seen it.
Q. You could have seen it?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. But suppose you were looking in the other direction?—A. No, sir; I could see both places.
Q. You still insist on that?—A. Yes, sir. (P. 1226.)

Before the Penrose court-martial the scavenger testified as follows:

Q. The first shooting you heard was apparently in the alley and near the Cowen house, was it?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Are you sure about that?—A. I can not very well tell in front of which house it was taking place.
Q. But it was in that direction?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And it seems to you that it was as far away as that, does it?—A. Yes, sir. (P. 831.)

It is submitted that the testimony of this witness can not be relied upon as to the location of the raiders at the time the firing began. If they were, as Tamayo located them, between Garrison road and Fourteenth street, on the Cowen alley, then Captain Macklin was mistaken in saying that he picked up exploded cartridges and clips near the mouth of the alley on Garrison road.

In connection with the question as to the commencement of the firing the testimony of Major Penrose is important. He, at the time the first shot was fired, was in his quarters across the parade ground, a distance of about 350 yards from the barracks. He had retired, but had not yet fallen asleep. His testimony on this point before the Penrose court-martial reads:

Q. What was the first thing you heard?—A. Two shots.
Q. Where were they?—A. Fired very close together. I thought they were between the guardhouse and that vacant set of quarters, farther over; it occurred to me that was the general direction.
Q. Farther over? What do you mean?—A. I mean farther over in the part of town in here. Might have been in here anywhere. I was sleeping in the back room in this set of quarters [indicating on map].
* * * * * * *
Q. What did you take those shots to be?—A. I took them to be pistol shots and firing black powder.
Q. What followed these?—A. That was followed almost immediately by six or seven shots; they were fired very rapidly, and I thought they were directly in rear of C Company, in that vicinity; back in that vicinity.
Q. What did you take those to be, Major?—A. They were undoubtedly high-power guns.
Q. You thought they were high-power guns?—A. Yes, sir; I thought that they were guns shooting smokeless powder, not black powder.
Q. What followed that?—A. That was followed by three very distinct shots. They stand out in my memory now more distinct than any others, and that was followed by a number of shots—a number of shots fired irregularly at first. In other words, they did not sound like volleys at first.
Q. Tell us a little more about those three shots that stood out so distinctly; where did you locate these?—A. In that general direction, I could not tell.
Q. Did they appear different from the others?—A. They were louder than the others and appeared more distinct.
Q. They were high-power guns?—A. Unquestionably.
Q. You said they were in that general direction; what do you mean by that?—A. I mean in that general direction of the town.
Q. Toward what?—A. I took it to be in rear of B Company, over in that direction, or possibly—C Company, I mean, or the east end of B Company.
Q. You located it somewhere near B or C Company?—A. In that part, in that particular——
Q. Let's commence with your movements, Major; what did you do?—A. The instant I heard these two shots I sprang from my bed. I thought it might possibly be fire, and my wife said to me, "What's that; fire?" and just instantly after that these several shots came, and I said, "I am afraid it is something worse than fire," and I sprang into my clothes—put on a pair of trousers over my pajamas; I slipped my bare feet into my shoes, did not lace them at all; I grabbed my blouse, ran downstairs as fast as I could, and picked up my hat and pistol in the hall as I rushed through. (C. M., 1152.)

Major Penrose, an old soldier, knew when he heard the high-power guns what it meant, and his remark to his wife, "I am afraid it is something worse than fire," was natural and significant, and it is fairly inferable from this remark that he at that time suspected that the shooting which was going on was being done by men of his command.

His testimony before the Military Committee was substantially the same as that given before the court-martial, and in answer to the question,

Where did they seem to be firing from?

he replied:

They seemed to be in the rear of C Company or B Company barracks, in the direction of the town, and the further question,

Could you tell from where you were whether they were outside or inside the reservation?

he did not answer directly, but said:

I took them to be outside the reservation.

He also testified that the sentinel, Howard, on duty on his beat, extending around the barracks at the time of the shooting, on being asked where the shooting was, replied:

It was directly over the wall.

Tamayo, the scavenger, is the only witness who attempts to locate the first firing up in the Cowen alley near the Cowen house. Arrayed against him on this point are Mr. and Mrs. Rendall, Jose Martinez, Mrs. Leahy, Herbert Elkins, and Major Penrose.

Captain Macklin in his testimony said:

It is possible that there were a few shots fired from the barracks or some of the quarters by the men in their fright.

Mr. President, if there is one fact established by the voluminous testimony in this case, that fact is that the firing from high-power guns commenced immediately in the rear of B or C Company barracks, and while there may be some question as to whether the firing was inside or outside the garrison wall, there is no question under the evidence that it commenced at the point I have stated. If the many eyewitnesses are to be credited, then it is proven in this case beyond a reasonable doubt that soldiers of Companies B, C, and D, of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, participated in the shooting up of the town of Brownsville on the night of August 13–14, 1906.

Mr. President, in addition to the eyewitnesses, the mute testimony of the bullet holes in the Yturria house, at the corner of Garrison road and Cowen alley are conclusive that the first firing was from an elevated point. Major Blocksom, Assistant Inspector-General of the United States Army, who had some nearly thirty years' active service, was ordered to Brownsville to make an examination into the affray and report, and I call the attention of the Senate to that part of his evidence with reference to the bullet holes in the Yturria house—this house being inclosed on the side opposite the barracks by a close board fence about 6 feet high. Of the bullet marks in that house, Major Blocksom testified (pp. 2585 and 2586):

By Senator WARNER:

Q. That is, his company?—A. The members of his company. In this connection I would like to state that I particularly impressed on Mr. Lawrason, who was commanding B Company at the time, the facts which I had found out regarding the firing of shots into the Yturria house.

Q. Just state what those facts were.—A. About the bullet holes I found?

Q. Just state that.—A. The statement of the Mexican boy who had been sleeping there at the night of the shooting?

Q. State, in that connection, just what you found out.—A. I think it was the next day after arriving there that I went to the Yturria house and saw a Mexican boy there, whose name I think was Teofilo Martinez. He told me that he had been sleeping on this porch the night of the shooting, and he was awakened by it, and that he heard the shots striking the house, and that he was very much frightened and went back into an outhouse and stayed there for some time. I asked him where the shots came from, and he said they came from over in the barracks, but he could not tell as to the location of them. I asked him to show me the bullet holes, and he showed me the marks, the bullet holes, of three bullets which struck on the outside of the house, and the mark of another one which he said must have gone through the roof and entered the ceiling of the dining room. He showed me where it came out in the dining room. These three bullet holes which I speak of indicated to me very plainly that the rifles firing them must have been on the porch of B Company barracks. One of them, especially, showed this to be true. It struck the lower edge of (I suppose you call it) the lintel of the porch, and made a groove along the lower side of the lintel. Where it first struck the lintel it made first a probably half-round hole. Where it left the lintel there was hardly any mark at all, just sufficient to show that the bullet had touched it as it left, making a groove along this lintel, the depth of which decreased from the place where it struck to the spot where it left it. I got up on the railing of the porch and measured along this groove. It struck the upper porch of B barracks, as I remember, between the fourth and fifth pillars, as I suppose you call them, of the porch. This shot went into the wall slightly lower than what would be the case if it went straight, as indicated by the groove, and the hole, as I remember it, was slightly enlarged from the size of the bullet—a small-caliber bullet, as I took it to be, from the others that I saw there—and the size of the groove where it first struck the lintel.

Q. What kind of a bullet did you say?—A. It was a small bullet; I can not say certainly whether it was a .30-caliber or not, but it was about that. It certainly was no larger. I sighted along this groove from the outside and looked at the bullet hole in the wall, and it was slightly lower than it would have been had it gone straight along the line of the groove, indicating, to my mind, that the bullet had tumbled slightly. This bullet went through the wall, and I think that it was this bullet that went through the back door of the kitchen; and I do not know whether I knew it at the time or not, but it was shown to me afterwards—the second time—when I was there, that it had struck the covering of the well in the back yard, and Mr. Garza, who was a clerk for Mr. Yturria, told me he picked it out of there, and he gave it to me.

Q. The range of the bullet was, then, downward?—A. The range of the bullet was downward all the time.

Q. Now, from your experience as a soldier and from your observations, you located that as being shot from what point, Major, substantially?—A. It was shot from the upper gallery of B barracks—the porch—I think, between the fourth and fifth pillars on the eastern end of that porch.

Q. You call the eastern end——A. Up that way [indicating].

Q. From the river?—A. Yes, sir.

Senator WARNER. That is the way that we have been calling it.

By Senator FRAZIER:

Q. Does the porch extend entirely around the barracks or does it stop at the eastern corner of the barracks?—A. It stops at the eastern corner of the barracks.

Q. And you think, from sighting the way you did, that the shot was fired from between the fourth and fifth pillars, extending west from the east corner?—A. Yes, sir; it was probably, I should say, one-third of the distance, or less, of the length of the barracks from the east end.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Just state, if you will, what observation you made to determine the range of the bullet.—A. You mean the direction in which it went?

Q. Yes; and what observation you made towards ascertaining the point from which it was fired.—A. The bullet struck about there somewhere [indicating].

Q. That is, in the rear, or kitchen, part of the building?—A. Yes, sir; the kitchen. It struck, I suppose, about there, where it struck the lintel [indicating].

Q. That is, substantially, how many feet from the west end of the kitchen part?—A. Probably 20 feet, although that is mere guesswork on my part.

Q. Yes.—A. And, as I remember, the bullet went almost perpendicular to this line, although I think it was slightly that way [indicating]. My impression is that this map is incorrect so far as the location of the barracks is concerned with reference to that house.

That the shots fired into the Yturria house must have been fired from an elevation equal to that of the back porch of the barracks is established by the affidavits of E. B. Gore, Christ Miller, and J. B. Fugitt, which are as follows:

THE STATE OF TEXAS, County of Cameron:

Before me, the undersigned authority, on this day personally appeared Elbert B. Gore, who, after being by me duly sworn, on his oath deposes and says:

My name is Elbert B. Gore; I am 40 years of age; I am a civil engineer and have followed said profession since the year 1891. I made, for the first time, an examination of the shots into the Yturria residence, at corner of Washington and Fifteenth streets, in the city of Brownsville, Tex. There were three—that I saw—all of them came from direction of barracks B (or second barracks from the river), Fort Brown; the splintered sides all being on the opposite side from the barracks. The alignment of two of the shots indicate that they came from a point on the upper gallery of said barracks between the second and third windows from the east end of barracks. I could not state entirely as to third shot, because after entering the house it passed through a partition at an acute angle, and there might have been considerable deflection; but I do state that it is physically impossible that these bullets could have come from any other direction, and at least two of them from any other place than barracks B (or second barracks from river), Fort Brown.

E. B. GORE.

I, Elbert B. Gore, do solemnly swear that the facts contained in the above and foregoing affidavit are true, so help me God.

E. B. GORE.

THE STATE OF TEXAS, County of Cameron:

Before me, the undersigned authority, on this day personally appeared Christ Miller, who, after being by me duly sworn, on oath deposes and says:

My name is Christ Miller; I am 51 years of age; I am the caretaker of the military reservation at Fort Brown, Tex.; I served twenty-five years and four months in the Army of the United States, and retired from said service on the 1st day of June, A. D. 1906; I was at the date of my retirement first sergeant Company B, Twentieth U. S. Infantry. On this morning I made a careful examination of the south side of the residence of Mr. F. Yturria, situated on the corner of Washington and Fifteenth streets in the city of Brownsville, Tex. I found three marks on said south side (or side toward Fort Brown) of said house.

Counting from the river, the first bullet mark, in my opinion, was made by a shot fired from the upper porch of second barracks from the river, between second and third upper windows from east end of said barracks, or out of either of said windows. This shot cut a groove in the lintel of the Yturria porch and passed on into the south wall of the kitchen, 2 inches lower than where it struck the lintel, and lodged in the north wall of kitchen. The second bullet struck and went through lintel of same porch and entered south wall of kitchen 1 inch higher than where it went in lintel, passed through south wall of kitchen and on through north wall, entering north wall of kitchen 1 foot and 2 inches higher than it did south wall. Distance from porch lintel to north wall of kitchen is 20 feet. In my opinion this shot was fired from lower porch of second barracks from river, just below the point on upper porch from which first shot was fired. The third shot struck south wall of kitchen at an angle, passed into dining room (which immediately adjoins kitchen on the east), through wall between dining room and kitchen, going through a picture on dining-room wall, and lodged in door on north side of dining room. This shot, in my opinion, was fired from upper porch of second barracks from river, about 10 feet nearer river than first shot described above. This examination was made by Sergt. J. B. Fugitt (who is assistant caretaker at Fort Brown) and myself. We together took the measurements and sighted along the course of the bullets and took the alignment of same. All this was done by us without the aid or suggestion of any outsider, and the opinion here expressed by me is formed from the facts as found by myself, to the best of my knowledge and belief.

CHRIST MILLER.

I, Christ Miller, do solemnly swear that the facts contained in the above and foregoing affidavit are true; so help me God.

[SEAL.] LOUIS KOWALSKI,
Clerk District Court, Cameron County, Tex.

Mr. BULKELEY. I do not want to interrupt the Senator, but I should like to ask a question. The two parties whom he has named were never before the committee, as I recollect.

Mr. WARNER. I have read their statements as affidavits. They were affidavits taken by Major Blocksom.

Mr. BULKELEY. After the committee had practically finished their investigation, if I remember correctly. Has the Senator the date of the affidavits?

Mr. WARNER. The 12th of July, 1907.

Mr. Ygnacio Garza testified before the Penrose court-martial, in regard to the shots in the Yturria House, as follows (pp. 399 and 400). As the Senator from Connecticut will remember, this fully corroborates the statement as to the location of the party during the shooting.

Mr. BULKELEY. I remember the statement.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Garza testified as follows:

Q. In whose employ were you on the night of August 13?—A. F. Yturria's.

Q. What is Mr. Yturria's business?—A. He is a merchant.

Q. Did you ever have occasion to visit his house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you visit it upon the morning of August 14?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Describe, if you know, anything unusual about its condition.—A. Yes, sir; I was notified by Teofilo Martinez, the man that was taking care of the house in Mr. Yturria's absence, and he told me there was some shots fired into the house the night of August 13.

Associate counsel for the accused:

"I object to the testimony on the ground that it is hearsay."

The judge-advocate:

"I have no reply to make. To save time I will caution the witness to confine himself to what he knows and not what people told him."

Q. Did you notice any injuries to the house upon that morning of the 14th of August.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Describe them as nearly as you can.—A. I saw some holes into the kitchen and the dining room—I think three of them—three holes made, I supposed, by bullets.

Q. In whose presence did you examine these holes?—A. In the presence of Teofilo Martinez.

Q. Who was he?—A. He was a man employed by Mr. Yturria; he was a servant there at the house.

Q. On that day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were these injuries in the house there prior to the night of August 13?—A. No, sir; I never seen them before and I used to go there every day.

Q. And they were not there on your last previous visit?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you examine them carefully?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In what way did you examine them?—A. Well, I examined them—I went up on the railing on the gallery and I saw very plain that those holes were made by shots—it seems to me they were shots fired from the barracks—from the upper gallery; come from that direction.

Q. How many of these what you call evidently bullet holes did you examine for the purpose of ascertaining their alignment?—A. Two of them.

Q. And did they both come from the same point apparently?—A. Not exactly from the same point; one come from one end of the barracks and the other from the other end; they were close together and anybody could see very plain that they were fired from different parts of the barracks.

These bullet holes in the Yturria House are conclusive evidence of the fact that it would have been impossible for the guns from which the bullets were discharged to have been fired by a person standing on the ground, and they corroborate the witnesses who testified to seeing firing from the second porch of the barracks.

Mr. President, in support of the witnesses who identified the raiders as soldiers, there are the ball cartridges, the cartridge shells, clips, and bandoleer, all part of the Springfield rifle ammunition, which were picked up in the streets of Brownsville at the points where the shooting occurred. These, together with the bullets extracted from the houses, are the strongest possible corroborative evidence. These cartridges, shells, bandoleer, and clips were picked up early in the morning of the shooting—in fact a part of them by Mayor Combe within two hours after the firing ceased. When at the mouth of the alley at the Miller Hotel he stepped, as he says, upon something—that gave a metallic sound, and on feeling down on the ground found—

one clip, one ball cartridge, and six or seven shells.

I quote from his testimony as follows:

Q. Right there, Doctor, when you say "one ball cartridge," what do you mean by that?—A. I mean a loaded cartridge.

Q. A loaded cartridge?—A. A loaded cartridge. That is a common expression.

Q. What did you do with those cartridges?—A. I went to the light to look at them, and saw, from what I had seen of these shells before, that they belonged to the Springfield rifle. I thought they did. I immediately came to that conclusion.

Q. And the clip, also?—A. Oh, yes. The cartridge fitted into the clip perfectly.

Q. Yes.—A. I put these in my pocket.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Did you notice whether they had been freshly fired?—A. No, sir; that is one thing I neglected to do. It would have been a very easy thing, because if they had been fired only two hours before they would still have the sulphurous odor, you know, after you explode a cartridge. I think you could have still detected it.

Q. But you did not notice that?—A. I did not notice it. I was satisfied. As far as I was personally concerned, I felt that this had been done by soldiers.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. This was about what time, now?—A. This was very nearly—it must have been 2 or 3 in the morning.

Doctor Combe further testified that other people the morning of the shooting picked up shells around the intersection of the alley and the street near the Miller Hotel and back in the alley toward the post.

Mr. Fred Starck, a mounted inspector of customs, on the morning of the shooting between 5 and 6 o'clock, found nine empty shells in front of his residence; his house, it will be remembered, was one of the houses that were riddled by bullets. Mr. Starck testifies:

Q. You picked up those shells, you say, about what time in the morning?—A. A little after daylight, sir, as near as I can remember. Daylight then was about 5 o'clock.

Q. I wish you would explain to the committee, if you can, the condition of those shells—if they looked as though they were freshly shot.—A. Yes, sir; they were freshly shot; we examined them. Mayor Combe and the marshal and myself examined every shell we picked up. When the mayor got to my house he had a handful of shells, and one of the policemen had a handful of shells, and they had a bandolier. I didn't see them when they got that. They told me they found it in the alley of the Miller Hotel.

Mr. McCUMBER. Would it disturb the Senator right on that point to ask him just one simple little question, which possibly he can answer in one word?

Mr. WARNER. It will be no disturbance whatever.

Mr. McCUMBER. There was some testimony I understand about some six or seven shells and the cases in which the shells are kept found in a space about 10 inches in diameter. Was there any explanation given as to how so many of those shells were found in one little pile?

Mr. WARNER. None as I remember. As appeared before the court-martial proceeding, they were found in a space of some 10 to 15 inches. But I think I shall cover that part of it.

Mr. Starck continues:

When I got there they had these in their hands. The mayor of the city, the marshal, and myself examined these shells, and they were new shells—had just been recently fired.

Q. How do you know they had been recently fired?—A. I have fired many a cartridge myself, sir, and can tell.

Q. The shells had a fresh appearance?—A. Yes, sir; you could tell by the primer; the primer had just been struck—that is, the cap. And I can tell a shell that has been recently fired and one that has laid over to get cold.

Q. And those shells there were recently fired?—A. Yes, sir. (P. 2347.)

* * * * * * *

Captain Macklin shortly after daylight on the morning of August 14 picked up at the mouth of the Cowen alley approximately, as he says, six clips and seven shells which he recognized as ammunition of the Springfield rifle. This is his account of finding the shells and clips:

Q. You have no doubt of that, have you?—A. I feel satisfied in my own mind that they were Springfield shells; yes, sir. I have seen some shells, though, that looked very similar; just about the same kind of a shell, of another make.

Q. They were Springfield clips that you found there?—A. Yes, sir; the ones we used.

Q. So, as far as you could judge, they were shells and clips of the ammunition of the Springfield rifle?—A. As far as I could judge, yes, sir; I think it was.

Q. What did you do with those shells?—A. I showed them to Major Penrose first, and then took them to my quarters. He told me to keep them.

Q. What did Major Penrose say when you showed them to him?—A. He said it looked bad.

Q. What else?—A. I do not recall anything else, sir. (P. 1802.)

Here permit me to make a slight digression. Captain Macklin further says that some of his men told him that the first firing was toward the barracks. The following is his testimony on this point:

Q. I am not asking you that. We will come to that. I ask you what the men said to you, whether it was toward or over the barracks—the first shooting?—A. The men told me that the first shooting was toward the barracks.

Q. Where did they say the men were who did the shooting?—A. They said the first firing appeared to be directly in rear of B Company, about where the alley is.

Q. About where you found those shells?—A. Yes, sir; that is where the alley is; yes, sir.

Q. And they told you the men were there near the barracks, and shooting at the barracks?—A. Shooting toward the barracks.

Q. Did you make an inspection of the barracks to see if any shot had hit it?—A. I did; an investigation of my own. That is, I did not go on the roof. I went on the porches.

Q. Did you find any evidence?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did that strike you as being a little bit peculiar, Captain, that men standing off within a hundred feet, shooting at the barracks, would miss it?—A. Well, I don not see how anyone could miss it at that distance.

Q. Did it strike you as being singular?—A. Well, it did seem a little strange; yes, sir.

Q. Did you question the men further about it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you ask them?—A. I went into the thing in every way that I possibly could, and they have never changed.

Q. Still claim that they were shooting at the barracks?—A. Toward the barracks, sir.

Q. Toward the barracks?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say that they seemed to have the impression that the barracks was being attacked?—A. Did I say that, sir?

Q. That the men had that impression?—A. Oh, yes; the men had that impression. There are two or three men of my company who told me about the first part of the shooting, and they gave those remarks that were supposed to have been made outside of the wall; the language I don't think I should repeat here.

Q. We might just as well have it.—A. "Come out, you black ———

———.

Q. That is, shouting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And shooting toward the barracks?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did that strike you as a little singular, that the men would stand out there and shout that way, and shoot and not hit the barracks?—A. Well, I don't know, Senator; it did some way strike me as a little singular. (Pp. 1792–1793.)

This statement carries upon its face the evidence of its improbability, and suggests strongly the untold knowledge of the real facts possessed by the soldiers.

Returning to Captain Macklin's testimony upon the finding of the shells, he says:

Q. Did you tell Major Penrose about the circumstances of your finding those shells?—A. I told him when I found them.

Q. And where you found them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And how they were placed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And all about it?—A. Yes, sir; as near as I can recollect. He stood on the inside of the wall, right along there, looking down that alley—that is as near as I can recollect.

Q. Now, Captain Macklin, you made a statement, did you not, in this case when it was being investigated by Colonel Lovering?—A. I did make a statement before him; I think it was a very brief one. He asked me mostly about my men; about the trouble that my men had had, and that they had reported to me; that was the nature of his investigation.

Q. You knew that Colonel Lovering was trying to find out who it was did the shooting, whether it was the soldiers or the citizens, did you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was your understanding?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were anxious, were you not, about giving him all the assistance you could?—A. Yes, sir; in every way.

Q. The fact is, Captain, that as an officer you were attached to your command, were you not?—A. I was very fond of them, Senator.

Q. And you were anxious that whatever there might be that would show that they were not guilty of this charge should be developed, were you not?—A. Yes, sir; I have worked to that end for the last eight months.

Q. And are still working at it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In your statement I find nothing about these shells—that is, in your statement to Colonel Lovering.—A. In that examination, Senator, I was not asked to make a statement. I was asked questions. They wanted mere facts. In going into an explanation of the details of things I was told that they did not want that, that facts were all they wanted.

Q. Was not that a fact, your finding those shells?—A. Oh, yes; but he told me to confine myself to the answers to the questions that he asked me.

Q. Did you attempt ever to tell him of those shells?—A. I do not recall that I did; I do not know, sir.

Q. Do you mean to say that Colonel Lovering prevented you from giving him any information?—A. No, sir; I don't want to imply that at all, sir; not in the least.

* * * * * * *

Again, in answer to Senator Overman, Captain Macklin said:

Q. Did you go out any farther than the garrison road?—A. By the garrison road, do you mean that alley?

Q. No; I mean the garrison road, right along by the wall.—A. I went in there just a little, toward the alley.

Q. Why didn't you continue up the road?—A. I found those, and I was satisfied.

Q. Satisfied of what?—A. I was satisfied I had found the shells—what I was looking for.

Q. You were looking for shells, and you found shells that, in your opinion, had been shot out of the Springfield rifle?—A. I thought so at that time; yes, sir.

Q. And that satisfied you; that was as far as you wanted to go?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were satisfied, then, that your men had done it?—A. I did not say that.

Q. Not your men, but the soldiers of the battalion?—A. Well, it looked that way; yes, sir.

* * * * * * *

Q. But, captain—it seems to be the thing to ask for opinions here—from these shells being found, and what you heard of other shells and ammunition, the shells and balls, and so forth, that were found, did you form any opinion as to whether it was some of the battalion who did the shooting?—A. You mean at the time?

Q. Yes.—A. At the time I thought it was some of the men of the battalion; yes, sir. That next morning I felt satisfied it was some men of the battalion.

* * * * * * *

There was nothing in the position in which the shells and clips were found that led Captain Macklin to doubt that the soldiers of the battalion did the shooting.

Major Penrose in his evidence before the committee, with reference to the shells picked up by Captain Macklin, testified (pp. 3034 to 3036):

Q. The next morning you got up about 5 o'clock?—A. Yes, sir; certainly as early as that.

Q. And the first thing that you did was to examine the barracks?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You commenced with which barracks?—A. I commenced with C Company barracks.

Q. That is, on the east end of the barracks?—A. The east end.

Q. You examined downstairs and upstairs?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. As I understand from your testimony, you examined all except the roof?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You examined B barracks thoroughly?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You examined D barracks thoroughly?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Both the upper and lower galleries?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To see if there were any physical evidences of your post having been attacked?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You found none?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did that make no impression upon you whatever?—A. Yes, sir; it did then.

Q. What impression did that make upon you, Major?—A. That impression—I commenced to think, then, that maybe Doctor Combe's report to me the night before might have been true, that my men did the firing.

Q. Notwithstanding that you had had the report of your commissioned officers and noncommissioned officers, the scavenger, and the guard the night before?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you heard their statements?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And yet, with the character of your men before you, their discipline, and all of that, the physical fact presented to you the next morning led you to think—that is, from the examination of the barracks I am speaking of now———A. Yes, sir; I understand you.

Q. I want to get that first. There was nobody had said anything to you then as to the circumstances under which they had seen your men?—A. Simply what Mayor Combe had told me; nothing more than that, at that time.

Q. How long did it take you to make this inspection of the barracks?—A. Well, I presume it was half or three-quarters of an hour; I don't know exactly, sir.

Q. It was daylight, of course, or you could not have inspected them?—A. Yes, sir; I waited until it was daylight.

Q. Half or three-quarters of an hour—of course I do not expect you to know exactly.—A. Yes, sir; that is about it.

Q. You inspected those barracks, and you found no evidence at all?—A. None at all.

Q. Of any attack upon the fort?—A. Of any bullet marks.

Q. Well, of any attack on the fort? You found no evidence of any attack on the post?—A. No, sir; there were no scars, bullet scars, of any kind.

Q. Well, I do not care about scars, or anything else———A. And that was the only thing I was looking for.

Q. Major Penrose, I asked you a question; I do not care whether they were scars or anything else. Did you find from the physical examination any evidence whatever that the post had been attacked?—A. No, sir; not at all.

Q. It was then that you directed Captain Macklin to make an examination for shells?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. After you had gotten through the inspection of the barracks—that is correct?—A. That is correct.
Q. Where were you when you directed Captain Macklin to make this inspection?—A. I was right at the gate. I met him at the gate.
Q. Standing at the gate?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And he went along by the wall?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Which way did he go first? Did he go down by the river front first?—A. No; he went up toward the alley.
Q. He went up toward the alley, along the garrison wall?—A. The garrison road.
Q. And you stood there?—A. I stood there for a while.
Q. Right at the gate?—A. Just inside of the gate. I don't know that I was exactly at the gate. I think I was inside the gate. I don't think I went out.
Q. You would not undertake, of course, at this time, to tell where you were standing every minute?—A. No, sir; not at any time.
Q. But this was some time between 5 and 6 o'clock you were standing there?—A. Yes, sir; it was between 5 and a little after 6, I think, probably.
Q. You were there until after 6?—A. I think it was a little after 6; yes, sir.
Q. Now, Captain Macklin came back to you with certain shells and clips?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did you see him pick those shells and clips up?—A. No, sir; I did not. I do not recall seeing him pick them up at all.
Q. And when he showed you those shells and clips—this was after you had made the inspection of the barracks—and with all your attachment to the men and confidence in them, you said to Captain Macklin, "My men have done this shooting?"—A. Yes, sir; I said, "I believe my men have done this shooting."

Mr. President, it is an undisputed fact that every commissioned officer of the colored battalion, from Major Penrose down, on the morning of August 14, 1906, and within a few hours after the shooting, came to the conclusion that the raiders were soldiers of the colored battalion. These officers, after being with the colored battalion for weeks thereafter, with full knowledge of every step that had been taken to show, if possible, that the men were not connected with the shooting, remained of the opinion that some of the men were actively engaged in the affray.

Major Penrose, who had seen active service for more than a score of years, and of all men most interested in vindicating the soldiers of his command, did not commence to change his opinion as to the guilt of some of the soldiers, until, as he testified, at the close of the testimony for the prosecution in his trial before the court-martial. This was some eight months after the affray, every day of which time up to the time of their discharge he had been with the battalion. The reason for changing his mind, as stated by himself, is as follows:

Q. Major, that night you ordered an inspection of the ammunition, did you not?—A. That night?
Q. The night of the 13th.—A. Yes, sir; of the ammunition and the rifles.
Q. A count of the rifles?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. That is, a verification?—A. A verification of the rifles and ammunition.
Q. And a verification of the number of the men?—A. Yes, sir; I ordered a verification of the men. I ordered a roll call immediately after Doctor Combe came in.
Q. And you also ordered an inspection to be made in the morning of the rifles?—A. As soon as it was daylight—light enough to see.
Q. And, as you have stated, a report was made to you that all the ammunition was there and the men were all there excepting two, who were accounted for, I believe you said?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. The rifles had been inspected and found free from powder?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. All of this was reported to you on the morning of the 14th?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And notwithstanding all of this, as commander of that battalion and having all these facts before you, you believed that some of the battalion—you did not know—had engaged in this shooting up of the town of Brownsville?—A. Yes, sir. If you will remember, Senator, I gave my reasons for it.
Q. I understand. You have given that on your direct examination, Major. I do not wish to take up the record with that, but I just wanted to get the fact.—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And you sent the telegram which was put in the record on yesterday, and then you made the report of the 15th of August?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. You had continued all day of the 14th, had you not, to investigate?—A. All the 14th; yes, sir.
Q. And also continued on the 15th?—A. On the 15th; yes, sir; and daily.
Q. And if I remember your testimony before the court-martial, upon looking at your carbon copy you found that that report of the 15th was written on the night of the 15th of August?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. That is correct, is it?—A. Yes, sir; that is correct.
Q. So that you had all of this time to get all of the evidence you could, and the reports from all of your officers, and up to that time you were satisfied that some of the men of your battalion were engaged in this shooting up of the town of Brownsville?—A. Yes, sir; I was.
Q. Now, Major, you continued on, as you assured these parties that you would continue, to make all the investigation you could to ascertain the guilty parties, did you not?—A. I did, sir.
Q. From day to day?—A. From day to day, up to the time the men were discharged.
Q. Yes. I find in Senate Document 155, at page 105, a report of yours made to the military secretary of the Department of Texas, dated September 20. You are familiar with that report?—A. Yes, sir. That is the one in which I made certain recommendations, is it not?
Q. Yes.—A. Yes, sir; I am perfectly familiar with it.
Q. I do not care about taking the time to read it all. That was more than a month after the shooting up of the town of Brownsville?—A. Yes, sir; that was more than a month; it was on the 20th.
Q. And you still continued of the opinion that some members of your battalion were connected with the shooting up of the town of Brownsville?—A. I did, sir, at that time. My letter, I think, shows that very plainly, sir.
Q. Yes. There will be no question, I take it, from your letter.—A. That is right, sir.
Q. And if I remember correctly from your testimony of yesterday, you remained of that opinion until your court-martial was on?—A. That is right, sir.
Q. And what was the date of the court-martial, so that we may have it in the record?—A. It commenced on February 4, sir.
Q. Did you modify or change your opinion on February 4 of this year?—A. No, sir; not on February 4 of this year.
Q. How late in the proceedings of your court-martial was it before you modified your opinion as to some members of your battalion being connected with this shooting up of the town of Brownsville?—A. I commenced to change my opinion very radically after the close of the prosecution.
Q. From evidence introduced there?—A. From evidence introduced by the prosecution.
Q. Major, in your own way, so that we will have the full benefit of it, what evidence that had been introduced was it that led you to modify or change your opinion?—A. Well, sir, there were very few that could state, to my satisfaction at all events, that they saw any soldiers that night. The distances which they gave—I am speaking of the witnesses generally——
Q. Yes.—A. (Continuing.) That they could see and distinguish the men as being negroes and soldiers, and dressed in uniform, I knew were such that it was absolutely impossible on that night.
Q. Yes. Was there anything else?—A. No, sir; I think that was the principal thing.
Q. What was the date of the close of the prosecution?—A. The prosecution closed on the 23d. I think it was the 23d of March.
Senator SCOTT. That would be Saturday, Major?
The WITNESS. Yes, sir; that is right. It was Saturday that they closed.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Then up to that time you had not modified nor changed your opinion?—A. Not until the prosecution was closed; no, sir.
Q. I say up until that time?—A. Senator, if I might be permitted, I might change my answer to that.
Q. Certainly.—A. I would say that my mind was undergoing a process of changing all the time, but it became very decisive at the end of the prosecution.
Q. Did you ever make a report, after the report of September 20, 1906, to your superior officers, showing any change in your opinion?—A. No, sir.
Q. Your report of September 20 recommended very drastic measures, did it not?—A. Yes, sir; it did.
Q. You then believed, and continued to believe, until your mind began to change?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. (Continuing.) That those measures should be adopted?—A. I did, sir.
Q. And you were then of that opinion when the order for the discharge without honor of these men was issued?—A. I still was, sir.

By Senator SCOTT:

Q. If I may be allowed to interject one question here. Major, have you ever been able, since that shooting, to find out what motive these colored troops could have for shooting up the town?—A. Never, sir. I never could conceive any motive at all for it.
Q. Then, if you could not conceive a motive for them shooting up the town, why did you originally form an opinion that they had done it?—A. Because, sir, shells were brought to me that had been picked up in the streets of Brownsville on the morning of the 14th, and because of the absence of any bullet holes in the barracks.
Senator SCOTT. Yes. I believe that was your testimony of yesterday. That is all. Excuse me, Senator, for interrupting.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Can you conceive of any motive for the citizens of Brownsville shooting up their own town?—A. No, sir; I can not. (P. 1952.)

On the 21st day of March, 1907, when a witness in his own behalf before the court-martial, on being questioned in regard to his letter of August 15, 1906, in which he had stated (C. M., p. 1183):

From testimony gathered by the citizens' committee and given to me by Doctor Combe, I believe from seven to ten men were implicated in this matter. Some of them must have had a key to the gun rack, and, after checkroll call was taken—for all were reported present at 11 p. m. roll call—they slipped out of quarters, did the shooting, returned while the companies were forming, and at some time during the early hours of the morning cleaned their rifles. This is made possible from the fact that the shooting all occurred within two short blocks of the barracks. There is nothing to correct in that, I suppose?—A. Not as written on the 15th of August.

he testified:

Q. In connection with this letter of yours, just read, I will ask you if you have ever found any clew of any kind, or any evidence, that positively satisfies your mind that your men actually did that shooting.—A. No, sir. You ask if I found any evidence?
Q. Yes, sir.—A. No, sir.
Q. Well, do you know of any clew or information of any kind that satisfies your mind absolutely on this point?—A. That my men did not do the shooting?
Q. Did or did not.—A. No, sir; I have had testimony since then—I have heard testimony and read testimony that has changed my views somewhat from the first.
Q. That was your belief as expressed in that letter?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. On that particular point?—A. Yes, sir.

Even at that late date it will be seen that his belief as to the guilt of some of his soldiers had only been "somewhat" changed.

Mr. President, it is well known that there is no officer connected with troops whose opportunities to obtain information regarding the command are better than are those of the adjutant. In the first place, he is the right hand of the commanding officer, and is in daily contact with the line officers. This position at Fort Brown was held by Lieutenant Grier. He it was who, in the absence of Captain Macklin, took command of C Company upon the call to arms. Lieutenant Grier testified (pp. 1722 to 1724):

Q. As I understand, the next morning after the shooting you were convinced that men of the battalion were engaged in the shooting up of the town of Brownsville?—A. In a manner similar to that in which he was. In other words, the circumstantial evidence was such that no reasonable man could think, hardly, but what some soldiers had been implicated in it.

Q. Yes.—A. Because civilians do not usually carry around bandoliers and Government ammunition——

Q. No.—A. (Continuing.) For one thing—that is, ordinarily.

Q. So that no reasonable man would come to any other conclusion.—A. At that time.

Q. And after coming to that conclusion, you remained of that opinion until the men were discharged without honor?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was that?—A. That was sometime late in November; I think from about the 20th to the 26th of the month it took to discharge those men.

Q. And you were continually endeavoring to find out all you could regarding this shooting, were you not?—A. I was.

Senator SCOTT. May I ask him one question right there, if it will not interrupt you?

Senator WARNER. Certainly.

By Senator SCOTT:

Q. You say you tried to find out who did the shooting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you trying to find out whether somebody else than the soldiers did it, or were you trying to fix the blame on the soldiers?—A. I was in a position, stationed at Fort Reno, where we could only get one side of the story. It would be impossible to get anything else. The soldiers never volunteered any information about the townspeople doing the shooting—never claimed so. They said they didn't know who did it, but they had not.

Q. But you did not try to find out whether somebody else did it but the soldiers. You were trying to fasten it on the soldiers?—A. Yes, sir; I was trying to find out something from the soldiers.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. The question was asked you, and I do not want it to remain in that way, whether you were trying to fasten it on the soldiers?—A. No, sir; I was not trying to fasten it on the soldiers, but I was trying to find out from some of the old men of the regiment, who had been with the regiment before I was born, that I knew were good old men, and would tell the truth, something to clear them.

Q. That is, it is a fact, is it not, Lieutenant, that instead of trying to fasten it on the soldiers, you were attached to your command, as any other officer would be?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that you were trying to clear them?—A. Yes, sir; that was my idea, to clear them, and if it had been any of the soldiers, to punish the four or five who did it. I wanted to get hold of those who did it, to save the rest of them.

Q. To save the rest of the command?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. And so you remained of this opinion, that a bunch of the soldiers had done the shooting up of Brownsville, from the 13th of August until what day, was it?—A. About the 20th of November.

Q. The 20th of November?—A. Up until the time General Garlington came to the post and delivered the ultimatum to the troops.

Q. What was there about that ultimatum that changed your opinion? What fact was there there that could possibly change your opinion, Lieutenant?—A. It was not the ultimatum itself, but it was the effect of it. When these men did not come up and give up anybody—the names of anybody implicated in that raid—when they knew if they did not there was not any joke about it, but they would all go out of the service, and I knew old men like Sergeant Sanders, that I have seen personally handle the meanest kind of a soldier, and handle him mighty well, I began right then to think there was considerable doubt about it. You could not convince me that a bad crowd could keep them from telling what they knew.

Q. Then you came to the conclusion that Sergeant Sanders did not know it?—A. Yes, sir. (P. 1724.)

Q. Did that convince you that nobody in the command did it?—A. I say there was a number of old soldiers.

Q. How many old soldiers did you talk to?—A. I talked to 50 or 100 of them; almost every one I met.

Q. And none of them suggested that the citizens had done the shooting?—A. They never said so.

Q. Not one of them?—A. They said they didn't know who did it, but that they did not.

Q. Did Sergeant Sanders, in any talk that you had with him, ever give you any fact that would indicate that the shooting was done by citizens?—A. No, sir; he did not.

Q. Or by parties other than the soldiers?—A. No, sir; he did not.

Q. Major Penrose, to your knowledge, continued the investigation after your arrival at Fort Reno?—A. Yes, sir. (P. 1724.)

After giving his approval to the recommendation made by Major Penrose, that all restrictions should be removed from the men, and detectives placed among them, Lieutenant Grier further testified (p. 1725):

Q. You think if the first suggestion of Major Penrose had been adopted and the restrictions had been removed from the men and some detectives had been placed among them it would have had better results?—A. Yes, sir; and then, maybe, they would have gotten to talking.

Q. But when it was kept shoved up to them all the time, as you say——A. Kept constantly in front of them, in every shape and manner.

Q. That put them on their guard and had a tendency to prevent them from talking?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is your opinion?—A. Yes, sir.

Further on Lieutenant Grier said (pp. 1743 and 1744):

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Now, Lieutenant, one or two questions only. If I understand your testimony, you were anxious, exceedingly anxious, were you not, that the reputation of your command should be protected?—A. Yes, sir, I certainly was.

Q. And that the innocent men should be cleared, if possible, from this charge against them, that they had been guilty of shooting up the town of Brownsville?—A. Yes, sir; I was.

Q. And you were not conducting any examination for the purpose of showing that they were guilty, but you wanted to get at the facts, and were anxious, if possible, to show that they were not guilty, were you not?—A. Yes, sir; that was my idea.

Q. That is true; yes.

Senator FORAKER. But nevertheless he proceeded upon the assumption that they were guilty, after he saw the shells.

Senator WARNER. May I proceed with this witness?

Senator FORAKER. Excuse me. I thought you were through.

* * * * * * *

Q. I asked you about your examination and that of the other officers, that you were anxious, if possible, to get some evidence that would remove the charge against the battalion. That is a fact, is it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Major Blocksom was there and made an examination?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you want this committee to understand that he was unfair in his examination?—A. I have never even insinuated that he was.

Q. No; I do not understand that you did; nor that he assumed that the soldiers were guilty?—A. No, sir; I do not think he did.

Q. No; no assumption of that kind. Do you want the committee to understand that General Garlington was unfair?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or that he assumed that the soldiers were guilty?—A. No, sir. I give them credit for being honest, exactly the same way I was; that whatever evidence there was in existence was against the men.

Q. It was your desire to get hold of the guilty and clear the others?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To segregate, possibly, some that were guilty?—A. Yes, sir; those who did it; to get the four or five that were guilty and to save the other soldiers who were not guilty.

Q. You had frequent talks with Major Blocksom when he was there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And with General Garlington?—A. No, sir; not with him.

Q. He was in Major Penrose's quarters?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he was consulting with him as to what was to be done?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Freely?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were consulting among yourselves as to what was to be done?—A. Consulting among ourselves almost every time we met as to what the men had said. (P. 1744.)

I quote further from this officer's testimony (pp. 1747 and 1748):

By Senator SCOTT:

Q. I want to ask the lieutenant a question or two before he goes off the stand. Lieutenant, as I understand your testimony, after the shooting up and the finding of these clips and shells I understand that that made an impression upon your mind and upon the minds of the other officers that it had been done by the men of the battalion?—A. Yes, sir; that, with the fact—let me put in there—that all the bullet holes were on houses in town and we could not find any in the barracks, and that ammunition.

Q. After the shooting up, and the discussion and investigation, and your inability to find out from any of the soldiers in the battalion, as I understand you, you have changed your mind, and you do not believe that the shooting was done by any of the members of the three companies?

Senator WARNER. The witness has not said that.

A. No, sir; I do not state that.

Senator SCOTT. Now, I am a layman; just let me go along in my own way. I want to see what he thinks now, or what he thought afterwards.

I want to know what the witness thinks; I want his opinion about it.

The WITNESS. I stated yesterday that my mind was open on the question at the present time, and by that I mean that supposing that within the time between August 13th and November 20th certain men would be accused and tried as being implicated in that Brownsville affray, I would not at that time have felt competent to sit on the court, because I had prejudged the whole case against them, but now I could. I could sit on any court, and hear evidence for and against and make up my mind.

By Senator SCOTT:

Q. Did you, or any of the officers to your knowledge, follow any clue as to whether anybody other than the soldiers might have done that shooting?—A. We had none. They got us right out of Brownsville.

By Senator BULKELEY:

Q. As I understand it, what you mean to say at this time is that you do not fix the shooting up of Brownsville any more on the troops at present on your own mind than you do on anybody else?—A. No, sir; I do not know. (Pp. 1747 and 1748.)

Captain Lyon testified that upon the first report by Mayor Combe as to the shooting up of the town he did not believe that the soldiers were engaged in it because of his knowledge of the men and the reputation of the battalion, and because, in his opinion, there was a lack of motive for the men to raid the town; but he was equally frank in saying that he could see no motive upon the part of the citizens to shoot up the town. Following, in part, is his testimony (pp. 1871 and 1872):

Q. Could you see any motive for the citizens themselves to fire upon the town?

Senator FORAKER. Upon the barracks, you mean?

Senator WARNER. No; upon the town.

Senator FORAKER. Oh!

A. We had no proof then that the town had been fired into at all, except that this policeman had been wounded and this man Natus had been killed.

Q. But you had the statement of Mayor Combe, the mayor of the city?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you afterwards did learn, as a fact, that one man was killed, did you not—that is, it was so stated as a fact?—A. Yes, sir; so stated as a fact. (P. 1871.)

Q. And that one man was wounded, and lost an arm?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that a considerable number of houses had been fired into in the town?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You heard all that, did you not?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. You did afterwards know an examination was made of the barracks and no evidence could be found upon either of them or anywhere about the fort of any shots being fired at or toward the barracks or the fort or over it, did you not?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. You knew that fact?—A. I beg your pardon?
Q. That is correct, I say?—A. Yes, sir; I know it was stated as a fact. I made no examination myself, and I know just what I heard about it.
Q. Did those facts make any impression upon you as to whom the parties were who did the shooting up of the town of Brownsville?—A. As I have stated, sir. After these shells were found and these clips, I was of the opinion that some of our men had done some shooting that night.
Q. When you came to that conclusion upon seeing those shells and when you learned afterwards, which seemed to be from reliable sources, that a man had been killed in town and another wounded and that the officer's horse had been shot and various buildings had been fired into, did that not strengthen your belief that some soldiers had been engaged in the shooting?—A. I retained that opinion about some of our men having done some of the shooting for a considerable period, as I stated in answer to a previous question here.
Q. Captain, you retained that opinion; notwithstanding that you had made the roll calls of which you speak and you had made the inspection of the guns of which you speak, and all of that in the intervening time, yet you retained that opinion?—A. That inspection and the roll calls made were made only, so far as I was concerned, in my own company.
Q. Well, you understood that similar roll calls had been made and inspections; you understood that?—A. I supposed they had; yes, sir.
Q. And notwithstanding all that you retained the opinion that some of the soldiers had been engaged in the shooting?—A. Yes, sir; for quite a considerable time. (P. 1872.)

Lieutenant Lawrason, who was in command of B Company on the night of the affray, after speaking of the fact that Captain Macklin exhibited to him the shells and clips picked up near the mouth of the Cowen alley, testified in part (p. 1633):

Q. Did those clips and cases make any impression on you as to who did the shooting?—A. Upon seeing those I became of the opinion that the soldiers had done the shooting.
Q. Did you communicate your impression to anyone?—A. Not that I recollect, sir, although it is quite possible that I did.
Q. Did you talk to your first sergeant about that, Mingo Sanders?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. What did he say?—A. I don't recollect that he expressed himself on the subject. I remember telling him that the evidence pointed to the soldiers having done the shooting, that clips and cartridges had been picked up in town.
Q. You afterwards saw other shells, did you not, that had been picked up?—A. No; those are the only shells I have ever seen.
Q. You have not seen any of the others?—A. No, sir. (P. 1633.)

Q. You stated that the next morning, after you saw these clips and shells, you came to the conclusion that the men had done this firing. State whether or not you have changed your belief.—A. It seems to me that during the time that has elapsed these men all having been discharged, by this time we should have heard something about who did it; but I know of no direct evidence that has come out to fix it on these men, and I think there is a question—there has certainly one begun to arise in my mind—as to whether the shooting was actually done by the soldiers.
Q. You begin to think now that they may not have been guilty at all, notwithstanding some of these clips and shells may have been picked up?—A. Yes, sir; a question has begun to arise in my mind.
Q. If it should be demonstrated to your satisfaction by the testimony taken before this committee that all the shells picked up that have been produced and examined were fired at some other place than at Brownsville, would not that change your mind entirely on that subject?—A. I would consider it a point in favor of the men, if it did not entirely change my mind.
Q. In that event, the clips and shells would be no evidence at all, would they, of their having participated in the firing?—A. No, sir; I believe that that would counteract that evidence. (P. 1651.)

Captain Macklin testified as follows:

Q. The fact is, Captain, that as an officer you were attached to your command, were you not?—A. I was very fond of them, Senator.
Q. And you were anxious that whatever there might be that would show that they were not guilty of this charge should be developed, were you not?—A. Yes, sir; I have worked to that end for the last eight months.
Q. And are still working at it?—A. Yes, sir. (P. 1803.)

* * * * * * *

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Did you go out any farther than the Garrison road?—A. By the Garrison road, do you mean that alley?
Q. No; I mean the Garrison road, right along by the wall.—A. I went in there just a little, toward the alley.
Q. Why didn't you continue up the road?—A. I found those, and I was satisfied.
Q. Satisfied of what?—A. I was satisfied I had found the shells—what I was looking for.
Q. You were looking for shells, and you found shells that, in your opinion, had been shot out of the Springfield rifle?—A. I thought so at that time; yes, sir.
Q. And that satisfied you; that was as far as you wanted to go?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. You were satisfied then, that your men had done it?—A. I did not say that.
Q. Not your men, but the soldiers of the battalion?—A. Well, it looked that way; yes, sir.
Q. Then you have satisfied yourself, by reading this testimony before the court-martial, that your men did not do it?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. The court-martial has found that your men did it upon that same testimony, isn't that so?—A. I can not give the finding of the court-martial, sir.
Q. I say, the same testimony that you have read, which has convinced you that your men did not do it, convinced the court-martial that they did do it—isn't that true?—A. I am told that that is the way it is.
Q. Isn't that true—you heard my question?—A. Yes, sir.
Senator OVERMAN. That is all. (P. 1805.)

* * * * * * *

By Senator WARNER:

Q. But, Captain—it seems to be the thing to ask for opinions here—from these shells being found, and what you heard of other shells and ammunition, the shells and balls, and so forth, that were found, did you form an opinion as to whether or not it was some of the battalion who did the shooting?—A. You mean at the time?
Q. Yes.—A. At the time I thought it was some of the men of the battalion; yes, sir. That next morning I felt satisfied it was some men of the battalion.
Q. And you remained satisfied how long?—A. I can't tell you how long, but there are a good many things that came up in the daily life of the men—my questioning them and being in close contact with them and seeing their discharge, and everything—that almost satisfied me that they did not know anything about it or had nothing to do with it.
Q. Just because they did not tell?—A. Well perhaps that did have something to do with it. (P. 1807.)

Mr. President, in connection with the change of opinion on the part of the officers there is one fact which, in my judgment, had an influence—if not a controlling influence—on them. That fact is the ordering of the court-martial to try Major Penrose and Captain Macklin on the charge of neglect of duty, in reference to the Brownsville affray.

The order convening the Penrose court-martial was issued December 20, 1906, and the order for the Macklin court-martial was issued on the 16th day of January, 1907. It is worthy of note that up to the time these orders were issued neither Major Penrose nor Captain Macklin had expressed a doubt, as far as the evidence shows, that soldiers of the colored battalion actively participated in the Brownsville affray.

That the court-martial of the commanding officers and Captain Macklin produced a change of feeling on the part of these officers, and that the esprit de corps of the regiment has affected the other officers so that all those officers look eagerly to any circumstance to exculpate the men of their command, there is no doubt. This is clearly shown by the testimony.

Mr. President, it is claimed that none of the soldiers could have done the shooting, because shortly after daylight the morning of the raid every gun of the battalion, on inspection, was found to be free from powder stains, and that between the time of the firing and the time of inspection there was no opportunity to clean the guns. As to the time required to clean a gun there was a wide difference of opinion—the enlisted men giving the time from ten minutes to an hour. In this testimony there is much conflict and exaggeration.

I do not regard the question of the time in which a gun could be cleaned of very great materiality in the case, for the reason that six hours elapsed between the time the guns were fired and the inspection by the officers; during all of this time the guns were under the control of the noncommissioned officers. The commissioned officers admitted on the witness stand, that if they had believed on the night of the raid that the firing had been done by some of the soldiers (which they did believe the next morning) they would not have left the keys to the arm racks and storerooms in charge of the noncommissioned officers, but would have taken possession of them themselves. This defense depends upon the proposition that no one of the noncommissioned officers either took part in the raid or was privy to it, or, after it occurred, was willing to aid the raiders in concealing their identity.

This assumption is not tenable; some of the noncommissioned officers were in a position to render it impossible for them to have been ignorant of the identity of the men who did the shooting, yet these men are the ones who had the keys to the arm racks and storerooms and a full opportunity to allow the cleaning of the guns in the interval between the time of the firing and the inspection in the morning.

The admission, Mr. President, of the commissioned officers that they would not have left the keys to the arm racks and storerooms in possession of the noncommissioned officers if they had believed that soldiers had been engaged in the affray, in itself an admission that the circumstance of finding all the guns free from powder stain so long after the shooting, is not persuasive that the guns were not used on the night of the affray.

The theory that those engaged in the shooting could not have cleaned their guns so as to remove all powder stain is thoroughly discredited by the fact that Major Penrose, Captains Lyon and Macklin, Lieutenants Grier and Lawrason, the next day after the firing were convinced that some of the soldiers of the battalion were engaged in the affray, although they then knew that an inspection showed the guns free from powder stain. And, Mr. President, these officers had themselves made the inspection. Major Penrose in his report of August 15, to which I have called attention, says:

> They (the soldiers) slipped out of quarters, did the shooting, returned while the companies were forming and at some time during the early hours of the morning cleaned their rifles; this was made possible by the fact that the shooting all occurred within two short blocks of the barracks.

At the time Major Penrose made his report he was not ignorant of the inspection that had been made of the guns and the ammunition, for that inspection was made by his orders and under his immediate supervision, and its result had been reported to him. And, although he and the other commissioned officers have "had a change of heart" not one of them give as a reason for that change any doubt as to the opportunity of the soldiers to clean their guns or to secure surplus ammunition.

Mr. President, it is established by the evidence, that the Springfield cartridge powder stains caused by firing are much more easily removed within an hour or two after the discharge than when the gun is allowed to remain for a day or so. For the purpose of cleaning the barrel each Springfield rifle is provided with a cleaning outfit consisting of a thong or cleaning string with a brush wiper; at one end of the thong is a metal top in which a rag for cleaning purposes can be inserted; this cleaning out, together with a small bottle of oil, is carried in the butt of the gun. The enlisted men of the colored battalion, almost to a man, testified that this cleaning outfit was practically useless in cleaning the barrel of the gun. This testimony, I think, is an exaggeration as a reading of the evidence clearly shows. Lieutenant Grier (as to the usefulness of this thong and its attachments) testified:

Q. Is there a thong or cleaning string of any kind kept in the butt of the piece, together with the brush wiper?—A. Yes.

Q. Is that thong provided with a metal top in which a rag can be inserted?—A. Yes.

Q. And the rifle can be cleaned in that way effectively, in case one has a piece of rag?—A. Yes; it can be. I think it is a longer operation.

Q. It takes longer, doubtless, than it does with a ramrod; but in case a rifle is cleaned within a very short time after it has been fired, and particularly if only a dozen or fifteen shots have been fired from it, is it a very difficult operation to remove powder stains at that time?—A. Not particularly so; no.

Q. And even with this thong and a piece of oiled rag, how long would it take a man to clean a rifle so that the barrel would show no signs of powder for a number of hours at any rate after it was cleaned?—A. You mean just the barrel itself, not the whole gun?

Q. Just the barrel and the end of the breech bolt; not the whole gun.—A. It would take five to seven minutes, I should say, to clean it well.

Q. Do you wish to change that testimony any?—A. Well, it depends on the conditions. They specified there a certain number of shots, and the rifle cleaned within a few hours after the firing?

Q. Yes.—A. I am taking a gun that was fired, say, to-night, and cleaned to-morrow morning; and that makes a difference.

Q. Well, if it was fired at 12 o'clock and cleaned at 6 o'clock, it would be only a few hours, would it?—A. Yes, sir; that would be longer. The quicker you get at cleaning a gun after it is fired, the easier it is to clean it.

Q. So that with this appliance that you have spoken of here, if the soldier attempted to clean the gun within an hour or two after it was fired, it would be a relatively easy job compared with what it would be if it remained a number of hours?—A. Yes, sir; much easier.

Q. And if he attempted to clean it within two or three hours or such a matter after the firing, the testimony you gave before the court-martial as to the time for cleaning is correct, is it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you still adhere to it?—A. Yes, sir; that was a fixed case they gave me there.

Q. Well, I am giving you a fixed case now; a gun cleaned within a few hours afterwards, within two or three hours?—A. I would like to have the stenographer read the Senator's question.

Q. Let me give it to you again. If the gun was cleaned within two or three hours, would that come within your definition before the court-martial?—A. Yes, sir; five to seven minutes.

By Senator BULKELEY:

Q. That is, to clean the barrel and the bolt head?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. That would remove all signs of powder?—A. Yes, sir; that would remove all signs of powder.

Q. Yes.—A. That is, if they can see to do it.

This testimony is supported by Captain Macklin, who said:

Q. You were asked something about cleaning a gun. You would not undertake to say that your men did not have opportunities of cleaning their guns?—A. Oh, no, sir; I would not say that.

Q. What?—A. I would not say so.

Q. No. What opportunities would they have, captain?—A. Well, a man on post on a dark night might run his brush wiper through the gun, but I do not think it would clean it out absolutely. (P. 1809.)

Q. Well, there is a place there for putting in a rag, is there not?—A. Yes, sir; he could unscrew this little brush and put a rag in there, if he had a rag. He could tear a piece off his shirt.

Q. There would be no trouble in doing that?—A. No, sir; I do not think there would.

Q. Now, you said something about the powder getting in the chamber, as I think you called it, or what else did you call it?—A. I may have said "magazine," and then I think I said "chamber."

Q. It is my recollection that you said "chamber." Now, Captain, when a gun is discharged is it not a fact that there is only one way that powder can get back into the chamber, and that is when the striker punctures the cap—the percussion cap—that is, the firing pin?—A. I think the Senator misunderstood my answer to that other question.

Q. I am asking you this question, now.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is the only way that it can get back in there?—A. I do not think it can get back in the chamber at all, Senator.

Q. The percussion part of the cartridge is in three pieces?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The inner part you call the anvil?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then comes the fulminating powder?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And outside of that is the copper piece, on the outside?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the striking pin striking the copper drives the fulminating powder up against the anvil, and then through a small aperture the spark is communicated to the powder in the shell?—A. Yes, sir. The firing pin does not usually make a hole in the cap.

Q. That is, it does not puncture it?—A. Yes, sir; that is very rare.

Q. And unless it does puncture it, no powder can get back into the chamber?—A. No, sir.

Q. That is correct, is it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that in order to clean a gun so as to remove powder stains, all that is necessary is to clean the bore of the gun?—A. No, sir.

Q. What do you say?—A. No, sir; we have to clean the breech, to clean out the breech.

Q. What do you mean by the breech?—A. I mean that part down in there where the clip goes in.

Q. How can powder possibly get back there?—A. Well, sir, it drops down off of the brush wiper, or the rag. I mean fragments off of the brush or the rag. I do not mean any residue thrown back when the gun is fired.

Q. You do not mean that it gets there from the discharge?—A. Not at all, no, sir; but from cleaning the gun.

Q. Wiping the gun?—A. Yes, sir; it naturally drops down, you know. Even if you take a rag, frequently little particles will drop off of the rag and drop in there.

Q. Now, we understand each other. You do not mean that it comes from the discharge?—A. No, sir; I do not mean to say that at all.

By Senator PETTUS:

Q. Could it not be cleaned from the breech as well as from the muzzle?—A. Yes, sir; it can be cleaned either way.

Q. Then there would not be this dropping?—A. No, sir. You could shove a rag from the breech in and then there might not be any. (P. 1810.)

Captain Ely, of the Twenty-sixth Infantry, an officer of a score of years of active service, testified:

By Senator FOSTER:

Q. Have you any knowledge or experience as to the men, the soldiers, cleaning their guns, and the time that it would take to clean a rifle? Take one of these new Springfield rifles, and suppose that it had been shot five or six or seven times, and it had been cleaned before it was shot, what length of time, in your judgment, would it take to clean that rifle so as to remove the powder stains caused by the shooting?—A. If cleaned at once, it could readily be done in two minutes; something like two minutes. If left for half an hour or an hour or so the powder residuum stays with a good deal of tenactiy in the bore, and it would probably take water to loosen it up, and then it would take probably five minutes or more, with access to water.

Q. Could the rifle be cleaned with a thong and brush and rag and oil within the time you state?—And if so, state how it could be done.—A. Yes, sir. In the butt of the rifle is a receptacle, a hole, in which is a carrier. On this metal carrier is a screw top. That top is screwed off, and from in there is taken a thong about as long as that [indicating]. At the end of this thong is a piece of brass, what you might call a sinker, with a hole in it like that [indicating]. This they drop through the bore from the muzzle of the piece and take hold of it at the other end, and at the opposite end of the thong is another piece of metal in which a rag is placed, and then you pull that through the bore of the rifle. You could do it in the dark.

Q. I was going to ask you about that. That could be done in the dark as well as in the light?—A. Yes, sir; you could do it with your eyes shut. It could be done in the dark by anybody that knew just where things were, very readily.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Have you ever cleaned any of these rifles?—A. Yes, sir; I have been in a good many competitions, and between ranges they generally run it through the rifle to clean it for the next range.

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. Are those rifles inspected under such circumstances before they go to the next range?—A. No, sir; a man does that of his own volition. That is entirely with the firer. It all rests with him whether he does it or not.

Q. Would that gun pass the ordinary inspection, after that cleaning?—A. Yes, sir; I think it would.

By Senator FOSTER:

Q. Now, about the chamber, would it require any length of time to clean the chamber of one of those Springfield rifles? I ask you if it requires it?—A. No, sir; the chamber does not get the residue of the powder, and while you might get a little dust in there, if you would run a rag in, that would take care of it. Probably there would not be any residue in there at all; there would not be any change in there. The chamber only goes in to there [indicating], and firing does not create any dirt or dust in there.

By Senator FRAZIER:

Q. You mean no powder is sent back into the chamber by the firing?—A. No, sir; none is sent back between this and the chamber. The shell prevents that.

Q. The explosion would not throw any powder back in the chamber, you think?—A. No, sir; it does not dirty it at all.

By Senator PETTUS:

Q. Captain, would there be any difficulty in an expert cleaning one of these rifles in the dark?—A. No, sir; I think not.

Private West, of the Twenty-sixth Infantry, in testifying, said:

Q. Mr. West, if a party should take your rifle and discharge it, say, three or four or five or six times, how long would it take you, with your thong brush, to clean the barrel of that rifle with kerosene so that it would pass inspection?—A. I think I could do it in fifteen minutes.

Q. Would it take fifteen minutes just to clean the barrel out?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, is it not a fact that you and the rest of the soldiers had their own cleaning material with them in their quarters?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Every man had his little box?—A. Supposed to; yes, sir.

Q. In which he was supposed to have his cleaning materials?—A. Kept it separate, to keep it from mixing up, so that they could find it readily.

Q. And he could clean his gun any time he felt like it, when he had his gun, could he not?—A. Yes, sir; certainly.

Q. That is the usual practice of soldiers, is it not?—A. Yes, sir; keep it ready. We don't know when we may be called out for inspection, at any time, or for guard duty.

Q. And you have those materials all at hand in your quarters?—A. Yes, sir. (P. 1168.)

Q. When you say they have the materials necessary for cleaning a gun on hand in the quarters, what do I understand?—A. Well, that brush, oil, and rags and brushes, and whatever other things are deemed necessary to use.

Q. What would you have for cleaning the barrel?—A. For cleaning the barrel and cleaning the outside, cleaning rags.

Q. And for the inside?—A. Clean it out with a brush, and then they have what we call a pull-through—put a cloth or something on the end and wipe the barrel out clean.

Q. They are the materials you would use in cleaning out your gun for inspection?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are those same materials used for cleaning out a gun for inspection after the gun has been fired?—A. I always used the same.

Q. Then, having those materials on hand in his quarters, it is not necessary for a soldier to go and get one of those rods or rags from anybody else to clean his gun?—A. Each one is supposed to have his own. There are lots of them that do not. There are lots of careless men in the Army that hardly have anything, but borrow.

Q. Well, good soldiers generally have them?—A. Good, careful soldiers; yes, sir.

* * * * * * *

By Senator WARNER:

Q. One other question, Mr. West. You said something about using this brush, and then, as I understood, a rag and a pull-through?—A. No; we have a pull-through besides that—a pull-through with a clean rag that fits tight, to wipe the oil all off.

Q. What is that pull-through?—A. Why, it is a strong cord with a metallic point to it with a slot in it like a needle.

Q. Like the eye of a needle; and you put the rag in?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that fits in the barrel, and you pull it through?—A. To wipe the barrel out.

Q. And that is supposed to do it thoroughly?—A. It is, after you have rubbed it thoroughly with the brush; loosened it up. That is what it is supposed to do. (P. 1169.)

Gen. William Crozier, Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, at the request of the Secretary of War and of the committee, caused to be made certain tests as to the time necessarily taken in cleaning the bore of a Springfield rifle so that it would appear bright and pass inspection. As a result of these tests, when the cleaning was done within a few hours after the gun had beeen fired, he found it would take less than three minutes; but when the test was made the next day after the discharge, it required a much greater time. In these experiments, in one case he used the brass cleaning rod and in the other the thong and brush. His testimony is as follows:

By Senator LODGE:

Q. General Crozier, there has been some conflicting testimony before this committee as to the length of time necessary to clean an army rifle after firing so that it will pass an inspection directed to discovering whether it has been recently fired. I should like to ask you if you have made any tests to determine that question.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It is suggested, General, by a member of the committee that before you go on I should ask you what position you now hold. Of course we know.—A. I am Chief of Ordnance of the United States Army; and I have made or caused to be made some such experiments, in my presence, at the request of the Secretary of War and of members of this committee.

Q. Will you kindly state what tests you made, and how they were made?—A. I first had four rifles, which were clean, fired four rounds each over at Fort Myer, and sent immediately in to my office, which they reached within a few hours of the time when they were fired. These rifles I had cleaned in different ways, one of them by using a rag and the brass cleaning rod and the sal soda solution which is prescribed, one by using a rag wet with water alone, and one by using dry rags alone. One of them was left and not cleaned until the next day. In each case the cleaning was done in less than three minutes, except in the case of the one which was left until the next day. That then required very much greater time for cleaning it.

Q. That was the one where twenty-four hours elapsed?—A. Yes, sir; after twenty-four hours elapsed it required from fifteen minutes to half an hour to clean it, with a great deal of rubbing and scrubbing.

By Senator SCOTT:

Q. The experiments were on the new Springfield rifle?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The one now in use?—A. Yes, sir. The second time, I had these rifles cleaned by using the thong and the brush which is furnished for the purpose. (P. 2848.)

Q. Before you pass from that, let me understand. I understood you had five rifles, or four?—A. Four rifles. They were fired five rounds each.

Q. They were fired five rounds each, four rifles; and in the second experiment you had the same number of rifles?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. And the same number of shots were fired?—A. They had been fired the same number of rounds, five rounds each, and they were sent to my office on the same day, so that they reached it a few hours after the firing. These I had cleaned by using the thong and brush, and afterwards by pulling a rag through by the thong instead of forcing it through by the cleaning rod, as I had done before. The brush pulled through easily, as of course it always does. There was some trouble in pulling through the rag. It stuck, and in one case we broke one of the thongs. These thongs, by the way, are not strong enough, and will be made stronger hereafter. In the case where we cleaned the rifle by pulling the brush through and pulling the rag through afterwards and the thong did not break, the whole thing occupied three minutes. In the case where the rag stuck and the thong broke, the rag had to be afterwards pushed out by the cleaning rod, and the time required was about double. The third case was the one in which two rifles were fired at Fort Myer, also five rounds each, and were brought to my office immediately afterwards. Of these rifles I had one cleaned in the darkness, in a room where the light was absolutely excluded, and it was cleaned by drawing the brush which is provided for the purpose, by means of the thong, five times through the barrel, and that is all that was done, and that occupied just one minute.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Was that cleaned sufficiently to pass inspection?—A. Well, it is here, sir; the rifle is here.

Q. Yes; but I am not an inspector of rifles, and you are. Could not you tell me?—A. I will state this about it: In looking through the rifle it is difficult to see whether it has been fired, but I am of the opinion, without having tried it with this particular rifle, that if we were to draw a clean rag through the rifle we would get a little mark on it. It would not come through absolutely clean; but, as far as the appearance of it is concerned, I would not be able to say from looking through it that it had been fired.

By Senator LODGE:

Q. Who cleaned these rifles in your presence?—A. Captain Rice, of the Ordnance Department.

Q. He cleaned them all?—A. He cleaned these last ones I am speaking of, and an employee in my office, a man by the name of Palmer, cleaned the first ones.

Q. Was he a peculiarly expert man?—A. No, sir; he was not. He was not expert at all in this kind of work, except that he was more or less familiar with handling the arm; but he had not cleaned very many.

Q. And he was not as expert as the average soldier?—A. I should say not; no, sir.

In this connection the testimony of Capt. John H. Rice, of the Ordnance Department, who made the experiment referred to by General Crozier, is most instructive. He testified:

Q. Captain Rice, did you take any part in those tests which General Crozier made and testified to, in regard to the cleaning of the guns?—A. Yes, sir; I did.

Q. Were you a witness to all the tests that were made?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you inspect the guns after the cleaning?—A. I did.

Q. Were the guns clean enough to have passed an inspection directed to telling whether the gun had been recently fired?—A. All those that were cleaned would have passed an inspection.

Q. Did you clean any of them yourself?—A. Yes, sir; I cleaned one of those that was cleaned in the dark, and I cleaned some of the others. I don't remember the exact number. There were quite a number altogether cleaned, and one other man and myself did the work. Sometimes he did it, and sometimes I did it.

Q. Mr. Palmer was the name of the other man?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And those guns that you and Mr. Palmer cleaned you examined carefully after the cleaning?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in your judgment they would have passed an inspection directed to determining whether they had been recently fired?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you been here in the Ordnance Department?—A. In Washington, do you mean?

Q. In Washington.—A. Since a year ago last April.

Q. How long have you been in the Ordnance Department?—A. Since December, 1898.

Q. Before that you were where?—A. I was in the cavalry.

Q. And did you there inspect rifles at regular inspections?—A. I inspected carbines; yes, sir.

Q. They were the Krag carbine, were they?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you inspected those when inspections occurred?—A. Yes, sir; not always, but frequently.

Q. So that you are familiar with the work of inspecting a rifle, from having done it a great deal?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You cleaned the gun that was cleaned in the dark?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And what was the condition of that barrel when you examined it afterwards?—A. As far as you could tell by the eye it was perfectly clean. There was no examination made with a cloth at the time, but it was carefully examined by sighting through it and using a reflector to throw the light into the barrel.

Q. Do you mean something white?—A. Yes, sir; a white piece of paper.

Q. And at that time it appeared clean, without subjecting it to the test of a rag?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Suppose that a gun cleaned in that rapid way were allowed to stand, would it, in your opinion, foul the gun?—A. It would.

Q. In the course of two or three days?—A. Certainly in the course of two or three days it would. In that connection I would state that I have not made that experiment myself, but that is a matter of general knowledge with anyone who has had experience with these guns. (Pp. 2347 and 2348.)

But, sir, it is not necessary to rely upon the assumption that the thong and its attachment were used in the cleaning of the guns, for it is an undisputed fact that each company was supplied with brass cleaning rods, rags, and oil. They had in their dormitory everything that was necessary for the cleaning of their guns, and between the firing and the inspection they had both the time and the opportunity to clean them.

But, sir, in addition to all this, Mrs. Leahy, in going from her hotel to her mother's house, a little after daylight the morning after the affray, as she turned into Garrison road from Cowen alley, saw soldiers on the second porch of B barracks in the act of cleaning guns.

She testified:

Q. When you went by the barracks this morning, did you see any of the soldiers? And if so, state what they were doing?—A. Yes, sir; I saw all along the garrison fence men posted, armed.

Q. Yes.—A. I also saw, I should presume—I am almost positive—five or six men sitting on the gallery upstairs cleaning guns.

Q. In which barracks was this, do you remember?—A. B barracks.

Q. B barracks. And what time in the morning was this?—A. Five-thirty. I was back to my own house after 6, to serve first breakfast.

On cross-examination Mrs. Leahy testified:

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. You saw five or six men on the back porch of one of these barracks buildings cleaning guns.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which one of the buildings?—A. B barracks.

Q. B barracks?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see anyone on either of the other barracks porches cleaning guns?—A. No, sir.

Q. You just saw five or six men?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What were they doing?—A. They were polishing up the tops of the barrels and pulling rags through the barrels—some sticks, or something; I don't know what it was.

Q. This was 5.30 in the morning?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Was this before sunrise or after?—A. After sunrise. It was daylight. I couldn't tell you whether the sun was up, but it was daylight already. (P. 2921.)

It is claimed that soldiers were not engaged in the shooting, because at inspection, had a few hours after the affray, each soldier had all the ammunition that had been issued to him.

The custom, Mr. President, prevailing among soldiers to accumulate extra cartridges with almost miserly greed is clearly established by the evidence. In explanation of this custom, I invite the attention of the Senate to the testimony of the following witnesses:

Capt. David Baker, of the Twenty-sixth Infantry, an officer of twenty-four years' service, testified (Mess., p. 173):

Q. Now, Captain Baker, I will ask you with respect to another matter. From your experience in charge of men at an army post, will you state whether or not it would be possible for enlisted men to obtain and retain in their possession, without the knowledge of their commanding officers, a dozen or so rounds of ammunition?—A. Each enlisted man is ordinarily supposed to have ten rounds. Most of the old soldiers accumulate a greater number in order to be able to produce the proper number at all times. The ten rounds, at least, are always in the personal possession of the enlisted man, the only requirement being that he produce them on inspection. In addition to the ten rounds, target practice, field service, and possibly the generosity of the quartermaster-sergeant or first sergeant give them an opportunity to accumulate more without specific knowledge on the part of their officers. After twenty years' experience as an officer, and having been many times during that period a company commander and in close contact with enlisted men, both in garrison and in the field, I believe that most enlisted men of any organization in service in any post really have in their possession at all times more ammunition than that which may have been issued to them and which they are required to produce on inspection, namely, ten rounds.
Q. Then, in your opinion, Captain Baker, it would not only be possible, but it is a very common thing, for the enlisted men to have in their possession a dozen or so rounds of cartridges each without it appearing from the records of the ammunition kept that he has in his possession such additional rounds?—A. The chances for getting this ammunition are so many that even with the greatest care on the part of the company officers it is impossible to break up the practice. It is as hard a thing to deal with as to prevent the feeding of other people by the cook in your kitchen. It is almost a similar case.
Q. Captain Baker, in conclusion, I want to call your attention particularly to the three clips that were turned over to me by the mayor of the city of Brownsville and by the sheriff of Cameron County as having been found in the streets of Brownsville on the morning after the shooting on the 13th of August, and ask you whether those clips are similar to the clips used in the new Springfield rifle?—A. I have in my hand a clip that has been issued by the Government for use in the new Springfield rifle. The three shown me by you I have compared with this. They are in every respect the same. I know of no such clip in use in this country in any other rifle, sporting or military, except the Springfield.

Lieutenant Lawrason, in testifying as to keeping account of the cartridges at the range shooting, said (p. 1625):

By Senator LODGE:

Q. Whoever dealt out the ammunition, did he keep a memorandum of the number of cartridges given to each man?—A. No; but he could see—understand, I stated that no one dealt out ammunition. The men took it.
Q. They helped themselves?—A. They took their two clips out of the bandolier and did their firing.
Q. Then didn't they return the exploded shells?—A. Yes; they are picked up by the man, I stated, who was detailed for that work.
Q. Then the men do not return the exploded shells themselves—each man does not?—A. They frequently do, to save time and keep this man who picks them up from crawling around the firing point.
Q. What I want to get at is this: Is there some responsible officer who gives out the cartridges and makes a memorandum of them, and then when the exploded shells are returned credits those to the men returning them, so that it shall be known exactly how many shells each man has fired, and that every cartridge is accounted for?—A. No; no one issues this ammunition or checks it up.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. The fact is, each man goes out and takes his ammunition out of the box?—A. Yes; his ammunition out of the box.
Q. He is supposed to take one or two or three clips, whatever it is?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. He can take more if he wants to, but it is simply a question of whether he will be detected or not?—A. Simply a question of whether he would be detected.
Q. That is all there is of that?—A. Yes, that is all.
Q. That is the practice in the Twenty-fifth Infantry?—A. Yes; I think that is the practice throughout the Army.

Captain Macklin, in connection with his testimony of reduced-range ammunition issued to his command, testified regarding the custom of soldiers to accumulate extra ammunition as follows (pp. 1798 and 1799):

Q. When you were issued the reduced-range ammunition you got ten rounds?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. You checked up the ammunition that you turned in, did you?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. The steel-jacketed ammunition?—A. I checked it up to the best of my ability; yes, sir.
Q. Did it check up?—A. Yes, sir; every man had twenty rounds.
Q. Then you knew that that was all turned in?—A. Yes, sir; and I had it put in an ammunition box.
Q. Why was it, then, you should have searched the lockers?—A. For any extra ammunition they might have.
Q. How would they have extra ammunition, Captain?—A. Soldiers accumulate that sometimes on the target range.
Q. How?—A. Well, in a skirmish run each man is given twenty rounds of ammunition. Sometimes he only fires nineteen, and if he only fires nineteen, if he is one short, he gets a penalty for it, and they will hide it, to the extent of sticking it in their mouths. Every time a skirmish run is completed the officers are required to go down the line and search the men, and I can not tell you how they do it exactly, but they have ways of accumulating the ammunition that I can not explain, and I do not believe any officer can.
Q. But you know they do accumulate it?—A. Oh, they do; yes, sir; undoubtedly. It is a hard thing to check on.
Q. And by way of secreting it they put it in their mouths?—A. I have heard of cases of that kind; yes, sir. I never found any that way, but I have heard of them.

Captain Ely, of the Twenty-sixth Infantry, an officer of twenty years' service, and an expert rifleman, before the Penrose court-martial, testified (C. M., 1205):

Q. To change the subject, Captain Ely. From your experience as an army officer, is it a difficult thing or not for individual men in companies to get ahead a dozen or two rounds of ammunition without being detected?—A. From my experience I would say it is comparatively easy for a man desiring to possess a few extra rounds of ammunition to obtain the same. I have been at several department, division, and army competitions and at the ordinary target practice, winter practice, subsequent season practice, post competitions, etc., and at almost all these practices and competitions the ammunition is left out where men can get it, sometimes checked and sometimes unchecked. It would be very easy for them to take more than they were to actually use and carry the same away with them. With the interchange of empty shells for loaded ammunition it is very easy for this ammunition to be unaccounted for, as only that which is actually received from arsenals is generally accounted for.

Captain Kilburn, of the Twenty-sixth Infantry, in his testimoney before the committee, said (pp. 1032 and 1033):

By Senator LODGE:

Q. Are the men apt to have odd cartridges in their possession?—A. A great many of them do. They pick them up different places. Sometimes they keep some cartridges—these men who, as we call it, buck for orderly. They keep them shined, one set, and they will have another set to use on rainy days, using the polished set for guard mount.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Explain that—what is meant by "bucking for orderly?"—A. The cleanest man on guard when they mount guard in the morning is picked out by the adjutant for the commanding officer's orderly. He does not have to go on guard duty, and is only on duty practically from about 10 in the morning until about 12, and from 2 till about half past 4, and then he is allowed to go to his quarters. It is something that they all desire, and the men will clean up, and as the competition becomes closer and closer they get down to even quite small details, and the brass screw that is in the head of the bayonet, that will be polished, and they will get down to the point, some of these men, where they will even polish their cartridges. It takes quite a lot of work to keep those shined up, and they will sometimes have 10 extra cartridges which they will use for ordinary times, for drills, and keep these 10 nice ones that have already been polished up, keep them wrapped in canton flannel.
Q. That is, they use 10 cartridges for a rainy day and 10 for a sunshiny day?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And have the extra cartridges around?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator LODGE:

Q. The return of cartridges is never absolutely accurate, is it?—A. No, sir. We count all the loose ones, but you can not always be exact about that. You may have as many as 20,000 rounds on hand.
Q. They are usually returned in tens and hundreds, are they not?—A. No, sir; the chief of ordnance checks you up to the last one, but a man can always make some cartridges, because he is allowed so many to each man.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. What I was getting at, when he has his 10 cartridges for the sunshiny day, that is his regular allowance of 10?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Then he would have 10 extra cartridges that he would pick up and accumulate, that would not be polished, for rainy days?—A. Yes, sir. I say there are men who do that. I don't think the whole company does it, but some men.
Q. But they do have an opportunity, so that they have extra cartridges?—A. Yes, sir. When the cartridges are issued they open up a box and each man takes 20 and shoots them—that is, when they are on target practice—and it is very easy for a man to pick up 5 or 10 if he wants to. It is just as easy as it is for anybody else to get them.

Rowland Osborne, who had held the position of post quartermaster-sergeant in the Army for twenty-two years and whose position peculiarly qualified him to testify regarding the custom of soldiers to accumulate surplus ammunition, testified (pp. 1091 and 1092):

Q. Now, going back in these places you have mentioned, did you see ammunition scattered around those other places?—A. Yes, sir; I have seen that.
Q. That is customary, too?—A. It is a customary thing.
Q. To find loose ammunition lying around?—A. Loose ammunition. As a rule it is accounted for as expended. When the boxes are broken it is expended.
Q. Just explain how it could be that the soldiers could have such an excess of ammunition.—A. It is very simple.
Q. Just explain it, please.—A. They go to target practice, and each man is issued a certain amount of ammunition to fire, and it frequently occurs that they do not fire them all and they retain the ammunition. Again, men go on hunting expeditions, and they are given so much for hunting purposes, and they do not use it all, and they retain it.
Q. But could they have any that they did not expend when they were out on the range firing?—A. Well, it is expended when it goes out, so much for target practice. That is the usual practice. The allowance is expended, and what is left over is thrown into the storeroom, providing they get hold of it and the men turn it in.
Q. Provided they get hold of it?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. What do you mean by that? We are not in the Army, and we do not understand.—A. For instance, 65 men are going out to participate in target practice and are issued a certain number of rounds of ammunition. It is turned over to them and expended in target practice. Maybe they are out on target practice for a month, and maybe only half of that is actually used. The rest comes back. It is not thrown away.

Q. So a man could keep it or return it?—A. Could keep it. Maybe he does not want to keep it and turns it in to the storeroom.
Q. If he wants to keep it he can keep it?—A. Yes, sir. Otherwise it is there for hunting purposes.
Q. So that if a man wants to go out on a hunting trip, he can get surplus cartridges without any trouble?—A. Without any difficulty.

Mr. Jebb, a veteran soldier of the Twenty-sixth Infantry, in his testimony before the committee on this point, said (pp. 1389 and 1390):

By Senator FRAZIER:

Q. I want to ask you about the surplus ammunition that you say you soldiers got on the target practice down at Point Ysobel. Now, each soldier would keep his own surplus and bring it back up to Brownsville with him, would he?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And put it in his locker?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. From your twenty years' experience in the Army, you found out that soldiers as a rule nearly always have plenty of surplus ammunition in their lockers, don't they?—A. Always do.
Q. Always do—have no trouble about that at all?—A. No, sir. At Fort Sam Houston to-day I have surplus Springfield ammunition lying in my box.
Q. You don't know how much you have?—A. No, sir; I don't know how much I have, but I have a surplus. We are issued 10 rounds, and if we do not have that at the end of our enlistment he charges it up.
Q. But you get a surplus and you keep that, then, in your locker?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Where do you keep the 10 rounds that are issued to you by the sergeant?—A. In the cartridge belt.
Q. In the cartridge box or in your belt?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And this surplus you keep in your boxes or lockers or wherever you want to?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And it is no trouble for you to pick it up in different ways?—A. No, sir; no trouble at all.
Q. And that custom prevails not only in the regiment you are now connected with, but in all regiments?—A. All regiments.
Q. That you have been connected with for the last twenty years in the Army?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Twenty-two years?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. So that it is no trouble for a soldier to have plenty of surplus ammunition in his locker, and he generally does have, doesn't he?—A. He generally does.

Corporal Ryan, of the Twenty-sixth Infantry, a soldier of many years' experience, testified (p. 1405):

Q. Now, accumulating surplus ammunition in the range practice, which you have spoken of, how is that done?—A. That is a very easy matter, because the ammunition, as a rule, is carried out by the men who are to fire, and is never charged to each man. No man is issued any special number of rounds or any special amount. As a rule, the ammunition is carried out there in bandoliers and opened on the range, and a man could get any amount he wanted and it would never be missed.
Q. Would it be easier to get the new Springfield ammunition issued in bandoliers than to get the old Krag ammunition?—A. Not a bit, sir.
Q. About the same?—A. About the same.
Q. So there would be nothing to prevent a soldier having that?—A. No, sir.
Q. Could he sell it?—A. I do not know of anybody ever selling any of it.
Q. Could he give it away if he wanted to?—A. Yes; they often do. I have been all over the United States, and I have found ammunition in all parts of the United States, especially in barrooms and places of that kind, where men use. They go in and have, perhaps, three or four rounds of this ammunition and the barkeeper or somebody will say: "Let me have two or three of them just to keep on exhibition for souvenirs." I have seen them setting on sideboards.
Q. A soldier who accumulates surplus ammunition, where does he keep that—in his locker?—A. He usually keeps it in his locker or barrack bag, or almost any other place that he sees fit.
Q. Are you giving what you understand to be the practice since you have been in the service with the different organizations that you have been in?—A. Yes, sir; that is the way I have found it ever since I have been in the service.

The testimony of other witnesses might be cited in support of the contention that it was the universal custom of soldiers to accumulate surplus ammunition. The contention that the exploded shells found upon the streets of Brownsville on the morning of the shooting had been planted there by the raiders loses sight of the fact that the shells picked up by Captain Macklin were, in the language of Major Penrose (C. M., 1179), "apparently perfectly bright and new;" and that—they showed no corrosion of any kind on them, which led me to believe that they had been fired recently, and is not supported by the testimony of Major Penrose, who remarked to Captain Macklin:

Well, Macklin, I am afraid our men have done this shooting.

nor by the testimony of Mr. Starck, a man thoroughly familiar with the use of firearms, who testified that the eight or ten shells that he picked up in the street in front of his house between 5 and 6 o'clock on the morning of August 14, "had been recently fired."

Mr. President, in the views of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BULKELEY], attached to the minority report, reference is made to the evidence that of thirteen of the exploded shells picked up on the streets of Brownsville three had double indentation, as though in a first attempt to fire, the gun had snapped, and nine had marks indicating double insertion in a rifle. Upon this evidence they base the claim that these shells were exploded on the target range at Fort Niobrara and not at Brownsville.

In support of this contention, evidence was introduced showing that when the new guns were issued to the soldiers at Fort Niobrara at first it was difficult to get the cosmoline oil in which they were packed out of the mechanism of the gun, and therefore for a time the guns misfired, and when on the target range it frequently happened that when the cartridges were inserted in the chamber ready for firing, came the command "cease firing;" in this case, as well as in the snapping of the gun, the unexploded cartridges were ejected and thrown upon the ground. And, as there had been no target practice at Fort Brown, the second insertion of these shells into the gun, it is claimed, must have been at Fort Niobrara. In further support of this contention evidence was introduced that Company B had shipped from Fort Niobrara to Fort Brown a box containing fifteen or sixteen hundred exploded cartridges. That upon the arrival of these cartridges at Fort Brown the box containing them was broken open and in that condition was left on the back porch of B Company barracks, where it was accessible to Mexicans and others coming into the fort, the theory of the distinguished Senators being that the exploded cartridges picked up on the streets of Brownsville had been filched from this box and by citizens placed along the trail of the raiders in the streets of Brownsville. This contention admits that these exploded shells were a part of the ammunition used in the Springfield rifles with which the Twenty-fifth Infantry was armed. It is further admitted by the contention of the distinguished Senators that these shells were brought from Fort Niobrara to Brownsville. But in contending that these shells had been exploded at Fort Niobrara and were planted by the conspirators in the streets of Brownsville, the distinguished Senators lose sight of the fact that the bullets extracted from the buildings in Brownsville were bullets such as could be fired from a Springfield rifle, and that the cartridges and bullets in combination could only be fired from the Springfield rifle with which the Twenty-fifth Infantry was armed. These bullets, as shown by measurement, weight, and analysis, were bullets used in the Springfield rifle.

That, in order to manufacture evidence against the colored soldiers, the raiders, or others, should pick out at random 13 exploded cartridges bearing double indentation or evidence of double insertion from a box containing from 1,500 to 1,600 cartridge shells, would, I submit, be a most improbable performance, especially in view of the thorough shaking and mixing to which this cartridge case must have been subjected in transit from Fort Niobrara to Fort Brown.

But, sir, the analysis of the bullets extracted from the houses in Brownsville is conclusive evidence that they were the bullets of the Springfield rifle, model 1903, with which the colored battalion was armed, the analysis showing that the composition of these bullets was lead, tin, and antimony, and the evidence is that only bullets manufactured for the Government containing these three metals were those made by the Union Metallic Cartridge Company under contract of June, 1905, and that no bullets made for sporting or commercial purposes contained these three metals, all other bullets having either lead and tin, or lead and antimony, none having the three metals—lead, tin, and antimony.

Mr. William M. Thomas, the ballistic engineer for the Union Metallic Cartridge Company, testified (p. 3378):

By Senator FRAZIER:

Q. As I understand you, none of those bullets made for commercial or sporting purposes have lead, tin, and antimony in them?—A. No, sir.
Q. They have either lead and tin or lead and antimony, but not all three?—A. No, sir; we would not make a bullet with all three, unless we had to, as in this Government case.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Now, I was asking about the sporting guns, the rifles you make ammunition for, and I understand you to say that none of those bullets were made with the composition in them of lead, tin, and antimony, all three?—A. Yes, sir; that is correct. We have no record where the three metals were used together.
Q. Now, what gun is it, excepting the Springfield and the Krag, for which you make bullets that do contain antimony and lead?—A. The only one that I can recall was made for the model of 1903, under the contract of 1905.

Lieutenant Grier, of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, in testifying as to the guns missing fire when first received, and as to the marks or double insertion, or double indentation, on the cartridge shells, said (pp. 1705 and 1706):

Q. On the target range does it not happen every day, and many times a day, that a cartridge after it has been put in to be fired will have to be withdrawn because of the order to cease firing, or for some other reason?—A. I do not know that I can say it happens every day, but it does happen frequently, especially with recruits.
Q. How does it come to happen with them?—A. Well, they do not understand. The chief thing I have noticed with them is that they fail to close the bolt entirely when they load. I have seen company commanders fix the bolt, in fact, so that the rifle would not go off, to see if the man flinched when he shot. They would have him pull the trigger, anyway, and he would jump. They did that to see if he flinched, to cure him of flinching.

Q. If a cartridge has been inserted and the order to cease firing is given before the cartridge is fired, what is the soldier required to do?—A. To bring his rifle down to the position of "load" and open the chamber.

Q. And is the cartridge withdrawn or not?—A. My recollection is not clear on that. I believe it is, though.

Senator FORAKER. That is all.

By Senator FRAZIER:

Q. Lieutenant, when a cartridge is inserted in a gun in the manner which Senator FORAKER has asked you about and the order is given to cease firing, that cartridge would not have any marks or imprints on it at all, would it?—A. No, sir; it would not.

Q. It would not be marked at all? You could not tell afterwards in examining that cartridge whether it had ever been inserted into a gun?—A. No, sir.

Q. After a cartridge has been fired and certain imprints are made on it by the striker and by the explosion of the shell, if that shell should be again put in the gun for the purpose of testing or otherwise and then should be ejected, would that make a second imprint on it?—A. Well, I could not say exactly about that. I have never tried that. But it seems to me that the ejector itself would follow the same path that it did before. It always makes a circular cut on the face of the shell in ejecting.

Q. Suppose the shell should be put in another gun and ejected, that would make a different imprint, would it not, upon that shell?—A. Yes, sir; it seems to me it would.

Q. It would? You think that if it should be put back in the same gun and struck again and then thrown out, that would make possibly the same imprint.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. As that made the first time when the shell was exploded?—A. Yes, sir. In other words, there is a personal equation in every gun.

Q. But if it should be put into a different gun and ejected?—A. The chances are that the marks would not coincide.

Q. They would not coincide. So that a shell that had two or more different imprints on it would indicate rather that it had been put in and ejected from two different guns, would it not?—A. Yes, sir; it would give that possibility.

Mr. President, it is clear from the evidence that when an exploded cartridge shell shows marks of double insertion that the shell has been inserted into two different guns. It is only when the cartridge shell has been tried in or fired from a second gun that it shows the marks of double insertion. On this point Lieutenant Lawrason testified (p. 1598):

Q. I will call your attention now to another fact recited in this report. I have already read it. It says that quite a number of these cartridge cases—nine in all, giving the numbers, three in Group I, three in Group III, and three in Group IV—bear evidences on them of having been inserted into a service rifle more than once. I will ask you what that would indicate to you?—A. Either that it had been tried in one gun, and not having been fired in that had been tried in another, or that it had been thrown back in the cartridge box and later tried, some other time, on the range.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. After a cartridge has been fired what would be the effect of putting the shell in and going through the motions again; would that leave any marks upon the empty shell?—A. Yes, sir; that would probably have the same effect.

Q. Then a cartridge shell, after the cartridge had been fired, if it was put in a gun to try it, or for examination, would receive the same strokes, probably?—A. If it were put in the same gun I should think it would, sir. If it was tried in another gun you would probably get the effect mentioned here.

Q. One moment. If it was tried in another gun and the effect were different, then there would probably be two sets of marks on it?—A. Yes, sir; probably there would.

The marks of double insertion upon the nine exploded shells are accounted for by the testimony elicited by Mr. Purdy in examining Lieut. Col. Frank Baker of the ordnance department at Fort Sam Houston, on the 6th day of January, 1907. Mr. Purdy handed to the witness for inspection the thirty-two shells that were afterwards turned over to the committee and subjected to a microscopic examination by the Springfield Arsenal, and Colonel Baker, in order to satisfy himself regarding these exploded shells, made the experiment with some of them in a new Springfield rifle. This in itself would account for the marks of double insertion upon these shells, and they were the only shells introduced in evidence which bore the marks of double insertion. So, sir, I submit that the fact that certain of the exploded shells picked up on the streets of Brownsville bore the signs of double insertion does not even tend to show that they were not fired in that city on the night of the affray.

The contention, Mr. President, that none of the soldiers of B, C, and D companies were engaged in the affray, because at the roll call of the companies all the enlisted men were present or accounted for, finds no substantial support in the testimony. As to the accuracy of that roll call in determining whether any of the enlisted men participated in the shooting, Major Penrose, in his report to the military secretary of Texas, under date of August 15, 1906, to which I have heretofore called attention, said:

From testimony gathered by the citizens' committee, and given to me by Doctor Combe, I believe from 7 to 10 men were implicated in this matter. Some one of them must have had a key to the gun rack, and after check roll call was taken—for all were reported present at 11 p. m. roll call—they slipped out of quarters, did the shooting, returned while the companies were forming, and at some time during the early hours of the morning cleaned their rifles. This is made possible from the fact that the shooting all occurred within two short blocks of the barracks. (Mess., p. 32.)

Further than this, sir, every commissioned officer of the battalion has testified that it would have been quite possible for men engaged in the shooting to have returned to the reservation and joined their respective companies in time to answer the roll call and this without detection. In this connection it should be remembered that the shooting from high-power guns lasted only from five to seven minutes.

Here, sir, upon the question whether men engaged in the shooting could have rejoined their companies before roll call, I invite the attention of the Senate to a significant piece of evidence in the statement of Corporal Miller, of Company C, who testified that on the night of the shooting he was out on pass, and that about 10 o'clock on the night of August 13 returned from Matamoros, which is just across the Rio Grande from Brownsville. Not having heard, as he testified, that passes had been revoked, upon his return to Brownsville he visited a relative in the farther part of the town and that finally he started for the reservation about 11 o'clock, and on his way stopped at a Mexican saloon on the corner of Adams and Eleventh streets, engaging in a game of monte. This saloon was fully two blocks farther from the reservation than the farthest point of firing by the raiders. Corporal Miller says that he heard the firing; that he got into a dispute with the saloon keeper as to whether it was being done by soldiers or not; that he waited in the saloon until all the firing had ceased, which must have included not only the firing from high-power guns, but also the desultory and scattering firing of citizens with revolvers and shotguns; that then he walked as rapidly as he could from Eleventh street down Adams street to the fort; that he climbed the garrison wall opposite Washington street and came into C Company barracks while that company was being formed.

Corporal Miller remained in the saloon five or six minutes after the firing commenced and until all the firing ceased. In answer to questions by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] he said:

Q. Then what did you do when the firing ceased?—A. I went to the quarters.

Q. How long was it after the firing ceased that you went to the quarters?—A. Oh, just as soon as it ceased.

Q. Just as soon as it ceased?—A. Yes, sir; I went out then to the quarters. (P. 860.)

Q. You went out onto the street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And from there, then, to the quarters?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In what way did you go to the quarters, over what streets, if you can tell us?—A. I think I came down Adams street.

Q. Did you or not go the nearest way?—A. Yes, sir; I came right out. The saloon sat on a corner. If it was Twelfth street, if that was the cross street, it fronted on Twelfth and had a side door out on Adams. It had a door right at the corner, too, and I went right out that door and right down that street to the garrison.

Q. How did you go?—A. Well, I went in a hurry. I didn't run; I walked fast. I didn't run, but I walked pretty fast.

* * * * * *

Q. Did you get back to the post?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How did you enter, and in what way?—A. I entered—there is a way we cross the fence.

Q. That is the empty barracks right under your hand there on the map.—A. It is right below the empty barracks [indicating].

Q. You came in there, did you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then what did you do?—A. I went on to the quarters and reported to the first sergeant.

Q. Where did you find your company?—A. My company was just falling in in front of the barracks.

Q. Then what happened?—A. Well, he told me to get my gun and join the company, and I got my gun and went out under the command of Lieutenant Grier and laid along the wall. (P. 861.)

What stronger evidence, Mr. President, could be adduced in support of the theory that the raiders had time and opportunity after the cessation of the firing to reach their barracks undetected, join their companies, and answer the roll call, than this very accomplishment of Corporal Miller?

Mr. President, this soldier did what the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] has throughout his exhaustive argument maintained could not be done, and upon the supposed lack of ability of the soldiers to accomplish this act he in part has based his opinion of their innocence.

This witness testified that when in the saloon he told the proprietor that he was out on pass, and thought it necessary to show the pass to the Mexican, at the same time saying to him—

If anything comes up about this, I want to show you this.

The Mexican, Miller testified, said he thought—the soldiers were firing on the town;

to which Miller replied:

They wasn't soldier's guns that I heard, and I told him when the firing was going on, I says, "Do you hear that shot? That was out of a .45." (P. 860.)

Corporal Miller, an old soldier, serving the last year of his third enlistment, was not unfamiliar with the report of high-power guns. When he heard the shooting he divined its meaning and at once set to work to lay the foundation for an alibi, and, as he testified, said to the proprietor of the joint:

If soldiers have anything to do with it [the shooting] I might call on you some time as a witness, because I am out on pass, and I will call you if anything comes up about it. (P. 860.)

This is a significant piece of evidence. Its significance and weight I leave for your consideration. Sergeant-Major Taliaferro at the commencement of the shooting was asleep in his quarters in the Administration Building. He testified that he was awakened by the shooting and that he could not tell whether it was on the outside or the inside of the garrison wall, but thought that it was on the outside. That after hearing a number of shots he got up, dressed hurriedly, and ran to the quarters of Major Penrose to notify him of the disturbance, and not finding Major Penrose he went on to the guardhouse, some 1,260 feet from the Administration Building, looking for the commanding officer, and getting no information of him there, retraced his steps, finding Major Penrose in front of B Company barracks; he seemed to be, as Sergeant-Major Taliaferro testified, superintending the formation of that company. (P. 1495.)

Sergeant-Major Taliaferro, from the time he left the Administration Building until he found Major Penrose, traveled more than eight hundred yards, and when he found Major Penrose the men of the companies were still coming down out of the barracks. (P. 1538.)

He, like Corporal Miller, traveled a greater distance before reaching the barracks than any of the men engaged in the shooting would have had to travel in order to reenter the reservation.

As to his movements he testified:

Q. When you got to the quarters where the company was forming there was considerable confusion?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was being done with the companies when you got there, a roll call, or what was being done, or were they just forming preparatory to a roll call?—A. It seemed that some were forming and some calling the roll. I could not tell exactly what they were all doing, but they were coming out of the barracks and getting their arms. (P. 1537.)

Q. They were still coming down out of the barracks?—A. Still coming down out of the barracks and falling in.

Q. So that the company had not really been formed?—A. No, sir; they were being formed.

Q. You are quite clear about that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, when you first heard this shot, that caused you no annoyance, did it, that one shot?—A. No, sir; I didn't think it necessary to get up for one shot.

Q. Yes; I understood you that you did not think it was necessary to get up.—A. No, sir; I simply raised up and listened.

Q. You lay in bed there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then you heard the call to arms, did you?—A. No, sir; the call to arms didn't go until after I heard quite a number of shots.

Q. You heard quite a number of shots, and then did you get up?—A. Then I got up, because I knew there was some serious trouble.

Q. And dressed yourself?—A. Yes, sir; and while I was dressing the call to arms sounded.

Q. You got up and dressed yourself?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That took you a few minutes, did it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then you went to Major Penrose's quarters?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Because of being sergeant-major?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were subject to his orders, or rather his bodyguard, or with him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then you went up to the guardhouse?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then you came from the guardhouse down to the barracks?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that is the time they were falling in?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, Sergeant, in going over there to the major's quarters, how did you go—ordinary time or what you call "double time?"—A. I ran as rapidly as I could.

Q. You stopped there a moment?—A. Well, I don't know, sir. It wasn't a minute; I don't think I stayed there a minute.

Q. You say a minute?—A. Just time enough to make sure that the major wasn't in his quarters.

Q. About how far is it from the administration building to Major Penrose's quarters that he occupied there?—A. Well, I should think it was about, probably, 300 yards.

Q. Three hundred yards?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the distance from Major Penrose's quarters to the guardhouse?—A. I would place that at about 200.

Q. Two hundred?—A. Yes, sir. I am not certain about these distances; just estimating. I only stayed there a short while.

Q. I am just getting your best judgment.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What would you say would be the distance from the guardhouse down to Barracks C, which was the nearest occupied barracks to the guardhouse?—A. Well, I would put that at about 350.

Q. So that we have distances, as near as you can estimate, of 300 yards to Major Penrose's?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Two hundred yards from Major Penrose's to the guardhouse?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And about 350 yards from the guardhouse back to Barracks C?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That would make 850 yards; and when you got back to the barracks the companies were just falling in?—A. Yes, sir; the companies were just falling in.

Q. Coming down stairs with their guns?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It took you several minutes to make that round, did it not?—A. I made it very rapidly. I don't know exactly. It could not have been very long.

Q. Eight hundred and fifty yards; that would be nearly half a mile?—A. Yes, sir; I could not tell exactly how many minutes it took. (P. 1539.)

But this witness traveled even a greater distance than 850 yards, as, to use his own language, he did considerable maneuvering. As to this he testified:

Q. So in maneuvering——A. In maneuvering I passed very considerably out of a straight line. I did not make a straight line.

Q. So the distance you traveled would be considerably greater than what you gave us yesterday as the distance in a straight line?—A. Considerably greater than a straight line. I gave the distance between Major Penrose's quarters and the guardhouse. I did not state that I went in a straight line across there.

Q. No; I understand; but the way you traveled would make you go considerably farther.—A. Would make it a great deal farther than a straight line; yes, sir. (P. 1543.)

Yet, upon reaching the barracks, after traveling nearly a half a mile, the men, as he said, were just coming down out of the barracks—the companies forming.

The testimony of the commanding officers of B, C, and D companies establishes beyond question the fact that the men engaged in the shooting had ample time to rejoin their respective companies before roll call, and to do so without detection by their officers. The officers were not at the time on the lookout for soldiers who were seeking to escape detection for complicity in the shooting which all of them then attributed to the townspeople.

Captain Lyon, commanding B Company, testified that the roll call of his company was not made until from five to eight minutes after all the firing had ceased. He said:

Q. And the roll call was completed from five to eight minutes after the last shots were fired?—A. I think that is correct; that is my impression of it.

Q. And the last shots were those scattering pistol shots that you heard?—A. The last shots were pistol shots out in the town. (P. 1865.)

This officer further testified that prior to this roll call he made no attempt whatever to count the men. (P. 1867.)

Here it is proper to remark in connection with the testimony of Captain Lyon that the roll call in his company was from five to eight minutes after all the firing ceased—that is, after the firing from high-power guns and the desultory revolver firing by frightened citizens. It was after this desultory firing had ceased that the roll call of Company D was made.

On this same point Lieutenant Lawrason, commanding Company B, testified that he was in his quarters asleep and was awakened by the firing which he described like "scattering volleys fired by a small number of men (p. 1570); that upon hearing the firing he hurriedly dressed and went rapidly across the parade ground, a distance of 750 feet (p. 3299), to B Company barracks; upon arriving there he found the company—that part of it that was down—in great confusion; that after he reached the company he heard "no more firing" (p. 1615); and that the firing he heard, from his best judgment, was from "possibly half a dozen to ten rifles" (p. 1615). He further testified that it would have been possible for enlisted men to have joined the company without his knowing whether they came from the sleeping apartments of the soldiers or from the outside. On this point he testified:

Q. The barracks has a hall through the center downstairs, has it not?—A. Why, there is a way of going through. It is not a straight hall, as I recollect it. It is one or two rooms opening into each other.

Q. There is what you call a back stairway and a front stairway leading up to the quarters occupied by the soldiers, is there not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And there is also a door leading out from the back of the barracks toward the wall back of the garrison?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And a door nearly opposite the front of the barracks?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that persons could come in that back door and join the company, could they not?—A. It would be possible for them to do so; yes, sir.

Q. Possible? What do you mean by "possible?" Would it not be probable that they could do that—just as probable as though they had come down the back stairway and joined?

(At the request of the witness the preceding testimony was read by the stenographer, as follows:)

"Q. So that persons could come in that back door and join the company, could they not?—A. It would be possible for them to do so; yes, sir.

"Q. Possible? What do you mean by 'possible?' Would it not be probable that they could do that—just as probable as though they had come down the back stairway and joined?"

A. Well, sir, I don't know anything about the probabilities. There was a means of getting from the rear porch to the front porch on the lower floor and also on the upper floor.

Q. Nothing to prevent it?—A. Nothing to prevent it.

Q. And if they had come in there you would not have known whether they came from upstairs or came in the back door?—A. No, sir; I would not.

Q. Nor would you have known in that confusion whether they had come around, in the interval, between barracks B and C on the left?—A. No, sir; they might have done that without being detected by me. (P. 1615.)

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. R. 74) suspending the commodity clause of the present interstate-commerce law.

Mr. ELKINS. I ask that the unfinished business be laid aside temporarily.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from West Virginia asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WARNER. It is admitted, Mr. President, by the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] in the minority report, that Company C was not formed "until five or ten minutes after the firing ceased," because of the confusion caused by the refusal of the noncommissioned officer in charge of quarters to open the gun rack. I submit, sir, that the conduct of Sergeant Brawner, in charge of quarters, in refusing to open the gun rack, although he heard the firing and had been informed by Corporal O'Neil of his company that the call to arms had been sounded, justifies the belief that his refusal was for the purpose of adding to the confusion, thus giving additional time for the raiders to return undetected to their quarters.

Lieutenant Grier, who, in the absence of Captain Macklin, was placed in the command of Company C, testified that although he hurried across the parade ground, yet when he got to his company the firing from high-power guns had ceased.

Q. Before you got to your company the firing had ceased, as I understand you?—A. Just about the time I got over there.
Q. That is a little indefinite, Lieutenant. Was it before or after you got to the company that the firing ceased?—A. The firing was still going on when I reported to Major Penrose at B Company. By the firing I mean that promiscuous shooting from the houses in town—not the firing from high-power rifles, but the scattered fire that was going on uptown.
Q. Oh! And did you not know from the report made by Mayor Combe, not to you, but in your presence——A. Yes, sir.
Q. That when this high-power fire was through with citizens fired out of their houses, out of their windows?—A. Yes, sir; I know there was that sort of firing; there must have been.
Q. So that the high-power fire had ceased before you got to your company?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. When you speak of high-power rifles, Lieutenant, what do you mean?—A. Well, I mean a firearm such as the Winchester, Springfield, Krag, Mannlicher, and other rifles.

As to the soldiers being able after the shooting to rejoin their companies, Lieutenant Grier, in answer to the question, said:

In what different ways could they have gotten into the company?

They could have come in the way I mentioned, jumped the wall and come up on the back porch and through the corridor to the front porch, and nobody could have told whether they came downstairs or from the dining room or kitchen; or, they could have come around on either side of the barracks, either between B and C barracks or between C and the vacant barracks; or, they might have run in right through the front of the barracks.

And in answer to the further question,

In either one of these several ways they might have joined the company?

he said:

Or another way—instead of coming through on the ground floor they could have run up the back stairs through the sleeping rooms and down the front stairs and joined the company.

and to the further question,

Now that is true of that company; is it not true of all the companies?

he answered,

Yes, sir; the arrangement of the barracks was all the same. (P. 1711.)

More than this, Mr. President, Major Penrose, Captain Lyon, Lieutenant Lawrason, and Lieutenant Grier all believed that the soldiers had done the shooting. They were present that night, heard the first shooting, were familiar with the interval between the shooting and the lining up of the troops against the wall, and the formation of the companies, and the means taken to verify the presence of the various members of each company in the formation, and not one of these officers seems to have found the interval of time a serious obstacle to his conviction that the firing was done by some of the soldiers.

I submit that this testimony is a complete answer to the contention that the soldiers did not have time to join their companies and answer to roll call after the cessation of the firing.

Mr. WARREN. I notice that my colleague on the committee is somewhat fatigued. I ask him whether he would like to go on and finish now or whether he is willing to give way and finish at another time?

Mr. WARNER. That is very kind of the Senator from Wyoming. I am a little fatigued, and I could go on with my remarks and finish them in the morning, perhaps in thirty minutes, if agreeable to the Senate.

Mr. WARREN. Then, I ask that the Senator from Missouri may be permitted to lay the matter aside until to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ANKENY in the chair). The Chair hears no objection, and leave is granted.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that House bill 19158, the agricultural appropriation bill, be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 19158) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, on a former occasion when we had this bill up the acting chairman of the committee, while at his desk in the Senate, received a communication from the Secretary of Agriculture, calling attention to certain adulterations in seed that was being shipped into this country and offering suggestions to the end that we might exclude such seed grain as was filled with weed seed. He sent up two suggested amendments, either one of which we could use; they were made in the alternative.

Accompanying the communication from the Secretary of Agriculture was a letter from the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH]. I asked at the time that both the letters and proposed forms of amendments might be printed in the RECORD, so that we might have the information for such use, if any, as we might desire to make of it later on.

I now have a later communication from the Secretary of Agriculture stating that in his belief, after an examination of the pure-food law, he will be able to take care of the matter without further legislation. I therefore shall not move the amendment which I placed before the Senate and had printed in the RECORD.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I do not think it is generally known by Senators that the Senator from Wyoming has called up the agricultural appropriation bill. There are some absent, I am sure, who would like to be present. I therefore suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum having been suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ankeny	Depew	Gallinger	Perkins
Bacon	Dick	Gamble	Piles
Bankhead	Dillingham	Heyburn	Scott
Borah	Dixon	Hopkins	Smith, Md.
Brandegee	Dolliver	Johnston	Smoot
Brown	Elkins	Long	Stephenson
Burkett	Flint	McCumber	Stewart
Burnham	Foraker	Martin	Stone
Clark, Wyo.	Foster	Money	Sutherland
Cullom	Frazier	Nelson	Teller
Curtis	Frye	Newlands	Warner
Daniel	Fulton	Overman	Warren

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Forty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. DICK. The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads is in session, considering the annual appropriations for the postal service, and I ask that the members of that committee be excused from the session to-day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio states that the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads is considering the general post-office appropriation bill, and asks that the members of the committee be excused from attendance upon the current session of the Senate. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WARREN. We were about to take up the Forestry Service when the bill was laid aside the other day. In continuing the reading of the bill for amendment, I believe, the first amendment occurs on page 22, commencing at line 23.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill at page 22, line 18.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, under the head of "Forest Service," on page 22, line 23, after the words "United States," to insert "to advise the owners of woodlands as to the proper care of the same: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the purposes named in Hawaii or the Philippine Islands," so as to read:

General expenses, Forest Service: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to experiment and to make and continue investigations and report on forestry, national forests, forest fires, and lumbering, but no part of this appropriation shall be used for any experiment or test made outside the jurisdiction of the United States; to advise the owners of woodlands as to the proper care of the same: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the purposes named in Hawaii or the Philippine Islands; to investigate and test American timber and timber trees and their uses and methods for the preservative treatment of timber; to seek, through investigations and the planting of native and foreign species, suitable trees for the treeless regions; to erect necessary buildings.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I desire to interpose a point of order against the amendment, it being general legislation, and new legislation, on an appropriation bill.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the amendment as it stands may appear as an amendment, but it is really existing law as to all the first part and up to the provisio. A large portion of what is now this amendment was in the bill when it left the floor of the House, but in some way in enrollment it seems to have been left out. I will find it in the RECORD in a moment.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator's statement is of course sufficient.

Mr. WARREN. I was going to tell the Senator where the first portion is found. I refer to the clause to advise the owners of woodlands as to the proper care of the same.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is the particular portion to which I made objection.

Mr. WARREN. If Senators will turn to the RECORD they will find that an amendment was offered striking out the words "to assist," and in some unaccountable way in the printing in the enrolled bill it was dropped out.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I withdraw the point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming withdraws the point of order.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I renew the point of order. It is new legislation.

Mr. WARREN. Before the Chair rules upon the point of order perhaps I had better quote from the RECORD. An amendment was offered in the House by the chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands. I have the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 30, page 4266, and I read as follows:

That is the language of the present law—

Referring to the amendment to strike out the word "assist"— and clearly this is subject to the point of order and is very dangerous legislation. I insist on the point of order as to the word "and," at the end of line 13, and the word "assist," at the beginning of line 14, and the words "and lands," on line 14, and the words "within and adjacent to the national forests," in lines 14 and 15.

Those were the words that were stricken out, and would leave this with the law standing as it does, I think, in the shape we have it.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will pardon me, I will read from the existing law. My colleague will please notice the amendment. The existing law reads after a semicolon:

To advise the owners of woodlands as to the proper care of the same.

It is identical with the present law.

Mr. FULTON. May I ask the Senator, if that is the existing law, why should we reenact it?

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the Senator that while it is existing law, it is part of a clause that carries an appropriation, and it was thought by the House committee to be necessary to repeat it on that account. Inadvertently it was left out, and we wish to restore it as it stood.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I suggest that this matter lie over for a moment. I am told that the bill as it came from the House——

Mr. WARREN. The Senator will find that in the enrolled bill as it came from the other House the language was left out, but the bill as it really passed the House had the language in, and the only explanation is that in making it up the clerk through error struck out the whole instead of a part of the sentence. The RECORD plainly shows that when the amendment was offered the House did not cut out the words referred to.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. But, Mr. President, I understand that we are acting upon the bill as it came from the other House, and if the bill which came from the other House did not contain the words on page 22, line 23, "to advise the owners of woodlands as to the proper care of the same," I do not care to withdraw my point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that if the part of the bill in italics were in the bill as it came from the other House, the point of order would not be well taken; but as it is not, the Chair is of the opinion that the proposed amendment is in the nature of general legislation and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. WARREN. I did not plainly hear the ruling of the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that if the text of the bill as reported by the committee, which is challenged by the point of order, were in the bill as it came to the Senate from the other House, the point of order would not be well taken; but it was not in the bill as it came to the Senate. It is reported as an amendment by the committee; and as it proposes general legislation, the Chair rules that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, in order that there may be no misunderstanding about it, I wish to say that this particular language not being in the text as the bill came from the House is acknowledged to have been omitted by an error over there. If it is sought to make a point of order against this language, notwithstanding it was clearly an error, while I submit that the Chair will have to sustain the point of order, yet I think it is due the Senate that it should know it was not intended that the bill should pass in that way in the other House and that it did not, as a matter of fact, pass in that way. These same words—this same phrase—has been in every agricultural bill since 1899.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is governed by the text of the bill as reported by the committee and as it is before the Senate.

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to say that the bill as it passed a year ago used exactly the same words "to advise the owners of woodlands as to the proper care of the same." The only difference between the proposed amendment to this bill and existing law is the proviso. Would it make any difference in the ruling of the Chair as to the point of order if the language is in existing law?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has fully stated the ground of his ruling. It will appear from that that the Chair is governed by the text of the bill as reported by the committee. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, while the text of the bill as reported here does not include this language, yet it is in the law as it stands to-day; and there is nothing now here proposing new legislation. It is not introducing legislation, because it is already the law; and whether it is reported in the text of the bill in either House or not this Senate must take cognizance of the fact that it is the law. It is the law just as the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has just read it.

Mr. TELLER. Then why put it in now?

Mr. MONEY. We put it in because in the printing of the bill as it passed the House it was left out by the printer, or by the clerk who arranged the matter for the printer—I do not know whose fault it was, but it is the law now, whether it is ruled out or not.

Mr. TELLER. Why did the House put it in, then?

Mr. MONEY. That has been explained by the acting chairman, who stated it was in a clause that carried an appropriation, and they thought it better to repeat it.

Mr. TELLER. The House thought undoubtedly that it had been in the law before, but it undoubtedly had ceased to be the law because it was part of an appropriation. I do not think it is the law now; and, if it is, I do not see why it should be.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator will hardly contend that it is not the law now.

Mr. TELLER. I do contend that it is not the law now.

Mr. WARREN. Here it is in the statute.

Mr. TELLER. It was a part of an appropriation, and it died with the appropriation.

Mr. WARREN. The appropriation has not died yet, for that matter. It is the law.

Mr. TELLER. But it will die.

Mr. WARREN. Here is the law, and it will certainly hold good until the 1st day of next July. But surely the contention that this is new legislation can not prevail, because it is the existing law, word for word, just as it is.

Mr. TELLER. I understand the Chair has ruled on it, and I do not want to discuss it. I should want to discuss the absurdity of the proposition if it were going to be left in the bill, but otherwise I do not care anything about it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has examined the bill as it was referred to the committee and as it has been reported from the committee. The Chair does not discover in the bill the language now found in italics in lines 23 and 24, of page 22, of the pending bill. The Chair will not go behind the text of the bill as it came from the other House and as reported to the Senate by the committee. The Chair adheres to his ruling on the point of order.

Mr. WARREN. Then, the Chair declines to take cognizance of existing law?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks his language is not susceptible of any misinterpretation. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 23, line 8, after the word "administer," to insert "and;" and in line 9, after the word "improve," to strike out the comma, so as to read:

Provided, That the cost of any building erected shall not exceed $500; to pay all expenses necessary to protect, administer, and improve the national forests; and hereafter officials of the Forest Service designated by the Secretary of Agriculture shall, in all ways that are practicable, aid in the enforcement of the laws of the States or Territories with regard to stock, for the prevention and extinguishment of forest fires, and for the protection of fish and game, and with respect to national forests, shall aid the other Federal Bureaus and Departments on request from them, in the performance of the duties imposed on them by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 23, line 9, after the word "forests" and before the word "and," it is proposed to insert the following:

And hereafter the Secretary of Agriculture may purchase lands or rights therein for roads, trails, bridges, fences, telephone lines, fire guards, driveways for stock, ranger stations, forest nurseries, or other administrative sites or public works within or adjacent to national forests and necessary for the protection, administration, or improvement thereof.

Mr. TELLER. I raise the point of order on that amendment; that it is general legislation of a vicious character.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, for several years the Agricultural appropriation bill has read as follows:

To pay all the expenses necessary to protect, administer, improve, and extend the national forests—

The present bill eliminates the word "extend," but it does provide that these specific purchases may be made for the forest reserves and not extended other than as enumerated in the amendment proposed. I do not think there is any Senator here who will say that the items enumerated in the amendment are not wanted for the forest reserves.

Mr. TELLER. I will say so, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. TELLER. I am happy to say that I do not think it would help things at all.

Mr. SMOOT. The object, Mr. President, is this: If in a forest reserve there is a private holding, which often happens, and it is necessary to make a road through that holding, this bill simply provides that the Department may purchase, or have a right to purchase, that right of way through that private holding in the reserve; for instance, for the building of a telephone line and the making of arrangements for the building of the line through the private holding within the forest reserve. It is not for the purpose of purchasing land outside and to extend the forest reserve, but it is for the administrative purposes of the reserve. It seems to me, Mr. President, that no one should object to that amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment proposes legislation in the nature of general legislation to an appropriation bill, and the Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I offer another amendment, which I send to the desk in lieu of the amendment which I have just offered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 23, line 8, it is proposed to strike out the word "and;" in line 9, after the word "improve" and before the word "the," to insert the words "and extend;" also, in line 9, after the word "forests," to insert the words "but no part of this appropriation shall be used for such extension except by the purchase of land or rights therein found to be necessary for such protection, administration, or improvement," so as to read:

To pay all expenses necessary to protect, administer, improve, and extend the national forests; but no part of this appropriation shall be used for such extension except by the purchase of land or rights therein found to be necessary for such protection, administration, or improvement.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I make the point of order that that amendment proposes general legislation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment proposes general legislation, and therefore it is in contravention of paragraph 3 of Rule XVI. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. NELSON. I move to strike out the portion of the bill commencing with line 24 on page 23 and ending with the word "ten," in line 4 on the next page. I make this motion at the instance of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KITTREDGE]. It will be observed that the bill, commencing in line 18, reads:

And hereafter the Secretary of Agriculture may, in his discretion, permit timber and other forest products cut or removed from the national forests, except the Black Hills National Forest in South Dakota, to be exported from the State, Territory, or the district of Alaska in which said forests are respectively situated.

Then comes the proviso which I seek to have stricken out. It is as follows:

Provided, That the exportation of dead and insect-infested timber only from said Black Hills National Forest shall be allowed until such time as the Forester shall certify that the ravages of the destructive insects in said forest are practically checked, but in no case after July 1, 1910.

In the country around the Black Hills timber is very scarce, and the people object to having that timber exported out of the country. What is known as "dead and insect-infested timber," if it is cut and utilized immediately, is as good as green timber and as valuable. The people in the Black Hills and in the country immediately around there feel that they need all that timber, and they are utterly opposed to having it exported. I therefore move to strike out that proviso.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, as I understand the Senator from Minnesota, he proposes to strike out the proviso commencing on line 24, page 23, including the amendment proposed by the committee, and extending down to the semicolon in line 4, page 24. Is that right?

Mr. NELSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. WARREN. Now, Mr. President, I will explain the committee's action on that. With the understanding that it was entirely agreeable to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KITTREDGE], who was not present, after we had examined the matter, the committee proposed an amendment so as to have the period in which the timber could be sold end on July 1, 1910. That is my understanding of the matter.

There is diseased timber there, and it is perhaps in a way the source of contagion, if I may use that term. It is sought to cut out that which is diseased and protect the balance. We have heretofore had legislation providing for the sale of such timber. I think it was included two or three years ago, or perhaps longer ago than that, and the point was made that the right to sell the timber under that legislation would expire at the end of the present fiscal year. The Forestry Service claimed that it had not been able to entirely eradicate the disease, but it feels sure it can get it under control in the next year. So after ascertaining that the Senator from South Dakota objected to its going on indefinitely, he was communicated with, as I understand, and we amended the provision by adding the words "but in no case after July 1, 1910."

Mr. NELSON. I want to say to the Senator from Wyoming that I am advised by the Senator from South Dakota that he is utterly opposed to the provision, and it is at his instance and at his request that I make this motion. The objection does not go to the right of the Department to cut down and sell and dispose of dead and down timber, but the objection is to exporting it from the State. They want the dead and down timber that is cut and removed to be kept in the State and not exported outside. That is the objection that the Senator from South Dakota has to that provision.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. NELSON. I am really occupying the time of the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I will finish in a moment, so that the Senator from Utah can have the floor. The committee desired in this matter, so far as possible, to have an agreement between the people of South Dakota and the Forest Service. It believed they had that agreement. I notice that the other Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE] is not present, and perhaps the Senator from Minnesota would let the amendment lie over until a later time, until it can be ascertained upon what we act, unless he has something direct from the Senator that comprehends this matter, including the amendment which was proposed by the committee.

Mr. NELSON. Before the Senator from South Dakota went away he brought me a copy of the bill and explained to me the objection to this paragraph in toto, and since then, after the bill was reported with this amendment, his secretary called my attention to the matter, and told me that he was still opposed to it, and wanted the paragraph stricken out.

Mr. WARREN. After the bill was reported to the Senate?

Mr. NELSON. Yes; after the amendment that the committee had reported to it. I am only acting in his behalf in this matter in his absence. I suggest that the paragraph be stricken out, and if it is found to be an error, it can be corrected in conference.

Mr. WARREN. I will say that our information came to the committee from the Senator's letter to Mr. Pinchot, the Forester, so that the Senate committee only acted on what it presumed to be correct. I will say that the amendment suggested by the committee was not satisfactory to the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE], who was present and wanted to leave it open entirely, so that the diseased timber might be cleaned out; but because of the known views of the junior Senator from South Dakota, the amendment was put in, notwithstanding. If we are in error now and can please neither one of those Senators, I would prefer at least to have the matter go over for the time being. It can be taken up before we dispose of the bill.

Mr. NELSON. Very well; let it go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over at the request of the Senator from Wyoming. The Secretary will state the next amendment which was passed over.

The SECRETARY. On page 23, line 18, after the word "and," where it occurs the second time, it is proposed to insert the word "hereafter," so as to read:

And hereafter the Secretary of Agriculture may, in his discretion, permit timber and other forest products cut or removed from the national forests, except the Black Hills National Forest in South Dakota, to be exported from the State, Territory, or the district of Alaska in which said forests are respectively situated.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, in the Fifty-eighth Congress Idaho was included within the exception from the provisions of that section which permits the export of timber from the State. During the succeeding Congress when the agricultural appropriation bill, or the bill carrying this appropriation, was before Congress I was unavoidably absent because of illness, and through some oversight or inadvertence the provision excepting Idaho from the provision of that section was overlooked and it was dropped out. So Idaho was again restored as one of those States from which timber might be exported. Of course, I am perfectly satisfied that no one knowingly or intentionally restored Idaho to the provisions of the act permitting the exportation of timber with a knowledge of the fact that it had been excepted from the provisions of the bill upon my motion and that if I were present I would again ask that it be excepted. So, it seems to me, that it is entirely proper that I should request at this time that Idaho be restored to the States enumerated as exceptions to the rule permitting the exportation of timber. I therefore move to amend, on page 23, line 22, preceding the word "to," by inserting the words "and in the State of Idaho." It merely restores the provision of the bill enacted in the Fifty-eighth Congress after very thorough consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair would suggest that as the proposed amendment is not an amendment to the amendment of the committee, it is not in order under the rules, except by unanimous consent, the agreement being that the committee amendments should be first considered.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is involved, Mr. President, in the committee amendment. The word "hereafter" has direct relation to this amendment, and I understand the committee is proposing to insert the word "hereafter" in line 18, after the word "and" where it appears the second time. That is the committee amendment, as I understand. It is in italics in the bill. Inasmuch as that word "hereafter" runs through the entire paragraph, providing that hereafter the Secretary may do certain things, and as it is one of those things that he is hereafter to be directed to do I am objecting to, it would seem to me that the amendment might be proper.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the amendment will be entertained.

Mr. WARREN. I should prefer that the Senator would withhold that amendment until I can see the legislation that it refers to. This applies merely here to the Black Hills forest. As that seems to be in the air now, and until we may settle about that and Alaska, I would prefer that we pass on further in the consideration of the bill until I can see about that.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. I wish to ask the Senator in charge of the measure, the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], for information what the law is at present in regard to the shipment from the State where timber is cut or lumber manufactured therefrom out of a forest reserve? I recall that we had the matter up in the last Congress and the Congress before and, as I recall, the power of the Secretary to restrict the shipment of lumber out of the State was limited only to certain States—Idaho, I know, was one—and the Black Hills. As I understand, to-day the Secretary is without any power to restrict the shipment of lumber manufactured from timber cut in a forest reserve out of the State, and in my judgment that is the way it should be. If I am mistaken, I should be glad to have the Senator correct me, as I have not looked up the law.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, as the question is directed to me, I will say that I understand the forest reserves belong to the United States, and they can sell the lumber and it can be exported from the States unless we, by some legislation, provide otherwise. There seems to be reason why this particular Black Hills timber reserve, which is a small reserve with an immense country around it without timber, and in order to identify this diseased timber and provide for it, this exception was put in. I do not recall the matter as to Idaho. I hope the Senator will send me the bill which contained that item.

Mr. FULTON. I am not speaking of that, Mr. President. I am speaking of the general provision in which the word "hereafter" is inserted by way of amendment, so that it reads:

And hereafter the Secretary of Agriculture may, in his discretion, permit timber and other forest products cut or removed from the national forests, except the Black Hills National Forest in South Dakota, to be exported from the State, Territory, or the district of Alaska in which said forests are respectively situated.

It has always been my conviction that there ought to be no restriction on what shall be done to this timber after it shall be cut. I am aware that the Senator from Idaho wants it restricted to the Idaho market, but I take a different view so far as the State I represent is concerned. I wish to move to strike this out.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I should like to take up the consideration of my amendment at this time if it is agreeable to Senators.

This amendment is quite far-reaching in its effect and practically opens up for consideration all of the features of this bill. It involves the question of the right and the propriety of taking the timber in a new State under control of the General Government for the purpose of disposing of it without consulting the State of which it is a part. It involves the right of the Government to exclude the State from the possession and enjoyment of the possession of its own lands. It involves the question as to the character of the title which the Government holds to these lands. They are all involved in this question as to whether or not a sovereign State may object to the power being given to the Secretary of Agriculture to exercise his discretion and to substitute his discretion for the law of the land in regard to the rights of the States as against the United States. It is a question of more than passing importance. I shall consider in connection with it, and not at very great length, because I do not feel capable to-day of engaging in a protracted discussion of this question, the right of the Government to control the waters in a State and the relation which the Government bears to the waters of a State. I shall take as a text for convenient consideration a single State, because that which is true of a single State is probably true of every State in which forest reserves are located.

Mr. President, the Government can not acquire land by purchase except within the limitations of the Constitution itself. It is given power direct, by the provisions of that instrument, to purchase a tract of land 10 miles square for the purposes of Government, for the establishment of a capital. It is given permission in the same section to purchase land for docks, shipyards, and other necessary governmental purposes.

It is given no other authority under the Constitution to purchase land. It can not purchase land for the purpose of selling it again or condemn land in order that it may sell it to somebody else than the party against whom it condemned it. That is a large question, and one that is involved not only in the measure under consideration, but that has been and will be again involved in the consideration of important measures before the Congress of the United States.

It does not need an elaborate discussion, because the law is written in twelve lines in the Constitution, which is an instrument of limitations, and the scope of which Congress can not enlarge. It is a familiar provision.

I had intended, when the Senator from Utah suggested the amendment which was held to be in contravention of the rule, to raise the question against the amendment that it is not competent for Congress to authorize or for the Government to undertake to exercise the power to purchase property for anything except strictly governmental purposes within the provisions of the Constitution itself.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. In some aspects the proposition of the Senator from Idaho is new and startling. Does the Senator raise any question as to the right of the General Government, not as a matter of policy as to what it shall do, but as to the control of what we have known as the public domain—the large areas of land in the Territories and afterwards when they become States? Does the Senator raise any point as to the right of the Government to control that public domain, to declare that it shall be given as subsidies to corporations, to homestead dwellers, or generally the purposes to which the public domain has been devoted heretofore? Does the Senator go beyond that with his general proposition that the General Government can not acquire property and lands except for certain purposes?

Mr. HEYBURN. No, Mr. President. The function of the Government in dealing with its public lands is to dispose of them rather than to acquire others. They belonged to the Government as a part of its possessions at its formation.

Mr. HALE. The Senator does not in any way controvert that proposition?

Mr. HEYBURN. Not at all.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator from Idaho contend that the Government had no right whatever to dispose of timber lands that are now in the public domain, even if they are within the boundaries of a State?

Mr. HEYBURN. I want to answer that question by itself. I was speaking of the Government's right to acquire property and not of its right to dispose of it. I will come to the question of its right to dispose of it in an orderly procedure in this argument.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought, of course, the Senator was speaking to his amendment, in relation to having Idaho placed in a position where the Government could not cut timber within the forest reserves of Idaho and export it from that State.

Mr. HEYBURN. I was not speaking as to that feature of the amendment. I stated when I took the floor that I desired to discuss some of the features of this bill, probably beyond the scope of the amendment, but still within its spirit.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from Idaho yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that in 1803, under the Administration of Thomas Jefferson, we acquired what is known as the Louisiana purchase. We acquired it by treaty and paid something like $15,000,000 for it. If it had not been for that purchase of Thomas Jefferson, most of our people in Minnesota would have been French instead of American citizens. Then there was the Gadsden purchase.

Mr. SMOOT. And the Alaska purchase.

Mr. NELSON. The Supreme Court of the United States has long ago decided that we have a right to acquire land by exploration or discovery, by conquest, through war, by purchase, and through treaty. The Louisiana territory we bought. We paid for it $15,000,000, and have been peddling it out ever since, selling it to railroads and actual settlers. We have not got rid of it all. I think the Senator's own State is considered a part of the Louisiana purchase.

Mr. HEYBURN. I did not think I would be misunderstood when I stated that the Government did not have the power under the Constitution to purchase property with a view of selling it again, as referring to the class of property which we take as a governmental function from some other government. I do not think it necessary to discuss the question as to the power of the Government to acquire the land that came to us by the Louisiana purchase or the Alaskan purchase or the Gadsden purchase, because I was referring to a different class of land entirely.

The Senator from Utah proposes by his amendment, to which I have already referred, to purchase rights of way; in other words, acquire by purchase or condemnation the property of private individuals; and I was addressing my remarks to that class of property and that class of acquisition; and I think the distinction is so clear that there can be no room for mistake. Hence I will not be, at this time at least, led into a consideration of the wider question of the right to acquire property through international agreement, call it purchase or call it what you will.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. I desire to say that I fully agree with the Senator on that proposition, and I think the distinction is very plain. Merely to emphasize it, I wish to call his attention to the fact that the Constitution, while it makes no reference whatever to the acquisition of land from foreign governments and the acquisition of new territory—additional territory—does restrict the power of the General Government to acquire land over which it can exercise exclusive jurisdiction within its own boundaries.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; within its own boundaries.

Mr. President, this whole question brings up for consideration what is known as the forestry policy of the Government. On the wall before the Senate is a chart of prophecy that would conjure up the spirits of the prophets of old and which calls forth a degree of wisdom in the line of prophecy that none of them ever possessed. It is the boldest piece of prophecy ever presented to any people. Upon the face of that map, divided by varying colors, is written, "Will be exhausted in fifteen years." That applies to a stretch of country which is an empire in itself. Then "Will be exhausted in twenty years." Then again, "Will be exhausted in thirty years." And then again, "in forty years;" and so we have the prophecy—the prophecy, perhaps, of the Chief Forester of the United States—estimating the fate and the destiny of the timber lands of our country.

People who are accustomed to accepting statements as true without knowing whether or not the party making the statements has a sound basis upon which to make his prophecy may accept that with a degree of comfort which I am not capable of feeling under the circumstances. I for several years past have had opportunity to observe lumbering in timber that has grown within my recollection. There are States in this Union in which they are using in the general market timber that was planted by the present generation.

These prophets have left out of consideration entirely the fact that timber grows as well as dies; that the process of multiplication and renewal has been going on for untold centuries, and that the supply of timber upon the world's surface to-day is as great as it ever was at any time in the history of the world.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator from Idaho claim that the supply of timber in the United States to-day is as great as it was a hundred years ago?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes. In a hundred years there have been two generations of saw logs grown. I have seen one of them grown, and so have many other Senators in this body—grown from the ground up to commercial timber.

I can look out of my window at home and see an entire mountain, the face of which is as big as this city, covered with a growth of merchantable timber, and when I went there first, in this month in 1884, I walked through the ashes of the fires that had burned up the last remnant of the previous growth of timber. I saw that growth of timber start and grow until it is to-day commercial timber. That is one instance. I was told to-day by a member of this body that within his State they are cutting timber that was planted during his recollection. But that is only half; it is only the third of a hundred years. The growth estimated by those who are competent to estimate it of the timber in our Northwestern country is 10 per cent a year, and that process goes on day and night, year in and year out. That is the constant, accumulated volume of our timber supply.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator mean to say that the timber matures 10 per cent every year and that in ten years the stock of timber is matured?

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator's mathematics are wrong. The word "mature" is an indefinite term. I said "growth." A tree grows for a hundred years, and I do not know at what period the Senator would consider it matured. One person might consider a tree matured at one period and another at another period. I mean to say that in our country and our climate the growth of the trees is 10 per cent a year, and it is so stated by authorities who are worthy of consideration.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator from Idaho yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. Some years ago a committee came here from Texas and appeared before a committee of which I was a member. They stated to our committee that the pine timber of that country would grow from a seedling to profitably merchantable timber in fifty years. That is more than 10 per cent. Some of the committee said it would do it in thirty years.

Mr. HEYBURN. The use to which the timber is to be put determines whether it is considered merchantable timber or not. Timber is merchantable for some purposes at one condition of growth and for other purposes it is not. But in our country we use timber for mining purposes, for building purposes, for a great variety of purposes. For house logs timber is mature, and it is sufficient for the purpose, at ten years in many instances, or fifteen years. It depends upon the size of the house logs. For timber in mines, stulls, and other mining timber it is quite sufficient in growth at the end of fifteen years. So the term is what you may call a sliding one when you speak of mature timber. If you want it for great beams and girders for buildings, of course it must have more years within which to grow.

I have been diverted somewhat from the line of thought I intended to present. The whole cry behind this legislation is "Preserve the forests." There is no man on earth who is more sincerely desirous of preserving the forests than I. I want to preserve the forests for the people. Now, bear that in mind, I want to protect the forests for the people—not from the people. They are the people's forests, and the great difficulty has grown out of the fact that some have unfortunately conceived the idea that it is their duty to protect the forests from the people instead of for the people. They are the same class of people who, if they succeed in getting an office, think it is their duty to govern the people. There is no man under the Constitution of the United States invested with the power to govern the people. The people govern themselves. I have seen men who, when they got a little gilt on their shoulders or a little cord or tape across their manly breasts, thought they governed the people. They felt as if they were the governors of the people until the people disabused their minds of that idea. Generally the people do it at the first election that comes around. Sometimes, unfortunately, it is deferred.

Let us start out from the right point of view in this matter. We have now something over 1,500 employees of the Government in the Forestry Service out in our country in the West who believe conscientiously that they are there to govern the people. I have talked with some of them. They think it is their duty to govern the people according to the rules and regulations which they and those above them have made. I believe we should disabuse their minds of that and teach them that they are there to do the will of the people, to serve the people according to the express will of the people, as written in the statute books and not elsewhere.

"Preserve the forests." Yes. A few days ago it was my pleasure to visit that section of the United States where I was born and spent my boyhood and where my father and grandfather and great-grandfather spent theirs, and I found it with as fine forests of oak and ash and hickory and chestnut and other merchantable timber as there is in the world, as fine to-day as it was when those people came from old England to those shores; and yet civilization has been there, but not the hand of the spoiler. Men have lived there who had a due appreciation of the relation which the timber of the country bears to its prosperity, and they have protected it, and the timber tracts are about the same in area and in boundaries that they were two hundred years ago on those old homesteads. They were American citizens of the same blood, of the same temper, and with the same purpose and the same honesty as are the American citizens who live in the State of Idaho or Montana or Oregon or any other of those great States on the Pacific coast—States in their swaddling clothes, perhaps, to-day, but which have made more growth in twenty years than these States have made in a hundred years, just as this country has made a greater growth and advancement in every respect in a hundred years than old England has made in a thousand years.

We must carry these thoughts and these ideas with us in estimating and determining what we will do as between the nation at large and these new States. When they are as old as Pennsylvania or New York, or Massachusetts, they will rival those States in population, in wealth and in greatness. They will be their peers truly; and you must bear it in mind. The only thing that can stand against that will be the cramping bands of iron that are sought to be placed upon those people and those States, and their ambitions and possibilities by such legislation as this, under the guise of protecting the forests. Protect them for the people—and those are the people If you want new forests in other sections of the United States, plant them. We are asked in this bill to appropriate thousands and thousands of dollars for the purpose of planting forests. Where would you go to plant them? Would you go into a State that is already 34.5 per cent forest reserves and plant more forests there and take up some more of the land that is not forest and make it into forests? Or would you go out into the open country, convenient to places lacking forests, where they need them, and plant them there? Are you going to depend always on hauling the lumber that you will need or think you need in the East and in the great Central West, from the Rocky Mountains, plus the freight, plus the labor, plus the time, plus all the items of expense? Why do you not create the product nearer home, where you need it? Do you need it in New England? Do you need it in the Eastern States?

New England had to hew her civilization out of the forests. The pioneers who have gone into the Western country do not differ much in aspect or mental caliber or physical endurance from those who went into the Bay of Massachusetts or the woods of Maine or the shores of Connecticut or elsewhere. They are of the same blood, the same temper, the same endurance that can hew out prosperity and make homes and raise families and cultivate intelligence and bring culture. They are the sons and grandsons of those upon whom we base our pride on the Atlantic coast. "Save the forests." Yes; every tree. In thirty years of life continuously in the forest I undertake to say that I have never seen as much as ten trees cut wantonly or without a purpose or that did not serve a necessary and a useful purpose when they were cut. Men do not go out in the morning with an ax and chop trees merely for exercise. They do it because they have a purpose in cutting the trees, and that purpose is one of the very first importance to the individual who cuts the tree.

From the Atlantic to the Pacific we have simply exchanged trees for civilization. We have exchanged trees for the timbers of our buildings, for houses and barns and fences and the conveniences of civilization. We have been doing it from the first day the first settler landed upon the Atlantic coast. It is safe to say that his first act was, with his ax, to make a shelter for himself and his family, first the cabin or the shelter of bark.

I have seen them made with the bark of trees to shelter from the rain. I have done it myself—stripped the bark from great white cedar trees, with the top resting upon a pole, and used it as a sufficient shelter until such a time as convenience and opportunity would enable me to do better. My experience is that of hundreds and thousands of men. The civilization of this country started from the rude shack, the humble cottage.

Two years ago, when we were considering a similar measure, there were brought in here as exhibits photographs taken in Idaho, just over the mountains from where I live, of poor, old cabins built in the haste incident to getting in out of the storm, all of them better than the cabin in which the immortal Lincoln was born and reared, all of them better than the cabins in which the majority of men who have held the destiny of this nation in their hands were reared. Yet they were held up here to be scoffed at; and I have in my desk here now photographs taken by the Department for the purpose of holding up to this body in derision the homes of those settlers. But if you pass around the corner and come back to-morrow, or a few to-morrows hence, you will find in place of those cabins substantial homes. Until the sawmill comes they must hew their homes out with the ax. I have lived in cabins made without a nail or without a saw, split and rived from the timber that was cut from the stump, made as nearly to conform to the necessities of building as possible, and I have lived as comfortably in them and performed as good and efficient service as a citizen of my country as though I lived in the marble halls that surround this capital.

Mr. President, let us preserve the forests for the people's use, not for the people's æsthetic admiration, not that we may gaze upon them with swelling hearts and pride in the spread of their branches and the strength of their trunks. I am a very tree worshiper by instinct, and for that reason I have lived among the trees. I would not live in a country where trees did not grow and water did not run in clear streams, and I want the earth piled up with some mountains about me.

I admire the trees as much as anybody can admire them, but I admire them not only for their beauty, because they are the link between savagery and the highest civilization. Civilization is marked to the extent that we have taken these things that nature has provided and used them. There will be no famine in your time or in the time of your grandchildren or great-grandchildren. The great God planned this world upon the principle of perpetuity forever, and no more will this supply of nature's attributes be exhausted than will the human family.

I think sometimes of a graphic description I once read of the impressions upon the mind of Adam the first time he saw the sun go down and did not know that it would ever rise again. That is the spirit in which the people who bring such prophecies as that spread upon the wall seem to regard this question. When a tree is gone they feel that desperate sense of loss that one feels over a loss which can never be replaced. They have lost sight of the fact that all nature is a process of death and life, of destruction and of reconstruction. We have traded forests for cities, we have traded forests for railroads, we have traded forests for homes and barns and fences; and which would you rather have?

Where would the civilization of this country be to-day had the forestry laws, that are now sought to be enforced upon us, existed when the Pilgrims were in Massachusetts, and the English at Jamestown, and the Quakers on the Delaware? Where would be the civilization of to-day if we had been barred from the use of those resources that the great God placed for our use, with a provision for their own renewal and perpetuity?

Mr. President, I trust that Senators will not allow themselves to be alarmed by these prophecies of evil nor be misled by the sentiment of saving the forests. Let us save not only the forests, but save the civilization of the age and the rights of man. And what are they?

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. BURKETT. I have been listening to the Senator's remarks, especially the one suggesting that he wants to save the forests for the people. I observe all the way through, as I understand him, he leaves out the words "all the people;" and if I gather aright from his language and from his amendment, he proposes to save the forests of Idaho for the people of Idaho alone.

Then I should like to ask him this question before I sit down: Suppose the Senator from every State that is marked green on the map upon the wall (for I understand that is pretty largely where the exports of timber will come from in the next four years) should rise and propose that his particular State should be excepted, what would he expect those of us to do who live down through that part of the country that was civilized without all of this timber that the Senator has been referring to? What are we going to do there?

I should like to ask the Senator if he would expect that the Senators from those States in the Mississippi Valley should sit here and permit the exception of one State after another to be written in here, so that in the end practically two-thirds of the territory of this country would be absolutely deprived of any lumber at all? And then, also, should we permit those from lumber States to put a tariff on lumber from Canada, so that we could not even get it from Canada? What should we do down in those States in the Mississippi Valley where we have been bringing in our lumber for thirty or forty years?

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I assume the Senator from Nebraska desires an answer to that question, and it is so brief and so obvious that it might have answered itself. My proposition is not to prevent the exportation of lumber from the State, but it is to prevent the Government of the United States from starting a lumber yard and entering into competitive relations with the individual enterprise of the country. I am going to devote a moment or two to that directly.

Nebraska has built her cities of lumber from other States very largely. Outside of a little tract of pine timber, principally black pine, and some yellow up in the northwestern corner of Nebraska, which I remember very well passing through and spending some days in just thirty years ago, there is no pine timber in Nebraska of which I have any knowledge. I think probably three-fourths of the lumber of which the towns and the farmhouses and the fences of Nebraska are constructed came from the mountain States, and it came on reasonable terms and fair conditions through the ordinary market, the competitive market of individual enterprise, and that is the condition I am speaking on behalf of to-day. I am opposing the idea that the Government of the United States shall launch forth in industrial enterprises in competition with individuals and combinations of individuals.

There is no more important question to be determined in legislation than as to how far the Government will engage in business enterprise. It involves not only the question of fairness and competition between the Government and the individual, but it involves a greater question—that of the right of the Government, consistent with the principles upon which it is founded, to engage in individual enterprise.

This Government was organized to carry the will of the people into effect as it might be expressed by them in their representative bodies. It was not intended as a business enterprise or a joint stock company for the purpose of engaging in any kind of business. Whenever this Government forgets that principle and gets far away from it, then it is more nearly in danger than it was in the darkest hour of any war that it ever had, because it is threatened with a character of destruction that can not be rebuilt by wise statesmanship, because the property interest will have gone beyond the grasp and the reach of individuals, of the lawmakers, if you please.

I want to sound a word of warning now. Every day in this body I hear through bills introduced and through messages received that threat at the door of this nation.

Mr. BURKETT. Now, Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. BURKETT. The Senator answers that by raising a question between the Government handling the supply and the individual.

Mr. HEYBURN. I really had not finished answering the question.

Mr. BURKETT. If the Senator will permit me, while I am on my feet, I will just add this, and then he can answer it altogether. It is true that Nebraska probably built her houses mostly from lumber from the mountain States. We had to do it, because we got to building houses just after Wisconsin and those Northern States there had exhausted their timber supply, and we had to look westward. Our freight rate would have been cheaper the other way. The Government did permit the individual to handle the timber supply in that section of the country which would have been most easily and most cheaply tributary to us had not the supply been exhausted. Now, the Senator insists that we shall permit those States in the West to handle their timber supply in the same way the Government permitted the timber supply in the Lake regions to be handled, and it is plain they have exhausted the supply there. In short, that system of perpetuating timber has been a failure.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, timber is no more sacred as a commodity than corn or tobacco or any other product of the earth. It is a business commodity, and the wisdom and the patriotism of the individual are just as safe a guardian for it in his individual capacity as in his aggregate capacity as a part of the Government. No one destroys timber for the purpose of destroying it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think I caught the words of the Senator aright, but if I did I do not believe he will undertake to say it is true that the timber supply is not different from the grain supply. Is that the meaning of what the Senator said?

Mr. HEYBURN. I will answer the Senator. I did not say that the timber supply is not different from the grain supply. I was not comparing that class of differences. I was speaking of them by classification. They are commodities of commerce and trade entering into the business of the country. Now, of course——

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator will pardon me a minute. I am not so dense as to maintain that there is no difference between timber and corn or wheat, or between timber and potatoes. I was merely speaking of them as commodities by classes.

Now, Mr. President, States that were not blest with a natural supply of timber have of necessity drawn from States where timber grew. That is so obvious as to seem almost unnecessary to be stated. Nebraska and Iowa and Kansas and a part of Illinois happen to be what we call "prairie countries" in the main. Indiana was a timber country. When I first remember Indiana they were trying to get rid of it by girdling their big black walnut trees for the purpose of killing them and then rolling them into heaps and burning them up. They burnt up more of value in walnut timber in Indiana than they could produce there in a century.

But those are things of the past, and while we may gather some wisdom from it the past did not hold all the wisdom of the ages. We knew what they knew and we knew something more that we have learned since they conveyed the results of their knowledge to us. We must deal with this from to-day.

Mr. BURKETT. Now, right there, does not the Senator think it would have been a good idea if the Government had taken hold of those men who were girdling the black walnut trees to destroy them and said, "Here, you move on! You think this is the only place there is to live, but move on! Push out into the prairies of Illinois and Iowa and Nebraska and save this timber for future generations?"

Mr. HEYBURN. Who would say this?

Mr. BURKETT. The Government would say it.

Mr. HEYBURN. Who is the Government; what is the Government? What mouth would have spoken the word?

Mr. BURKETT. That would have been the Government.

Mr. HEYBURN. What does the Senator mean by Government?

Mr. BURKETT. The Government would have been all the people instead of a few people destroying the walnut trees.

Mr. HEYBURN. That sounds too much like the edict of a king. It sounds too much like the German or Austrian Emperor with regard to forests. They say to their subjects, "Do," and they do: "Do not," and they do not. I am speaking of the Government of which the Senator from Nebraska and every other man is a part. He is as much a part as any other man, and he is no more a part than any other man. There is nobody invested with the power under the Constitution to say, "You move on there!" It will be a bad day for this country when any man is invested with the power to say to another in this country, "You move on there!"

Mr. BURKETT. But if the Government had said that land shall not be owned privately, but shall be set apart as a timber reserve, the man would have said to himself that he should move on.

Mr. FULTON. Will the Senator permit me to answer?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Idaho said that there was just as much timber in this country to-day as there ever was.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. Wait just a moment.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will not wait. The Senator will pardon me, because that was about a half an hour ago. I am not going to backstitch on this floor in that way.

Mr. SMOOT. Why do thirty minutes make a difference?

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator will have his own time to answer, or if I can get around to it all right; but to be taken back and back in that way destroys any argument that a man might make. It is not intended as a discourtesy to the Senator that I decline to be thus taken back, but it is in the ordinary orderly presentation of this kind of a question.

Mr. SMOOT. The only thing is I can not harmonize——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield further to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I can not harmonize the statement made thirty minutes ago with the statement that is made now in relation to the girdling of great trees, cutting them down and rolling them up and burning them.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I do not suppose the Senator from Utah will be able to harmonize a great many things that I shall say. It is just possible he will not, because he is in sympathy with the prophecy represented by that map upon the wall; and I expect that the map was put there for the convenience of the Senator from Utah when he comes to talk with that certainty and that spirit of prophecy which he doubtless possesses, but which I do not claim to possess.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will not have to indulge in any spirit of prophecy, but I will indulge simply in figures. I can prove, not by prophecy, but by the absolute figures in relation to the timber of this country that it is being destroyed rapidly, and that there is not anywhere near the amount of timber in the country that there was twenty years ago or ten years ago.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, there are people who believe a great many things that others will not. For instance, I have in my mind a young man who has worked for me recently—and I say it without any disrespect to the State of Arkansas, from which he came—who believes in hoop snakes, and he thinks it is perfectly reasonable, and you could not argue it out of him.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not profess any knowledge in relation to hoop snakes, but I want to say to the Senator from Idaho that he believes a great many things in relation to timber in the United States that are just as absurd as the belief in hoop snakes.

Mr. HEYBURN. In starting out upon this career of legislation Congress gave away half of all the timber in our Western States. They gave every alternate section to the railroad companies, so that the railroads had 50 per cent of the original supply with which to do business. Then they allowed the railroad companies to select out that which was valueless to them for their purposes and create it into forest reserves, with a provision in the law for the creation of forest reserves that the railroad company might select in lieu of all the odd sections that fell within the forest reserves sections elsewhere in the public domain, and the companies proceeded to carry that out by selecting the finest timber lands in the world in lieu of the sections of their original grant that had no value.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. HEYBURN. Now, if the Senator will permit me to finish a thought——

Mr. SMOOT. Just there I wish to say——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think the Senator can charge that up to the Forestry Service, because that happened long before the Forestry Service was established.

Mr. HEYBURN. If the Forestry Service will wait until I attack it, it will probably be able to apply what I say to its case.

I was saying that owing to the railroad grant, which, of course, covered exactly half of all the forest lands through which the grant passed, the timber lands were divided in that way. Then, in order that the railroads might get a still larger share, they were permitted to "surrender"—that is the word that they used—the land to which their grant attached and upon which there was good timber. In many cases—and I say it without any fear of successful contradiction—they first cut the timber off the lands and then surrendered them or exchanged them for other timber lands. In that way, in the fair State of Idaho, the land grant extends practically over all of the timber in north Idaho. In that State they cleared thousands and hundreds of thousands of the best timber in the world, such white pine timber as those of you who have never been in that country have never dreamed would grow upon the earth. Then, when individuals who had settled in the farming regions around the edge of this timber conceived the idea that they would go in there and start their little custom mills and supply the outlying neighbors with the lumber for their fences and their barns and their ordinary domestic uses, and began to go in to share these forests that were owned largely by the railroads and by those who held by assignment from the railroads, some means had to be devised to shut out those little fellows, and how did they do it? They created a forest reserve.

So to-day you have your choice in that State and in many others similarly situated of buying first of the railroad company or its grantees, and its grantees are represented largely by what are known as the Weyerhauser syndicate. Your first choice is that you can buy of them, at their mills, at such price and on such terms as they choose to impose, or you may exercise another option; you may buy of the Government of the United States.

The Government sold last year two or three million dollars' worth of lumber in the United States. I will give the exact figures before I am through. The Government is in the lumber business. It has its clerks of various classes; it has its offices, one in my city, and you can go there and buy lumber as you would buy it at an ordinary lumber yard.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Does not the Senator know that there can be no lumber sold out of a forest reserve unless bids are made upon the timber, and does he not also know that the purchase is made through the regular Government officers on the reservation?

Mr. HEYBURN. That would doubtless appeal to one who was raised under a Government other than ours, where the center of power was in an individual, and where there was the king's forester to dole out the right to gather sticks in the forest. But to one who is a cowner in these things, to one who is as much an owner as any other person of this property, that kind of an argument does not appeal, if he has the spirit of American manhood in him. This thing of getting the consent of some one to do that which it is your God-given right to do does not appeal to an American citizen. I want the consent of no man to do anything in this world——

Mr. SMOOT. Then, as I understand——

Mr. HEYBURN. Excuse me; I should like to finish one sentence. Whatever I do in this world I want to do because I have the right to do it or not to do it at all; and of course I do not include in that the personal courtesies that are passed from one man to another. I am speaking now of the exercise of the rights of property. I want no man to give me any property, and I want no property that I am required to obtain the consent of anybody to use. Neither does any other true American citizen. If he does, he is of a truckling race, of those people who are accustomed to live under tyrants and to own nothing except by the consent of tyrants.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I take it from what the Senator from Idaho says that he thinks he, as well as everybody else in Idaho, ought to have a perfect right of going into a forest reserve and cutting what timber he wants. Is that the position the Senator takes?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, how long would the forests of Idaho last if that were done?

Mr. HEYBURN. They will last as long as the sun rises and sets, with the class of citizenship that we have in Idaho. They will last just as long as the forests have lasted where my ancestors lived, and they are there to-day.

Mr. SMOOT. They will last just as long as the forests of Wisconsin will last.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator is judging me by a standard of which I have very little comprehension—that of a vandal.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. BURKETT. Why should the people of Idaho have any greater right to go into the Government forests and cut trees than the people of Nebraska have to go into the Government forests and cut trees? Do I understand the Senator to say they have?

Mr. HEYBURN. They have the same right exactly, and the people of Nebraska have come up into Idaho very frequently and have exercised that right to my knowledge.

Mr. BURKETT. Why, then, does the Senator want to put this provision in the bill, that we can not do so?

Mr. HEYBURN. I think the Senator was not listening when the amendment was read.

Mr. BURKETT. I have it here. I copied it.

Mr. HEYBURN. The amendment is simply that the Government shall not export timber from Idaho. That means that the Government shall not export timber from any State. In my judgment the Government ought not to be in the business of cutting timber or shipping it or exporting it or doing anything with it, except to weave it into the necessities of the Government for its own immediate use. That is all.

Mr. President, I was only using Idaho as an illustration. What is true there is true of every other State. You can safely trust the people of Montana, or the people of California, or the people of Utah, or the people of any other State to exercise that discernment and good judgment and patriotic action of citizenship that would make them refrain from destroying the forests.

Mr. President, not only did they take possession of these forests, but they took our school lands. When the Senator from Vermont [Mr. STEWART] was a distinguished Member of the other House of Congress, in the generosity of that day and with the knowledge they had of the character of the citizenship of Idaho, they gave us a princely heritage of lands for educational purposes; they gave us every sixteenth and thirty-sixth section in the State; and, besides that, hundreds of thousands of acres of land to be selected for other public purposes. They did it because they believed that Idaho would be up to the grade of other States and protect and cherish that which was donated for this purpose. It was provided in the admission act that it should be used purely for educational purposes; that the principal should never be disturbed or diminished, and that the lands should not be sold for less than $10 an acre.

I am led to inquire, was it not then contemplated that the State should select these splendid timber lands for educational purposes when the minimum price was fixed at $10 per acre? Congress certainly did not have it in their minds that the State should select the barren, arid, or the sagebrush lands, because that would have been to spread before them a Barmecide feast. Mr. President, we thought we had those lands. We were dealing with them under the grant, which was absolute in its terms—not that there shall be granted to the State of Idaho, not that the State of Idaho may select this and that, but—

There is hereby granted to the State of Idaho sections 16 and 36 to be used for the purpose of maintaining the public schools of the State of Idaho; and no part of the principal shall ever be diverted from this purpose.

Those are the provisions of the act admitting Idaho.

We did not come, as most States have come to Congress, and ask to be permitted to form a government. We formed our government. We held our constitutional convention pursuant to an act of the legislature, and we met in constitutional convention on the 4th day of July, 1889. At the end of thirty days we had formed a constitution that will stand alongside that of any State in the Union for wisdom—conservative and sufficient wisdom. Then we submitted it to the people for their ratification, and they ratified it. Then we came to Congress, and Congress took up that constitution for investigation. I want to call your attention to what Congress said, because there are now present in this body men who were Members of Congress at that time. This is what Congress thought of the constitution of Idaho, and it is unusual, it is exceptional. This is what Congress said of it. After reciting that the convention was held—I will read the whole clause—

Whereas the people of the Territory of Idaho did, on the 4th day of July, 1889, by a convention of delegates called and assembled for that purpose, form for themselves a constitution, which constitution was ratified and adopted by the people of said Territory at an election held therefor on the first Tuesday in November, 1889, which constitution is republican in form and is in conformity with the Constitution of the United States; and

Whereas said convention and the people of said Territory have asked the admission of said Territory into the Union of States on an equal footing with the original States in all respects whatever: Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That the State of Idaho is hereby declared to be a State of the United States of America, and is hereby declared admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States in all respects whatever; and that the constitution which the people of Idaho have formed for themselves be, and the same is hereby, accepted, ratified, and confirmed.

That is an exceptional provision in the admission act of a State. But Congress had before it every provision in the constitution, and with a full knowledge of it it not only made the constitution of Idaho the supreme law of that State, but it enacted the provisions of the constitution of Idaho as an act of Congress, giving it the double sanction and the double strength of a law. It is irrepealable. Congress can not repeal a single provision of that constitution. When Congress gave the State the 16's and 36's for public school purposes by terms which in themselves constitute a grant in presenti, Congress can not come along ten or twenty years thereafter, set it aside as a forest reserve, and withdraw the control and dominion of those sections 16 and 36 from the State upon which they had conferred it.

That is what they have attempted to do. Many of the States in the Union did not take their 16's and 36's under these terms or by a legislative grant that was effective at the time of the grant. Many of the States have been admitted in language like this: For instance, in one case, there shall be granted to the State the 16's and 36's. That is not a grant in presenti; those are not words of a present grant. In other cases it is provided that the State shall have the 16's and the 36's. That is not a grant in presenti; those are not terms of a present grant. But in the case of the State of Idaho it said, "There is hereby granted to the State sections 16 and 36." That became a fixed grant; and when the bill admitting Idaho as a State was signed and became a law, that was the irrevocable law as between the United States and the State of Idaho, and it was not competent for Congress to give any power over those lands to any other person. Those were no longer public lands, and Congress could create forest reserves only upon public lands and not upon private lands.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. HEYBURN. In a moment, when I finish this thought. Congress could not deal with those lands. Every decision of the Supreme Court of the United States sustains that doctrine; every decision of the Supreme Court of the United States that says the 16's and 36's did not attach until after they were surveyed or selected was based upon language different from any other than that contained in the admission act of Idaho, in that they were not words of express and present grant. Now, I will yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. DIXON. But has the Congress of the United States ever attempted in any way to interfere with the State of Idaho as to ousting her from the control or ownership of sections 16 and 36?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes. I am glad the Senator asked me that question. I will call his attention to it right on the record. They are attempting, or assuming, to dole out to the States the proceeds of those lands. They have been selling some timber off the 16's and 36's in Idaho.

Mr. DIXON. Without the consent of the State of Idaho?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly. The State of Idaho has taken no legislative action on the subject. I have here its official action, and will call the attention of the Senate to it directly. They have taken possession of and placed these 16's and 36's under the dominion of the Forester; they have sold timber, and they notified us the other day officially that we have "nineteen thousand and some dollars to your credit, to the credit of your school fund and public roads." They have not only undertaken to exercise absolute dominion and control over these sections, but they have undertaken to say what the State of Idaho shall do with the money they have voluntarily turned over to the State.

Under the constitution of Idaho the proceeds of these lands can not be used for the purpose of public roads or anything else than the public schools, and notwithstanding the constitution and the admission act say that the proceeds of sections 16 and 36 can be used for no other purpose, can be transferred to no other fund, can be diverted in no way from the public schools of the State, yet, forsooth, the Forester—this great lord of the forests of America—assumes to say that you shall use part of the proceeds of 16's and 36's for public schools and you shall use a part of it for roads. Why? He says they want the roads for the convenience of the foresters to ride over; and they are asking us for $1,500,000 in this bill to enable them to extend and inaugurate a system of telephones, wagon roads, telegraph lines, and trails through this princely domain that they have taken from us and exclude the State from the enjoyment of.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator from Idaho is mistaken in relation to that $19,000 coming from sections 16 and 36. I think the Forester has complied with the law and granted unto Idaho 10 per cent of the proceeds that come from all of the forest reserves in Idaho. That is the $19,000 of which the Senator speaks, and it is not from sections 16 and 36.

Mr. HEYBURN. Well, Mr. President, there are something over 700,000 acres of public school lands included in the forest reserves of Idaho; then there are some 300,000 acres of other educational lands to which the same limitation is attached. By the act the proceeds of those lands can only be used for the purpose designated, not by the act of Congress or by the Forester or by the Secretary of Agriculture, but by the constitution of the State. The constitution of the State says how the proceeds of those lands shall be applied.

I am not mistaken, and I am not quibbling over $10 or 15 cents in this matter. It may be that of this $19,000, or whatever the sum is, some of it is the proceeds of lands other than the 16's and 36's, but certain it is that all they have taken from the 16's and 36's is included in that fund.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say here——

Mr. HEYBURN. I am discussing a principle. I am not discussing any particular sections of lands; but I am discussing the principle. I have here the official statement, not a week old, right before me on the desk, and I can tell the Senator——

Mr. SMOOT. I can——

Mr. HEYBURN. Just pardon me. If I may be permitted——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will gladly yield to a question or to anything that is directed to the gaining of an elaboration or further information in regard to what I am saying, but when any Senator desires to make a speech upon this question, as obviously the Senator from Utah is going to do, he has only to preserve upon the tablets of his memory, or any other tablets, the points to which he desires to direct the attention of the Senate and take them up in his own time. Then I will be able to proceed with a more orderly presentation of this matter than if I am to be taken back and taken back and back again over the same old ground.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HEYBURN. If the Senator from Utah desires to make a speech——

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have no desire——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HEYBURN. I desire not to yield at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho declines to yield.

Mr. HEYBURN. Now, Mr. President, I desire to say that I never refuse to yield to a Senator for a question or to obtain information, but to bring in answering arguments in the midst of mine is not my idea of debate in this body. I like the running fire of debate; I do not object to it at all; but the Senator wants me to go into a branch of the subject that I have passed. I will, however, give the Senator ample opportunity in about a minute.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not like to rest under that imputation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not like to rest under that imputation. I do not think it is fair. I made a statement here that the $19,000, of which the Senator was speaking, was 10 per cent of the proceeds of all the reserves of Idaho, and I can substantiate it.

Mr. HEYBURN. Very well; I admit it.

Mr. SMOOT. His argument is based upon the proposition that this sum was from the 16's and the 36's.

Mr. HEYBURN. I decline to yield further. I admitted that; it is all right, but it has nothing whatever to do with the argument.

I was proceeding to give the official figures in regard to the school lands that are within the forest reserves of Idaho. I have them, and they are not ten days old, so that they are probably accurate. There are 787,520 acres of school lands that are within the forest reserves of Idaho that have been included within the dominion of the forest reserves. They are bounded by a line beyond which no man may pass, except pursuant to the rules and regulations of the forest reserve. Seven hundred and eighty-seven thousand five hundred and twenty acres, at a minimum price of $10 an acre (which is the least sum for which any school lands or public lands at all belonging to the State can be sold), would bring $7,875,200 at the minimum price of those lands. They are withdrawn from the use of the State; they are withdrawn from the control of the State; and the use of them is assumed by the Forester, not in harmony or cooperation with the State, but to the exclusion of the State.

Some of those lands have been withdrawn for four or five years and some of them for a longer period. The State is entitled to the benefit that would come to it by the growth incident to the settlement of those lands. It is entitled to the benefit that would come to it by those lands, that are now nonproductive, being made productive and contributing to the prosperity of the State through the medium of taxation and the prosperity and wealth of the citizenship of the State. Those lands belong to the State, and yet the State is being deprived of every use which she or those who claim under her might make of those lands. And why? Because Congress has said that the Chief Executive might proclaim a forest reserve.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. NELSON. In what manner can the State be deprived of the use of those lands from the mere fact that they are within the exterior boundaries of a forest reserve?

Mr. HEYBURN. Because they are leased by the Government of the United States of its own right.

Mr. NELSON. Not the school lands.

Mr. HEYBURN. I beg the Senator's pardon. He had better advise himself about that, because I speak whereof I know. These lands are leased in bulk. There is no controversy about this fact. The school lands are leased in bulk by the Forester's agents in the State of Idaho for grazing purposes. Timber is cut without regard to the lines between the lands of the State and those of the Government; timber is cut indiscriminently upon these lands, and the proceeds are paid into the Treasury of the United States. They are doled out to the State according to a rule, not of the legislature of the State, but according to a rule of Congress, that has no jurisdiction of it, or of the Forester.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. I suppose the leases in Idaho for grazing are the same as in other States. They are per capita, are they not, as to the number of cattle and sheep; that is, they are not leased in bulk so far as acreage is concerned, but certain privileges of the forest are leased per capita, per head of sheep or cattle?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; but the sheep in our State have not reached that period of development where they know the line between the odd sections and the 36's and the 16's. The sheep do not know where the line is, and so they graze indiscriminately. [Laughter.]

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator maintain that the school sections of Idaho are leased by the United States?

Mr. HEYBURN. Leased for grazing purposes?

Mr. WARREN. Leased for any purpose.

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly they are. When I use the term "lease," I mean the privileges are granted them at a compensation of so much per head. John Jones may run 30,000 sheep in a certain valley for a certain length of time and may pay so much a head for doing it. I have contracts and leases here, which I can produce, that will show you how it is done; but it would make too long a story. I think every Senator who has made himself familiar with it knows that no distinction at all is observed between the 16's and 36's in allowing the sheep to range.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator will not insist that the Government leases the school lands.

Mr. HEYBURN. If the Senator is using the term "lease," technically speaking, it would be a question for the court to say. Whether or not one of these written privileges that give a man the right to use this land for a certain purpose for a certain compensation would be a lease is a matter that I do not care to determine; but I use the term "lease" because it is one of such general application as to be accepted and to express my meaning.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator does not object, I should like to explain——

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not want an explanation. I will leave that to the Senator to do in his own time. I will answer any question the Senator may ask; I will yield cheerfully, and I hope always courteously, to a question, but I do not want any explanation of my speech injected into it, because the Senator is trying to make a speech of his own; I see it lying around. [Laughter.]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho declines to yield.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator will yield to me for a question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. HEYBURN. I will yield for a question at any time.

Mr. WARREN. I want to ask the Senator from Idaho if the State, then, does not have the right under legislation to select lieu lands, if it chooses, for these 16's and 36's?

Mr. HEYBURN. The State only has the right to select lieu lands for 16's and 36's that are defined in the act itself. It states exactly what 16's and 36's you may select lieu lands for. I have it right here.

Mr. WARREN. One more question, if it will not annoy the Senator.

Mr. HEYBURN. It will not.

Mr. WARREN. Have not other States very largely exchanged their 16's and 36's for other lands?

Mr. HEYBURN. Other States have not the same law that Idaho has; and that is the reason other States may have done so.

Mr. WARREN. Some of them have identically the same law.

Mr. HEYBURN. What States?

Mr. WARREN. Well, the admission acts of Idaho and Wyoming are almost identical.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think probably Wyoming has an absolute grant of its 16's and 36's.

Mr. WARREN. They have exchanged their lands. I want to find out what the difference is.

Mr. HEYBURN. Perhaps the exchange may be invalid.

Mr. WARREN. Possibly so; but I want to know whether Idaho is situated differently in that respect.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think so. Here is the provision of the enabling act for Idaho relative to sections 16 and 36:

SEC. 4. That sections Nos. 16 and 36 in every township of said State, and where such sections, or any parts thereof, have been sold or otherwise disposed of by or under the authority of any act of Congress, other lands equivalent thereto, in legal subdivisions of not less than one-quarter section, and as contiguous as may be to the section in lieu of which the same is taken, are hereby granted to said State for the support of common schools, such indemnity lands to be selected within said State in such manner as the legislature may provide, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

So there is a limitation. Idaho can only take lieu lands for lands that at the time of the passage of the enabling act had been taken.

Mr. WARREN. Another question——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. That is precisely the language of the enabling act for Wyoming, and Wyoming has taken lieu lands. I want to ask the Senator if he considers that that was an unlawful act or was it authorized?

Mr. HEYBURN. You take no title. You can only take title to lands that you are authorized to take, and if you undertake to surrender lands the title of which passed to you by the admission act, in disregard of the fact that title passed to you absolutely, you would not accomplish the surrender; and if you undertake to select lieu lands for lands that you are not entitled to take lieu lands for, your selection of lieu lands would be invalid, and you would have simply complicated two sets of titles—those which you undertook to surrender, for which you had no authority, and those which you undertook to take, for which you had no authority.

Mr. WARREN. I am asking for information. I will say that the titles to those lands have passed to the State. The question the Senator raises is whether or not they are competent titles.

Mr. HEYBURN. The question was raised in my own State. At first glance they had failed to recognize the limitation of the lands for which they might take lieu lands. The serious question—and it is as applicable to other States as to Idaho—is that under this forestry policy they have inclosed and included the lands belonging to the State and assumed jurisdiction and control over them; they have done it in violation of the law; and we are asked here to-day to appropriate three and a half million dollars to carry this out and expand it. Not only that, but you have granted them in this bill $500,000 for the purpose of building trails and telephone lines over this land, of which they have and can have and should have no control or title. That is what you are asked to do; and if you vote for the provisions of this bill, you will be giving them $500,000 to furnish the house that they have entered upon without authority and to make their stay there the more luxurious.

I am not in favor of advancing money to enable the burglar who moves into my house to live more comfortably. That is what they are asking in this matter. I want to see whether or not Senators will vote here upon the blind sentiment of "preserve the forests," or whether they will give this subject that attention to which it is entitled as a matter of right between the States and the General Government.

What is the relation, what has always been held to be the relation, between the General Government and the State? Here is what the Supreme Court said about this class of lands in the days when the Supreme Court was sane and safe and sound, as it is now and always has been. There is no hysteria in that branch of the Government. There are no brain storms there. They were interpreting the relation between the State and the General Government respecting these public lands, and they were speaking through Mr. Justice Miller, who knew as much in that relation as any man who ever sat upon that bench, because he was bred and born, I think, on the frontier, or what was then the frontier, and he knew the relation that the frontiersman bore to the lands about him. He knew the quality of the tenure of those lands. He was discussing the question of the public commons. He was discussing the question of the right to use these public lands by one who claimed under no title except that in common with all the citizens of the country he had a right to share in their use. In the case of Bufort against Houtz, he said, in speaking of these lands:

We are of opinion that there is an implied license, growing out of the custom of nearly a hundred years, that the public lands of the United States, especially those in which the native grasses are adapted to the growth and fattening of domestic animals, shall be free to the people who seek to use them, where they are left open and uninclosed and no act of Government forbids this use. For many years past a very large proportion of the beef which has been used by the people of the United States is the meat of cattle thus raised upon the public lands, without charge, without let or hindrance or obstruction. The Government of the United States in all its branches has known of this use, has never forbidden it, nor taken any steps to arrest it. No doubt it may be safely stated that this has been done with the consent of all branches of the Government and, as we shall attempt to show, with its direct encouragement.

Mr. President, the law was not different in that day from what it is to-day. There has not been a statute, a line, or a word enacted diminishing the right or attempting to control that right upon the public domain that is thus outlined and expressed by the Supreme Court of the United States. The court continues:

The whole system of the control of the public lands of the United States as it had been conducted by the Government under the acts of Congress shows a liberality in regard to their use which has been uniform and remarkable. They have always been open to sale at very cheap prices. Laws have been enacted authorizing persons to settle upon them and to cultivate them before they acquire any title to them. While in the incipiency of the settlement of these lands by persons entering upon them the permission to do so was a tacit one, the exercise of this permission became so important that Congress, by a system of laws called the preemption laws, recognized this right so far as to confer a priority of the right of purchase on the persons who settled upon and cultivated any part of this public domain. During the time that the settler was perfecting his title by making the improvements which that statute required and paying, by installments or otherwise, the money necessary to purchase it both he and all other persons who desired to do so had full liberty to graze their stock upon the grasses of the prairies and upon other nutritious substances found upon the soil.

The value of this privilege grew as the population increased, and it became a custom for persons to make a business or pursuit of gathering herds of cattle or sheep and raising them and fattening them for market upon these uninclosed lands of the Government of the United States. Of course the instances became numerous in which persons purchasing land from the United States put only a small part of it in cultivation and permitted the balance to remain uninclosed and in no way separated from the lands owned by the United States.

The court goes on to say:

The universal understanding of all classes of the community, upon which they have acted by inclosing their crops and letting their cattle run at large, is entitled to no little consideration in determining what the law is, and we should feel inclined to hold, independent of any statutes upon the subject, on account of the inapplicability of the common-law rule to the condition and circumstances of our people, that it does not and never has prevailed in Illinois. But it is unnecessary to assume that ground in this case.

Then the court goes on and discusses the facts of the case. That is the kind of common sense we had from the Supreme Court.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. BURKETT. I should like to ask the Senator a question. What is the date of that decision?

Mr. HEYBURN. That case came up from Utah, but the court said it would make no difference whether it was in a State; that it was particularly applicable in a State, whether in a Territory or not.

Mr. BURKETT. I believe, though, that it appertained all the way through to the grazing privilege. I should like to ask the Senator if there is not a difference, and if there would not be a difference, between the use of land for grazing purposes and the right of cutting timber, which practically despoils the land?

Mr. HEYBURN. I had passed to the consideration of the grazing question, which is one of the questions involved, because it is admitted by the Forestry Service that in the State of Idaho one-third of the area of the forest reserves is not timber land at all. "Forest reserve" is a convenient name for the designation of this Government plain——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. What is the title of that case?

Mr. HEYBURN. It is the case of Bufort v. Houtz, 133 United States, page 320.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Do I understand the Senator to say that the court held in that case that the Government had no right to impose a charge for grazing?

Mr. HEYBURN. That question was not involved. The question there was as to the right to use and occupy. The question of the Government imposing a fee or charge for the use of these lands would be carried with the general principle that these being public commons it would not be appropriate to charge any one person for the use of them or to permit any one person to use them to the exclusion of others.

You can not recognize the right to charge without recognizing the right of exclusion or selection. They would go together. No one would contend that the Government might parcel out the land to favorites and charge nothing, or exclude some and admit others, or that the Government might sell it all to one man and exclude another. That would destroy its character as commons.

That was the condition in every State west of the original thirteen States. Illinois and Indiana and Iowa and Missouri and Michigan and Minnesota enjoyed the right of free public commons.

Mr. TELLER. Massachusetts and Connecticut both.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; Massachusetts and Connecticut; and those States brought over the old English rule of public commons. But all those States——

Mr. TELLER. While they brought over the English rule of commons, they did not bring the modern English rule, because they provided by statute, both in Massachusetts and in Connecticut, that a man should not complain of trespass if his fields were not fenced. The right of pasturage unless a man fenced his fields was recognized by all the States of the Union, I think, without exception, so far as I have examined, and I have examined a good many.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. TELLER. It exists to-day in the State of Nebraska.

Mr. BURKETT. I will state that that is exactly what the Senator from Idaho is doing. He is complaining because sections 16 and 36 are not fenced, if I catch his argument.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have passed that question. I am on the grazing question.

Mr. BURKETT. He is complaining because the Government takes charge of sections 16 and 36.

Mr. TELLER. That is what we complain of in Colorado. The Government has excluded the State and has put the land in Government control.

Mr. BURKETT. That is only where the States have not taken possession of sections 16 and 36. They do not do it in Nebraska, I am certain, where they have taken control of the sections.

Mr. TELLER. You have a forest reserve in Nebraska that had not any timber on it, and that is the case in Idaho, the Senator from Idaho says, with a third of the reserves.

Mr. BURKETT. We are following the advice of the Senator. We are growing trees. We have a forest reserve, and have school lands inside of it. But our State has control of our school lands because it has taken charge of them.

Mr. HEYBURN. This is the dominion provided to be exercised over these lands by the statute, and it is the authority that is conferred upon the State by the Congress, both by the Constitution and the admission act. It is quite interesting. Article IX of the Constitution—and I commend this to the attention of the Senators—reads:

> The stability of a republican form of government depending mainly upon the intelligence of the people, it shall be the duty of the legislature of Idaho to establish and maintain a general, uniform, and thorough system of public free common schools.
> The general supervision of the public schools of the State shall be vested in a board of education, whose powers and duties shall be prescribed by law.

Then it gives some details, and goes to the public lands.

> The public school fund of the State shall consist of the proceeds of such lands as have heretofore been granted, or may hereafter be granted, to the State by the General Government, known as school lands and those granted in lieu of such; lands acquired by gift or grant from any person or corporation under any law or grant of the General Government.

Then it describes other classes of land that shall belong to the State.

> Neither the legislature nor any county, city, town, township, school district, or other public corporation shall ever make any appropriation or pay from any public fund or moneys whatever anything in aid of any church—

And so forth. Then comes this provision:

> It shall be the duty of the State board of land commissioners—

Which has already been described—

> It shall be the duty of the State board of land commissioners to provide for the location, protection, sale, or rental of all the lands heretofore or which may hereafter be granted to the State by the General Government under such regulations as may be prescribed by law, and in such manner as will secure the maximum possible amount therefor: Provided, That no school lands shall be sold for less than $10 per acre.

That shows the class of land which was contemplated. It was these timber lands.

> No law shall ever be passed by the legislature granting any privileges to persons who may have settled upon any such public lands, subsequent to the survey thereof by the General Government, by which the amount to be derived by the sale or other disposition of such lands shall be diminished, directly or indirectly. The legislature shall at the earliest practicable period provide by law that the general grants of land made by Congress to the State shall be judiciously located.

Those are the general grants, outside of sections 16 and 36. Those are the grants by area—200,000, 300,000, 400,000 acres. They are general grants. The specific grant was that of sections 16 and 36.

Now, the legislature shall provide for the selection of the general grants, the title to which does not pass to the State until they are selected according to the manner provided by the legislature.

Mr. BURKETT. If the Senator will permit me, I do not understand, and have not understood this afternoon, what particular value the Senator is attempting to attach to that part of the law which says the lands shall not be sold for less than $10 an acre. That certainly does not make the lands more or less valuable.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; it shows the intent—and I am in a position to speak of the intent—of the constitutional convention.

Mr. BURKETT. But sections 16 and 36 go over the mountains and valleys just as they come. They may be worth $10 an acre and they may not be worth 10 cents.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is right. But Congress gave sections 16 and 36 as a direct grant, and there is the selection of a very large quantity of public lands for other purposes. That question being discussed in the constitutional convention, and the minimum price at which the lands might be sold being under consideration, it was considered that the State would select these timber lands for school purposes, they being less adapted to home making perhaps than other more open land, and that the State would select them, and therefore $10 was a reasonable minimum to place upon them.

Here is what we are being deprived of also by the fact that the Forestry Service has taken possession of them. Here is a right given to the State by its constitution in regard to these lands:

> The legislature shall, at the earliest practicable period, provide by law that the general grants of land made by Congress to the State, shall be judiciously located and carefully preserved and held in trust, subject to disposal at public auction for the use and benefit of the respective objects for which said grants of land were made, and the legislature shall provide for the sale of said lands from time to time and for the sale of timber on all State lands and for the faithful application of the proceeds thereof in accordance with the terms of said grants.

Then it provides a limitation that not to exceed twenty-five sections shall be sold in any one year. The State is being deprived of the right to do that. It is being deprived of the right to carry that into operation—that right to sell and to deliver the possession of the land, to lease the land. There is a provision here that the State may lease the school lands, and many of our lands are under lease, where we were fortunate enough to obtain possession and lease them before this cloud of the Forest Service came over us. But we can not lease those in the forest reserves, because, in the first place, they are not attractive, being under restrictions that would make their use limited; and, in the second place, because they are in the possession now of the Forestry Service. So the State is being deprived of the income that it would derive from the use of those lands. It is being deprived of the right to sell them. It has the right in the abstract, but practically the right is not available. It is being deprived of the right to rent them. It is deprived of the right to grant grazing privileges upon them. That is the right of the State, and yet we sit here and in response to the cry, "Oh, protect the forests," we invade the rights of the States under the guise of protecting the forests.

It does not protect the forests. A tree cut by the forester or under his supervision or direction contains no more feet of lumber for building purposes than if cut by a private owner. A tree cut under the direction or with the permission of the forester is of no more value and contributes no more to the building of a house, fence, or barn than if cut by a private individual. Unless the Government is to go into the lumber business for the sake of making profit from the sale of lumber, then that right should be left to the citizen. The Government should sell its land to its citizens under such restrictions as may be wise for their preservation and the best interests of all the people. I am not speaking for the people of Idaho alone, as I said. I was merely using Idaho as a text. What is true of that State is true of others.

Mr. President, in Idaho the Government is paying $198,000 a year for salaries for forest employees. It is paying $1,620,000 for salaries to take care of these forests. To take care of them; to protect them—from the people; for fear the people will destroy them. The best guardians the forest has ever had against loss by fire or other destruction are the settlers whose homes and improvements are at stake. The safest guardian is always the one whose interests are most nearly wrapped up in the thing to be protected.

Mr. BURKETT. Where has that statement ever proved true, taking it from the Atlantic Ocean across the country, where the settler was the protector of the forest and what the Senator states has been the result?

Mr. HEYBURN. I am not surprised at that question from the Senator from the great State of Nebraska, which is practically without any timber, and I do not know but that the Senator has been surrounded all his life by similar conditions. But those of us who have lived a lifetime in the forests know the facts. Since I last discussed a similar bill, I stood on the streets of Wallace and saw a fire commence off on a mountain side that had been started by some mischievous boys. I saw it begin to spread and spread, and there was not a forest ranger, so far as we ever learned, within a hundred miles of it. Certainly none ever came there.

But a group of citizens who saw the fire start got together, themselves and others, and purchased implements appropriate for putting out the fire, and went out there and worked that night and until the next and extinguished the fire. That is the way fires are put out. I have seen that instance multiplied so often in the many years that I have lived in the forest that I would not attempt to put it in figures—where the town would awake at midnight because some careless traveler, perhaps, or maybe lightning or some cause often undiscoverable had started a fire in the mountains—and I have seen the town turn out and seen men work amid the smut and grime of that struggle who never did work at any other time. I have seen them work all day and all night, as the necessities required, to put out those fires.

I have seen great areas of country saved from devastation, and to-day, if the forester is to do the work in our country he must call upon the whole body of the citizenship to assist him, because there are not enough foresters in any one section of the country to be of very much use in case of a big fire. They are always put out by the citizenship. Our State makes a large appropriation every year for the purpose of extinguishing fires in the forests, and we have rules and regulations and forest riders during the season when fires are apt to occur. They go out and cooperate, and I am in favor of the Government assisting in the protection of the public lands and of the lands surrounding the public lands or adjacent to them, just as any other neighbor would assist.

I believe in the Government performing the duties that would devolve upon a citizen if a citizen owned the land. That is the rule and the limit and the gospel of the whole situation. If the Government will step in there and perform the duties of good citizenship, its rights will be protected in common with the rights of the people.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. BURKETT. Not doubting what the Senator has stated with reference to that point, I should like to suggest that fire is not the only thing which destroys forests. I call attention of the Senator to the forests of Wisconsin, the forests of New England, the forests of Indiana, that were referred to a while ago by him, and I want to ask where, in any of those instances where the forests have been turned over to the settlers, the forests have been preserved by the settlers?

Mr. HEYBURN. I will tell the Senator where the forests are in part. They were traded off for the cities of Chicago and Milwaukee and St. Paul and Minneapolis. They traded trees for houses and they traded trees for the comforts of the winter fire and for domestic purposes, and they will continue to trade them. That is what they are for in the main.

Mr. BURKETT. No, Mr. President; the Senator said they girdled the trees and piled them up and burned them so as to get them out of the way. That is what destroyed the forests.

Mr. HEYBURN. To undertake to be responsible for the mistakes of the generations that have gone would be a pretty big undertaking, and we are not called upon to do it.

Mr. BURKETT. But we are trying to guard the future.

Mr. TELLER. May I make a suggestion?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. They did that not only there, but all the way from the Atlantic coast to western Ohio. What did they do it for? To make homes. They made homes. Are not those homes better than the forests, even if the forests were composed of walnut trees?

Mr. President, the entire settlement of the States of New York, Pennsylvania, and a good part of Ohio required that the forests should be destroyed before the people could settle there. I was brought up in a timber country—in New York—where there were no prairies. There were no settlements. There could be none until the forests were destroyed to the extent that they did destroy them, and I can say I have seen exactly what the Senator from Idaho says he has seen. We did not have any Government agents putting out fires. We preserved the forests with the diligence and interest that the people had in putting out the fires.

Mr. BURKETT. I should like to ask the Senator if it is not a fact, though, that those same localities, or some of them, to say the least, where the forests were turned over to the settler and he transformed a portion of them into a place for a home, are now coming in and asking the Government to take those lands back and reforest them?

Mr. TELLER. No, Mr. President; it is not. I do not know of any such case.

Mr. BURKETT. There are one or two bills asking the Government to appropriate vast sums of money to reforest certain sections.

Mr. TELLER. I know how that is done. I am going to speak about that if I have an opportunity. I know how these demands come here from certain people who have land that would not raise a crop, and, having cut the timber from it, they want the Government to buy the land.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, at every recurring session of Congress the demands are something beyond those of the preceding Congress. Since I came to the Senate the demands of this Department of the Government for forests have grown from, I think, about $67,000 to about $3,500,000, and that has not been a very long period. They are growing and growing.

Now, if the Government is going to be tested as to its ability to conduct business enterprises by its experience in the lumber business, the showing is not favorable to the Government. They are running behind, and whenever they accumulate an additional fund they invent some new method of using it. Consider the idea of building telegraph and telephone lines through the forests for the use of the forest rangers. Why, they have bought steam launches for them on the lakes in Idaho. They have bought splendid steam launches for the use of these foresters that in an imaginary conflagration they may speed from one imaginary fire to another quickly across the lake. I have seen them lolling at the hotels around at the watering places on our lake, dressed in green, with a cock feather in their hats, emulating in appearance and manner the foresters of the Black Forest of Germany.

Of course the Department says it was an accident, but one of them met a member of the legislature of Idaho driving a carriage with his family on the public road to his home in Wallace. The ranger was on horseback, and he refused to give way for the carriage, and when the hub of the wheel of the carriage brushed him he drew his gun and shot the member of the legislature. When he was arrested and brought into court the next day, he gave as a pompous excuse, "I am a forester of the United States. I have the right of way. I do not have to get out of the road for anybody." Of course his mind was disabused of that rapidly. He was fined, and put up his horse to make good the fine, so that he might go home. He was not able to redeem his horse, and inasmuch as a forester has to have a horse to hold his job he lost his place.

Now, that is a ridiculous sort of a thing. Yet it illustrates the character of men that this brings together—many of them good men, splendid fellows. I have no doubt of that at all—but the service is drifting toward a condition that might be tolerated abroad because you must bear it, but that will not be tolerated in the United States by any citizenship of which I have any knowledge.

Now, that is what we are drifting to—uniformed foresters, pale green suits, all of them, so that they can not be readily distinguished as they flit about among the umbrageous forests. They might be mistaken for an elk or an animal as they slip up on the trespasser who is about to destroy these forests, these great gigantic trees. Some puny man is going in there to destroy them, and we must have a forester to protect them.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

Mr. HEYBURN. The whole thing has become ridiculous.

The VICE-PRESIDNT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. NELSON. Is it not an advantage to the people that these men have green uniforms so that they can distinguish them?

Mr. HEYBURN. A few days ago a suggestion was made that these men should be more emphatically uniformed, and that they might form a reserve corps for the Army, to be used in case of war. I undertook to talk to one of them out there last summer, but his mastery of the English language or my understanding of it, one or the other, was so deficient that I could not tell whether he was a German ambassador or an officer of the German army.

Mr. NELSON. I should judge from the Senator's statement that evidently the English of the ranger was at fault.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think that is true. I will leave it that way.

Now, Mr. President, I notice a very live interest in this question on the part of Senators who represent depleted and destroyed timber countries. They have committed all of the sins in the category against timber; they are now living in the splendid cities and amid the surroundings of luxury and wealth that came from the use of this timber; and they look with a very critical eye upon other communities that stand today where they stood forty years ago. They would stay these new communities. Is it because you do not want to see other cities grow up to rival your own?

Mr. President, these solitudes are lying there—20,000,000 acres, let me say. I will presently give those figures accurately. I have them here. There are about 20,000,000 acres of forest reserves lying there in Idaho, and there are about 130,000,000 acres, I think, in the United States. It is a solitude. No cities are building there, nor towns, nor villages, nor farms, nor schools, nor churches. There is a solitude, and there are rangers and students. There are items in this year's expense account to which I will call attention. This is what you are doing among other things. I think this will interest you. On this appropriation bill there are these items; they are found on page 241 of the report:

Students' salaries, $3,515.85.
Traveling expenses, $2,488.11.

So we are maintaining students of forestry, and many other luxuries of that kind.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. BURKETT. I can tell the Senator where some of them are. Some of them are at the forest reserve in Nebraska, where we are trying to do what the Senator suggested—to raise forests. During the summer season we do bring from the schools of forestry several students for about a month and a half to three months to plant and grow trees. That is what some of that money goes for.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I think that money spent for education of almost any kind is generally well spent. I merely call attention to the fact because it is rather incongruous. I do not know of any other branch of the Government where we are educating students and paying their traveling expenses to the extent of about $4,000 a year.

Mr. BURKETT. We are paying more than that in the Interior Department. We are paying surveyors out of schools, and I have no doubt the Senator has placed some young students with surveying parties.

Mr. HEYBURN. Not students in that sense. These men are not merely classified as students; they are employed as students. They are employed to study there; they are not students from other institutions.

Mr. BURKETT. I think certainly they are. I know some of them personally, and I know exactly what they are doing. I have been with them in their work and I know what some of them are doing. I do not know if that includes all of them.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am very glad to have some light on the subject, because it may be that down in Nebraska they are studying this forestry question, and they are probably going to learn something from the past.

Mr. BURKETT. That is what we are trying to do, to teach everybody something from the past.

Mr. HEYBURN. I remember the first lessons they were instituting. I looked on with a great deal of interest. I saw a man with an ax chop a hole in the ground and put in a little cottonwood slip about a foot long that he had bought from the Indians for 10 cents a bunch. They pull them up down on the bottoms of the Platte River at a certain season of the year, where they spring from seed, and tie them up in bunches and then go out among those farmers and sell them. That was done especially in the days when the timber-culture law was still in force. The farmer goes along and takes an ax and hooks it into the ground, and puts in this little cottonwood sprout and stamps on it. I saw that going on in Nebraska.

Mr. BURKETT. That is not what I referred to as student work.

Mr. HEYBURN. I was going to say I have no doubt at all that they have realized that that was not a very successful timber culture and they are trying to learn how to grow trees in a better way. God bless them! I hope they will; and I would not begrudge the cost of a student or two to teach them, although they might have known that themselves.

You will notice in this report, at page 235, that those are salaries paid out of the lump fund. It is the lump fund I am now discussing, the fund you are going to place at the disposal of the Secretary to do as he pleases with. That is what it amounts to, and this is the class of items that were paid out of it. Here are several pages of them. I will give you a few samples.

Here is Eugene S. Bruce, in Washington. It says "expert lumberman, at $3,000" a year. Amount paid for salary, $3,000; amount paid for travel and station and field expenses, $1,082.29. Mr. Bruce was evidently a traveled man.

Now, I take another. Here is a man with a salary of $500 a year, and his traveling expenses are $1,279.13.

Mr. DIXON. Will the Senator allow me?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. DIXON. I took occasion to look up some of those items and to ascertain the apparent discrepancy, and I think in a spirit of fairness the Senator from Idaho ought to make a little further explanation than appears in one line of print. I notice in the case of the man who had drawn $500 salary and $1,000 expenses, as a matter of fact he was employed in two or three departments of the Bureau.

Mr. HEYBURN. Drawing two or three different salaries?

Mr. DIXON. No; not drawing two or three different salaries, but paid from one fund for a part of the year. For a man who was inspecting forest reserves all over the West, $4 per diem would amount to $1,200 a year. The expenses of every field agent of the General Land Office amount to from $1,800 to $2,000. This $500 item does not represent a $500 man, but an inspector or superintendent who has been transferred once or twice during the year. I think, in all fairness to the Forestry Bureau, these items should not go in as cold facts without some explanation.

Mr. HEYBURN. I did not bring them in. I have them here, for instance——

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator wants really to know what those items were and will give me the name of the man, I will tell him what the amount is and what it was for.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. May I be allowed to ask the Senator from Utah, who seems to be the spokesman for the Forest Service, why it is this information does not appear in the report which was sent to us upon request?

Mr. SMOOT. The information as a lump appears in the report and the Senator from Idaho is quoting it. The Senator from Wyoming and the Senator from Idaho could have found out exactly what it consisted of if they had gone to the Department and asked for it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Congress of the United States asked the Department to send here that information. They have declined to do so.

Mr. SMOOT. They have sent the information, Mr. President.

Mr. HEYBURN. They may have sent it to the Senator from Utah. They did not comply with the provisions of the last appropriation act, in which we required that they should advise us of these matters.

Mr. SMOOT. The Forest Service——

Mr. HEYBURN. I desire to finish one sentence. I would say it is rather singular that the Senator from Utah should undertake to answer questions for the Department that Congress has required the Department to answer to it. I am reading from the report which they made—and I am reading the item—and there is no other statement than the one I read pertaining to that item.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HEYBURN. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator from Idaho that as far as the Forestry Service is concerned they did make a report, as the law provided they should do, and when I examined the report and noticed a lump sum of $1,591.83 for a certain man's expenses, and that he was paid a salary of a less amount, I tried to find out how it happened. So I went to the Department, and I have here the exact amount. It is not his own expenses for a great many times. It is money paid out to men whom he employed for fighting fires—the very thing that the Senator said the Forest Reserve had not done very much of.

Mr. HEYBURN. This man is employed here in Washington. It says here "employed in Washington."

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; as far as that amount of salary was concerned, but he was out in the field.

Mr. HEYBURN. It does not say so in the report.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will give me the name of any man on the list I will tell him what the sum was paid for.

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not intend to recognize the Senator from Utah as the substitute for the Department of Agriculture, which is under the direction and control of this body. We did not call upon any Senator to furnish this information. We called upon the Department to do it.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought the Senator from Idaho would at least want the information.

Mr. HEYBURN. I could get it, I assume, as well as the Senator, and perhaps I am quite as well advised of the fact that I could get it. But I am speaking of the facts stated in the report. This is Document No. 425, which was printed upon my own motion, and which I found as a typewriten document that had not been printed at all. I got this information from it. There has been no report made in accordance with the provisions of the last appropriation act.

Mr. SMOOT. But the Senator from Idaho was complaining of the fact that there were employees in the Forestry Service paid a smaller salary than the amount of their traveling expenses.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am not complaining of anything. I am here to try to throw some light upon the situation confronting us in considering the wisdom of the appropriation of $500,000 or of $1,500,000, as it may be, for what is called a lump sum, to be disposed of without any limitation.

Mr. President, I only cited these instances to show how inadequate was this report. I could cite them by the column here. I do not know how I got this report except that I got it from the clerk of one of the committees who happened to have it in his possession. Then I asked to have it printed, and the Senate ordered it to be printed. I have it in my hand. The proof was corrected, I am advised, by the Department. So I assume that it is correct.

Now, I just want for a moment to speak of these aggregates and pass that. I do not expect to exhaust the consideration of every question connected with the Forestry Service in the remarks which I am making, and I have extended them much beyond what I intended.

The lump-fund salaries paid out in Washington were $259,657, and outside of Washington $817,190. Those are salaries paid out of the lump fund. Now, they want us to equip them for another year of that kind of work.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HEYBURN. Just a moment, until I finish these items. I have the items before me. The traveling, station, and field expenses were $183,802. These items begin to sound like some item of the sundry civil appropriation bill or the Army and Navy bill. It will be only a very short time before this Forestry Service will represent an annual expense greater than that of the Army or the Navy. The income from the entire Forestry Service I should like to put in in this connection.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will state the year, I have it here.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am talking about this year. I will insert those figures later.

Mr. President, it is perfectly proper in considering these appropriations to consider what we are getting for them, the kind of service, what the people think of it to whom these laws are applied. As an instance, I will tell you what the legislature of Idaho thinks about it. I have here joint resolution No. 7, passed by the legislature of Idaho at its last session, and this is what they think about it:

STATE OF IDAHO, DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

I, Robert Lansdon, secretary of state of the State of Idaho, do hereby certify that the annexed is a full, true, and complete transcript of house joint resolution No. 7. [By Gleason.]

A resolution relative to the matter of forest reserves in the State of Idaho, which was filed in this office the 5th day of March A. D. 1907, and admitted to record.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State. Done at Boise City, the capital of Idaho, this 13th day of November, A. D. 1907.

[SEAL.]

ROBERT LANSDON,
Secretary of State.

House joint resolution 7. [By Gleason.]

A resolution relative to the matter of forest reserves in the State of Idaho.

Be it resolved by the legislature of the State of Idaho, That the forest reserve policy of the General Government as administered is detrimental to the interests of the State of Idaho in that it has resulted in a practical transfer of jurisdiction over more than one-third of the State to a bureau of the General Government which has substituted rules and regulations inconsistent with the legal rights of the citizens of the State, under the general laws by which the State is presumed to be governed.

That it has included within its boundaries more than 1,000,000 acres of land belonging absolutely to the State of Idaho, granted to the State by Congress under the admission act, which said act and the constitution of the State provides the sole means of disposal; that the grant of sections 16 and 36 was for the exclusive use of public schools; that while Congress has provided for homestead entries within the forest reserves under burdensome and impractical conditions, the State can not hope for a substitute growth under such conditions, as no people would care to make their homes in a section of the country subject to such limitations and restrictions as will naturally prevent the growth of communities large enough to bring schools, churches, and other institutions incident to community life; that contrary to the best interests of the State and people, the mineral lands are included within the forest reserves, and while theoretically they are open to prospecting, the limitations of forest reserve rules are such as to render it practically impossible to secure an investment of sufficient capital to develop mining claims after the prospector has found them, and capital will not, except in rare cases, invest in mining claims or locations within the forest reserves as they prefer to operate under well-defined legal rights rather than permissions and privileges dependent upon the pleasure of departmental forces.

That we favor the creation of forest reserves, properly located and administered, where they will best serve the purpose of future propagation of timber and conservation of a water supply where such conservation is necessary; but that we sincerely regret that the present location and administration of forest reserves retard the growth and development of Idaho far beyond any possible benefit that can ever accrue from them to the State or General Government.

That we favor the amendment of laws where they are found to be defective rather than a suspension of them, which causes people's rights to be suspended at the will and pleasure of a departmental agent, and that a copy of these resolutions be sent to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

This house joint resolution No. 7 passed the house of representatives on the 18th day of February, 1907.

J. FRANK HUNT,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

This house joint resolution No. 7 passed the senate on the 28th day of February, 1907.

E. A. BURRELL,
President of the Senate.

This house joint resolution No. 7 was received by the governor on the 4th day of March, 1907, at 12 m. o'clock Mountain meridian, and approved on the 5th day of March, 1907, at 3 o'clock p. m.

———,
Governor.

I hereby certify that the within house joint resolution No. 7 originated in the house of representatives of the legislature of the State of Idaho during the ninth session.

AVERY C. MOORE,
Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives.

That is what the legislature of Idaho thought at its last meeting of the forestry policy as it is administered in the State of Idaho.

In connection with my remarks I will present this resolution and let it take the usual course.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The memorial will be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. HEYBURN. Now, Mr. President, I will put these figures in the RECORD. The total area of Idaho is 53,262,585 acres, and of that there are in forest reserves 20,336,427 acres, or something over 34 per cent of the entire State is in forest reserves. In other words, they just put their hand on it as they found it and said "You shall not go any farther. You shall grow no more except upon your own territory;" and that is where they stopped us.

The table referred to is as follows:

Now, it is proposed to make the dwelling of this Department permanent by giving them telegraph offices and telephone lines and let them build roads to the extent of $1,500,000 a year. I suppose that will eventually mean, after a few more experiments with Congress, that we shall build them bath houses and provide fine mansions for their rangers, horses for them to ride, and a regular arrangement for new uniforms.

Mr. President, the people who are taking most interest in these forests live farthest away from them. Some of them, however, are very closely identified with them. I have here a document entitled "The American Forestry Association, President, Hon. James Wilson, Secretary of Agriculture." The name would indicate a useful purpose, and the man at its head we know to be a citizen of the highest order. They set forth in stereotyped phrase the needs of this legislation; but the officers of the American Forestry Association are: President, James Wilson, Secretary of Agriculture; vice-presidents at large, Dr. Edward Everett Hale and Mr. F. E. Weyerhauser. I know Mr. Weyerhauser. He is a very nice old gentleman; but he owns, or claims to own, more timber land and timber which has been unlawfully obtained than any other man on earth. His name in the West is synonymous for timber-holdings on an immense scale. There is scarcely a limit to them. He is of the very most pronounced type; and yet he is second vice-president of this American Forestry Association that has flooded the mail every few days with literature—specious statements. Why, they carry you off your feet because they all start with the expression that we are for the forests, for the preservation of the forests.

Well, it reminds me of Disraeli's battle cry of 1844. When the committee waited on him and asked "What is going to be our battle cry in this great campaign?" he said, "Corn." "Yes; but what about corn?" "Why, nothing about corn; corn is a catchy word with an Englishman—just corn is our battle cry." And they went in on that fight. So it is with these enthusiastic believers in the forestry policy. Will not the American people ever learn that this is not a Government of policy, but one of law? Will they not ever learn that the most dangerous expression that we can take to ourselves in the consideration of public questions is to talk about this man's policy and that man's policy? The policy of this country is the policy of the people, and it is found only in the written law of the land. When you find it anywhere else, it is fictitious and spurious. The people know how to stamp their policy upon public affairs, and where to put it; and they put it in the statute books.

They talk to us about the forestry policy; and then they always start out with the statement that "the forestry policy has come to stay." Well, we will know more about that when we have thought and talked more about it, when we have gotten a little closer to it and robbed it of this sentiment, that it is somebody's policy. It is a question of the rights of American citizens—a simple, ordinary question of their rights and the relation which they bear to the Government and that which the Government bears to them.

Mr. President, that [exhibiting] is the kind of thing that is going all over this country. Thousands of dollars in this appropriation bill are for editing such documents. Did you read the letter the Secretary of Agriculture sent in response to the resolution which the Senate adopted a few days ago, in which I asked that Congress be advised as to the number of men and the number of dollars that had been expended in attending conventions and butting into the consideration of affairs by others?

Instead of sending the names of the men and the amount of money paid on their account for traveling to Denver and other places, the Secretary says that a part of the policy of the Administration is to educate the American people up to their standard of belief on the forestry question, in order that the American people may sustain them in whatever they do. I am not attempting to give his words, but I am giving the spirit of his letter, which is on the desk of every Senator.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. I do not know, but I presume the letter to which the Senator refers is the one which I have read. Does not the letter state in terms that the figures as asked for will be furnished hereafter?

Mr. HEYBURN. I presume they will, about the time of that adjournment I have heard so much about.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. Does not the letter specifically state that the Secretary had sent out 123 telegrams, that it is impossible to comply with the Senator's request short of ten days, and that he thinks that within ten days the information will be furnished?

Mr. HEYBURN. I was just going to make some comments on that. When we call for information that should be found in the accounts of moneys expended, found here in Washington, known to a certainty by reference to properly kept accounts, we are told that the Government can only get information as to how they expended this lump sum of money which we gave them by sending out 127 or some other number of telegrams to a great many places. I now have that letter before me.

Mr. SMOOT. The only reason why they had to send so many telegrams was that the Senator's resolution was so sweeping that it required information covering every ranger, as to whether he had attended a convention or a meeting of any kind. It was impossible to say; and the only way they could get the information was to send by wire to the rangers themselves.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I presume there will be an able and an enthusiastic defense made of this administration of public office; and I think I will defer any further explanation of the matter to that time, and only say that Senate Document No. 449 is the one to which I refer. I have it in my hand, and if it were not for the hour and for my condition of fatigue I would read it; but Senators can read it for themselves. I will ask that it be inserted in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks, to show the kind of response that the resolution brought to the Senate. I will ask unanimous consent that it be inserted in my remarks without reading.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The document referred to is as follows:

[Senate Document No. 449, Sixtieth Congress, first session.]

ATTENDANCE OF MEMBERS OF FOREST SERVICE AT MEETINGS AND CONVENTIONS DURING 1907.

Letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting, by direction of the President and in response to Senate resolution No. 157, information in regard to the attendance of members of the Forest Service at meetings and conventions during the year 1907, etc., and showing that a statement with full details as called for by the resolution is being prepared. April 28, 1908, referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, April 27, 1908.

To the Senate:

By direction of the President, in pursuance of Senate resolution No. 157, I have the honor to say that a statement showing in full the attendance of members of the Forest Service at meetings and conventions during the year 1907, with full details as called for by the resolution, is being prepared as rapidly as possible.

It is customary for users of the national forests, both stockmen and others, to request the attendance of forest officers at their gatherings, in order that questions concerning the methods of regulating the use of the forests may be adjusted with the least possible friction, in a spirit of friendly cooperation, and with reference to the best interests of all concerned. It is also customary for forest supervisors to hold meetings with local stockmen as the most expeditious and satisfactory means of arranging allotments of range and settling range disputes. By far the greater number of these meetings and conventions are attended only by local officers, so that to present the information called for by the resolution it is necessary to receive special reports from all chief inspectors and forest supervisors. These have been called for by telegrams sent to 123 forest officers. It will also be necessary, in order to ascertain the expense involved, to gather the data from large numbers of vouchers in the Treasury. The work will be pushed with all possible diligence, and a final report should be ready in about ten days.

Since the specific and detailed information called for by the resolution necessarily involves so much labor that it can not be completed at once, I gladly take the present opportunity to outline briefly but comprehensively the objects and methods of the Forest Service as to attendance upon meetings and conventions of all kinds.

Members of the Forest Service attend meetings, official or unofficial, for three purposes:

(1) Improvement of the efficiency of the national forest administration through instruction of forest officers in their duties and conference with each other concerning their work.

These are official meetings of the Forest Service. They are schools of instruction or institutes, at which practical difficulties of administration are discussed, in the light of actual experience, to the end that the methods which have been found most desirable may be brought out, judgment trained, standards raised, and practice made uniform along the best lines. These meetings have immensely increased the efficiency of forest officers and the practical usefulness of the national forests. Ranger meetings are arranged by each supervisor at such times as the men can be brought together most advantageously, and it is now planned that every supervisor shall hold one such meeting each year. Other meetings bring together supervisors; others again inspectors.

When possible instruction is given by superior officers from the six inspection district headquarters or from Washington. Such officers either attend a considerable series of different meetings, with dates so arranged as to permit of a regular tour of instruction, or make their attendance incidental to the transaction of other public business. In certain cases such meetings are called with special reference to the convenience of the forester or other administrative officers at some point where the presence of one of these officers is required by other business, as, for example, when they are invited to attend some convention interested in national forest administration. Many meetings, however, are arranged without involving a permanent record in Washington. Until, therefore, the reports from forest supervisors, which I have called for by telegrams, can be received, no detailed statement concerning these meetings can be made. Presumably about fifty such meetings were held during 1907.

(2) Forest officers attend meetings of users of the national forests to learn their views, discuss their needs, and explain the objects and methods of the Government.

Such meetings include local informal gatherings, meetings of regularly organized associations, local, State, or national, and conventions representing interests affected by the national forests. To refuse such opportunities for mutual conference, for the removal of misunderstandings, and for the promotion of action along lines approved, supported, and modified by public sentiment I should consider a serious mistake in judgment. The frequent result of such conferences has been to remove misunderstanding or opposition on the part of users of the forests, either through recognition that they had just cause of complaint and removal of the cause, or through recognition on the part of the users themselves that their demands were inconsistent with the greatest good to the greatest number. So commonly at these conferences has dissatisfaction been replaced by approval of the course of the Forest Service that it has been assumed at times that the result was due to some form of coercion or manipulation.

To the best of my knowledge and belief such a charge is altogether without foundation, nor have any facts to establish such a charge, beyond the unsupported assertion of a belief that the charge was true, ever reached my attention. If any facts exist tending to show the stifling of public opinion by acts of forest officers, I earnestly hope that they will be brought forward. This matter was investigated by the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture, upon the basis of charges made during the second session of the Fifty-ninth Congress. The findings of the committee were presented on March 1, 1907, in House Report No. 8147, second session, Fifty-ninth Congress, pages 22–27.

Many of these meetings are of so local a character that no official record of them is preserved in the Washington office. The stockmen of a county, the sawmill owners of a valley, or some similar body of citizens hold a meeting to discuss their joint interests and invite the forest supervisor to be present. Naturally his attendance is incidental to his duty of administering his forest in the best interest of the public. If, however, the meeting is that of a large body of forest users, invitations to be present are generally received by one or more of the chief administrative officers and experts of the Service. So far as possible it has been my policy that such invitations should be accepted, and in the absence of occasion for changing the practice it is emphatically my purpose to continue it. If it were necessary to do so, I should consider it wise for representatives of the Forest Service to seek such opportunities to come into direct touch with those with whom it has business dealings or those whose interests the forests serve. In point of fact, however, it is not necessary to seek the opportunity; on the contrary, it is impossible with the present force available to accept more than a fraction of the invitations received.

As a result of its business dealings with users of the forests, the Government received last year over $1,570,000. From the standpoint of ordinary business practice it would be a most short-sighted economy to begrudge the relatively small expense incurred in coming to the best possible understanding with these users. From the broader standpoint of serving the public by making the forests useful to the general prosperity and upbuilding of the country such an attitude would be utterly wrong.

(3) Members of the Forest Service also attend and address meetings to promote education of the general public concerning forestry, in accordance with the duty laid by law upon the Department to diffuse the useful information which it gathers.

These educational addresses are demanded from the Forest Service in far greater numbers than it is possible for the Service to supply. Requests for them come from associations of lumbermen and other trade associations directly interested in the supply of forest products, chambers of commerce, boards of trade, commercial clubs, farmers' clubs, colleges, schools, professional bodies, and a great variety of public associations and assemblages Most of the persons who make these addresses do so incidentally to the performance of other duties.

In certain cases the opportunity of instruction offered and the inability of the administrative force to meet it has justified the assignment for a longer or shorter time of some person specially qualified to take up this work. As nearly as can be stated at the present time the total number of invitations to address such meetings which were accepted during the past year was about 500. A more exact statement must await the completion of the work now under way to prepare all the information called for by the Senate resolution.

Educational addresses have always been one of the important forms of activity, not merely of the Forest Service, but of the entire Department. Along with the publications of the Department, they have served the primary purpose for which the Department was created—namely, to add to the general well-being through the spread of the best knowledge obtainable as to how to make our land most productive. In the Forest Service this educational work, through publications and addresses, goes hand in hand with practical demonstrations of the methods of forestry on the ground. Previous to February 1, 1905, it formed the main part of the work of the Service. This work in its entirety has been approved by successive Congresses through annual appropriations for its support. It is most important because it constitutes the means by which the Department is able, in the interests of the entire country, to promote the practice of forestry among the private owners of forest lands, whose holdings comprise more than three-fourths of the forests of the country. While the appropriations for this work are altogether inadequate to meet the opportunity created by the public demand for information, I consider it of the utmost importance to spread the knowledge of forestry as widely as possible.

In a word, the work concerning which information is sought by the Senate resolution is, in my judgment, of great public value. Its purposes are to improve the administration of the national forests, to make them more useful to the men who depend on them, and to improve the methods which, as a nation, we apply to the forest, which is one of our most fundamental sources of economic strength.

Very respectfully,

JAMES WILSON, Secretary.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will allow me——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. I know the Senator wants to be right, and wants the record right.

Mr. HEYBURN. Of course.

Mr. WARREN. In the first place, the regular report from the Agricultural Department sets forth all the expenses and expenditures of the Agricultural Department. That was made in due time and is here, printed in due form. But a few days ago the Senator from Idaho wished a more particular itemization, and introduced a resolution, which went to the Secretary of Agriculture and was immediately replied to in a letter which the Senator has asked permission to put in the RECORD. In that statement the Secretary promised to follow it at the earliest moment with the particular items that the Senator has inquired about, but they are already covered in another manner in the general report regularly made at the end of the year.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I am not intending any personal attack on Secretary Wilson or any other officer of the Government. I am here in a forum where I must speak plainly of public matters, regardless of how it may appeal to the individuals referred to. I have the very highest regard for the Secretary of Agriculture personally, but I have a perfect and absolute right to criticise the official act of any public officer.

Now, what called forth that resolution on my part was a communication which I am now going to read. It is from a man whom I know very well, and is as follows:

THE SHOSHONE JOURNAL,
Shoshone, Idaho, February 12, 1908.

Mr. F. W. GOODING,
Shoshone, Idaho.

DEAR SIR: During the month of January, 1907, I was employed as a reporter on a daily paper in the city of Boise, Idaho. A part of my duty was to collect news from the Federal building in that city.

I was well acquainted with all of the Federal officers and most of the employees about the building. I was also acquainted with most of the rangers of the Sawtooth and Payette reserves, as I frequently met them in the office of the supervisor.

One day about the middle of the month of January of 1907, a few days before the date of the meeting of the National Wool Growers' Association, which was to meet at Salt Lake City, I entered the office of the forest supervisor for the Sawtooth Reserve and met Henry Berg. Henry Berg I knew to be a ranger of the Sawtooth Reserve. I also knew that he must be in Boise on some special mission at that time, so I asked him why he was in town. He showed me a letter from the officer who had charge of the matter instructing him to report at Boise and proceed to Salt Lake City to look after the interests of the Forest Service at the National Wool Growers' convention, which was to meet there within a few days. The letter also instructed him to charge his expense on the trip to the hay and grain account of the Service. Several others were in the office at the time, and all were joking Berg by asking him if he intended to charge himself up as a sack of oats or a bale of hay.

I hereby swear that the above statement of facts is correct and true.

EDW. T. BARBER.

Subscribed and sworn to before me, in my office in Shoshone, Idaho, this 12th day of February, 1908.

[SEAL.] FRANK T. DISNEY,
Notary Public.

My commission expires December 20, 1908.

That communication coming to me, as it did—of course I am not going to undertake to hold the Forestry Service in Washington or the Department of Agriculture responsible for individual weaknesses or mistakes, or even for individual corruption; but I merely felt that a matter like that ought to come to the attention of Congress as indicative of the spirit pervading those officers when they are going to attend national conventions called for purposes that are not their business. The meeting of the National Wool Growers' Association or the meeting of the governors of States, called for the purpose of considering State matters, is not an occasion which calls for the presence of forestry officers.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. This, I think, is a very serious charge, Mr. President, and, if it were true, I think it ought to be discountenanced in the strongest terms; but I want to say to the Senate of the United States that there is not a solitary word of truth in it. I have here the letter addressed to Mr. Berg; I have here the account charged by Mr. Berg for his trip to Salt Lake City, and there is nothing in the letter about charging the expense to the "hay and grain" account. If the Senator wants me to produce the account now, I am ready to produce it; and not only Mr. Berg's account, but the account of every man who attended the Salt Lake City convention. There is no word of truth in it, and I want the Senate to understand it. I will read the letter if the Senator requires it.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think I will allow the Senator to make his remarks of a general character in his own time. He undoubtedly will reply with some spirit and at length, but I am not making this charge. I am reading a sworn statement. I do not know whether it is true, and I might almost say that for my own purposes it is utterly immaterial to me whether it is true or not. I am simply giving something of the atmosphere pervading these affairs generally.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this just shows what I have always contended. If the Senator from Idaho had gone to the Department he could have learned the facts very easily.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I am not running to the Departments every few minutes. I am no part of the Departments, and they have nothing to do with my performance of duty. They are simply the handmaidens of the President of the United States, and they are there to carry out our will.

Mr. HALE. Did this man go to the convention?

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not know.

Mr. SMOOT. He went to the convention.

Mr. HALE. Why should he?

Mr. SMOOT. He went there, Mr. President, for the purpose of meeting with other supervisors and other rangers from all over the Western country; to meet Mr. Pinchot, who was to speak at that convention, and for the purpose of receiving instructions from Mr. Pinchot, and not to attend the convention.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me a word just there?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. I want to say to the Senator from Wyoming——

Mr. HALE. The ranger had no business there.

Mr. WARREN. Possibly the Senator from Maine is right in that declaration; but I want to say that I was besought, through letters from the secretary of the Woolgrowers' Association, to see that certain men representing the Department of Agriculture and the Forestry Service might be there. The woolgrowers had invited them, and they wished me to use my influence to insure their attendance. They desired the presence of the Secretary of Agriculture, and they also wanted particularly to have the Forester, Mr. Pinchot, there. As my letter books will show, I have both received and written numerous letters along that line. I answered finally by advising that the Secretary and Forester would not be able to go, but that, if the woolgrowers wished, other representatives of the Department would be sent. As to this particular case, I know nothing; but I wish to say that much with reference to the appearance at such places of representatives of the Forestry Service.

Mr. HEYBURN. Well, Mr. President, I did not intend and do not intend to go at length into the wisdom or right of these men to attend these conventions. I, however, desired to call the matter to the attention of the Senate. I do not intend to pass upon the wisdom of their going or not going, but I have my own opinion about it, and the Senate may have its opinion about it.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] says that Mr. Pinchot was to speak there, and the rangers and others were to be there, and I inferred from his remarks that the man referred to went there to hear Mr. Pinchot speak. Now, the Senator from Idaho would not undertake to say that that was not a perfectly proper and worthy service in which those men were engaged, would he?

Mr. HEYBURN. No; I will leave that to the Senator. I desire to call attention now to a mining matter.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me one moment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. I do not wish to distract the Senator, but in order that the matter may appear connectedly I will say that this gathering together of foresters is exactly the same as is done in the other bureaus of the Department. For instance, in the meat-inspection service they call those men together occasionally for advice and for interchange of ideas. Here in my hand is an account regarding 140 of the meat inspectors being called together at some central point, and I assume that the foresters have been called together at some given point, or at several central points, at different times.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the wisdom of thus calling these subordinates together is a matter that I do not care to discuss at great length at this time. It will doubtless receive further consideration before this matter is disposed of.

Now, here is a mining proposition. I read from a letter addressed to me:

BLUE JACKET MINE,
Lucile, Idaho, January 20, 1908.

Hon. W. B. HEYBURN,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Can we look for any relief, from at least a few, of the many obnoxious features of this national forest monstrosity this session of Congress? It becomes more and more oppressive as time goes on, and these hirelings called "Rangers" are getting to be real czars over their respective domain.

I have charge of the development of a large copper property for a Baltimore company. We are driving a tunnel to develop a group of claims, or rather a vein which is covered by a group of several claims; the claim in which the tunnel is being driven has no timber on it, so we have been using timber off of one of the other claims, but now all the timber we have cut has been seized by the range rider, who says it must all be paid for, and hereafter all timber used from other claims must be paid for the same as if it came from the reserve. Is this just? And is it the law?

I should like also to call your attention to the fact that the Snake River has been made the west boundary line of the Weiser Reserve, in spite of the fact that there is no timber within two or three miles of the river on either side, but all the land comprising the benches and bars along either side is strictly arid or desert lands. They will never be homesteaded because of the expense to put water on them, though they would be taken up under the desert act by people who could afford to irrigate them if they were not in the reserve. Then there is a railroad building down the river, and if this territory is not withdrawn from the reserve it is going to hold back settlement and the development of the country. Is there anything that the people can do to get this strip of country released from the tyrannies of the forest rules?

Another impractical, obnoxious, and ridiculous ruling is that which requires all mining properties upon which patents have been applied for, to be examined and reported on as to their value for mining purposes by an ignorant ranger who has, in a great many instances, been a sheep herder. There has been a great many cases where patents have been held up or rejected upon the strength of one of their reports.

I hope that the law will be so modified that one can live within or near one of these reserves and feel that they are a free-born American citizen.

If there is anything we can do to help, let me know.

Very truly, yours,

FRANK E. JOHNESSE.

I can vouch for Mr. Johnesse's standing. He is a man whose standing is beyond all question. He is a little bit rabid in some of his remarks, but he probably felt that he had some cause to be a little bit radical.

Mr. President, the hour is getting late, and it is not my intention to tax the patience of the Senate at this time much longer. I have here a letter from a woman—a widow. Her husband, Joseph Guay, sr., made a homestead filing in the land office at Boise of the land described in this letter on August 1, 1902, and lived there all the time after that until he died on February 1, 1907, except the time that he was in the hospital. That was the only time he was absent. When he died he was 74 years old and his widow was 68 years old. He was a veteran of the civil war, enlisting for three years in the Sixth Michigan Cavalry, and being discharged by reason of disability occasioned by wounds received in battle.

When we first settled on the land—

Quoting from the letter—

we built a log house 16 by 30 feet, well finished, such house being burned January 1, 1906, while we were occupying it. We then built a smaller house, 12 by 16, which is now on the land. In addition, we have a barn, a root house, about one mile of fencing, 5 acres cleared, about three or four acres which we cultivate. All of these improvements I assisted my husband in placing upon the land, aiding him in building the houses and other buildings and helping in the construction of the fence and in the clearing and cultivation of the land.

I will insert, with the permission of the Senate, this entire letter in the RECORD. I have here certain photographs of these homes that I think would interest Senators.

Mr. LODGE. I have seen them.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; I showed them to the Senator from Massachusetts. They are homes far above the ordinary frontiersmen's homes.

Mr. LODGE. Comfortable homes.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; comfortable homes.

Mr. DIXON. What is the complaint in this case?

Mr. HEYBURN. The complaint is—I will read from the letter:

I now understand that the Forestry Service has demanded the suspension of my homestead, such demand being made after I had met all the requirements made by the General Land Office. There are a number of other settlers in the same locality. We have for several years been annoyed and threatened in various ways by representatives of lumber companies and by forest rangers and representatives of the Forestry Service, who have represented to us that we could not get title to our homes, because there was timber on the lands which the lumber companies wanted.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator give me the date of the entry?

Mr. HEYBURN. I am going to have the entire letter printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. The letter may be printed with your speech, but your speech may not be in the RECORD to-morrow, and I should like to look the matter up.

Mr. HEYBURN. April 16, 1908, is the date of the letter.

Mr. SMOOT. I mean the homestead date.

Mr. HEYBURN. The letter says:

We settled on the land August 1, 1902.

Of course that was long prior to the location of the forest reserve.

Mr. SMOOT. Prior to this particular forest reserve?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly; that is the only one that would be affected by it. This document is for examination, and I am going to ask that it be put into the RECORD entire.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The letter referred to is as follows:

BOISE, IDAHO, April 16, 1908.

Senator W. B. HEYBURN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I write to ask you to assist me to get my homestead entry allowed and patent issued. The homestead was made by my husband, who died February 1, 1907. I understand that my case is being held up by the Forestry Service, and that the General Land Office is stopped by the Forestry Service from issuing me the patent.

My husband, who was Joseph Guay, sr., made H. E. No. 9116 at the Land Office at Boise, Idaho, for SE. ¼ NW. ¼ W. ½ NE. ¼, and lot 2, of section 19, T. 2 N., R. 9 E., Boise meridian. We settled on the land August 1, 1902, and he and I lived there all the time after that until he died, February 1, 1907, except the time he was in the hospital shortly before his death. When he died he was 74 years old; I am 68 years old. He was a veteran of the civil war, enlisting for three years in the Sixth Michigan Cavalry, and being discharged by reason of disability occasioned by wounds received in battle. When we first settled on the land we built a log house 16 by 30 feet, well finished, such house being burned January 1, 1906, while we were occupying it. We then built a smaller house, 12 by 16 feet, which is now on the land; in addition we have a barn, a root house, about 1 mile of fencing, 5 acres cleared, about 3 or 4 acres which we cultivate.

All of these improvements I assisted my husband in placing upon the land, aiding him in building the houses and other buildings, and helping him in the construction of the fence and in the clearing and cultivation of the land. Every year we cultivated the land, raising vegetables for our own use, and some hay. This was our only home and the only property we had, and is all the home I have, and I have no other property whatever.

Mr. Guay offered final five-year proof for the land on July 16, 1906, at which time the local land office approved the same and receiver's final receipt was given Mr. Guay. We were at that time living on the land, and lived there up to the time of his death. In the summer of 1907 I received notice from the General Land Office that the evidence of citizenship of Mr. Guay was defective, and as the original records of his naturalization were destroyed, it was necessary for me to secure naturalization papers for myself. This I did, completing the same in March last, such evidence being sent to the General Land Office on March 12, 1908. I now understand that the Forestry Service has demanded the suspension of my homestead, such demand being made after I had met all the requirements made by the General Land Office. There are a number of other settlers in the same locality. We have for several years been annoyed and threatened in various ways by representatives of lumber companies and forest rangers and representatives of the Forestry Service, who have represented to us that we couldn't get title to our homes because there was timber on the land which the lumber companies wanted.

The settlers believe that you are not influenced by the timber interests, and I am writing you in the hope that you may see that justice is done us and that our homes may not be taken away from us. There are a number of settlers with large families, and all they have is represented in their homes there, just as is my case.

Very respectfully,

Mrs. AMELIA GUAY.

Mr. HEYBURN. Now, I wish to call attention to something that I think will be equally interesting. I know I am taxing the patience of the Senate, but this is a question of more than ordinary importance.

I have here a statement as to homesteads running back, all of them, to 1902 and 1903, all of them before the creation of the forest reserves, with a description of the buildings and the improvements and the land under improvement in each case, which are held up by the Forestry Service. I will ask leave to file it. I had it prepared so that it can go conveniently into the RECORD.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. I should like to inquire of the Senator on what ground the Department has prevented the issuance of patents?

Mr. HEYBURN. The Forestry Service declines to approve of these applications for patents.

Mr. FULTON. On the ground that the land is more valuable for timber than for homesteads?

Mr. HEYBURN. I presume in some cases because of that fact.

Mr. FULTON. But the land was entered before the forest reserves were created?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes. The land was entered before the forest reserves were created, and the people were living there.

For instance—

7. Swan J. Swanson, NW. ¼ NW. ¼ sec. 28; N. ½ NE. ¼ and NE. ¼ NW. ¼ sec. 29; September 1, 1902; claimant away working in hayfields near Pine. Wife at home. Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. Do I understand the Senator to complain that the Forestry Service claims the right, wherever there was a homestead entry made upon the public domain before a forest reserve was created, to cancel that homestead?

Mr. HALE. Obstruct it.

Mr. HEYBURN. They have not reached the point of canceling. They are tying up these people who want to get title so that they may have their property available as other property is available to the owners of it.

Mr. HALE. Obstruct it.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; obstruct the title. The Senator can examine them at his leisure.

I desire now, in a few general words, to conclude my remarks, and I do not know that I shall have occasion to reopen them.

I have attempted to point out some of the characteristics of this policy—the "forestry policy," as it is called—that is growing to be one of the most expensive departments in the Government. I merely want Senators to be on guard and not take for granted the romance connected with the general language that surrounds this question. I want Senators to be on inquiry here, so that when they vote responsibly in this matter they will do it with such information as they should have and as I can help make available to them.

I have a great deal of data here from settlers, actual facts and experience that ought not to be passed by. Here is a man by the name of Parker, who lives in Cassia County. They made a forest reserve over him. They took him in. He writes me a long account of it, which is undoubtedly true, because I know him to be a man of veracity and character. I ask leave to publish this communication.

Mr. SMOOT. What is his name?

Mr. HEYBURN. J. A. Parker. The first letter is dated September 25, 1907. I endeavored to get a more reasonable consideration of his case and took it up with the Department, but there seems to be no hope for Mr. Parker. I feel myself impelled to collect the facts as to Mr. Parker and put them in the RECORD.

Mr. LODGE. Put in the whole letter.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will put in the whole letter. This is a very serious case. He is an old soldier, and it is the last homestead that he ever expects to be able to take. He has lived there for some years, thinking he was safe, when a forest ranger said, "It is too arid, cold, and bleak to be an attractive homestead," and that the conditions Mr. Parker is willing to subject himself to and that he voluntarily selected should not be allowed. I will put the letter in the RECORD. I think Senators will find when they come to read it that it is about as pathetic a case of an old man being deprived of his home as one can imagine.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator probably get the list in the RECORD in the morning?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; there is no reason why it should not appear.

Mr. WARREN. We will get it in the RECORD in the morning?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. I shall be very glad to have it.

The matter referred to is as follows:

CASSIA COUNTY FOREST RESERVE,
Via Twin Falls, Idaho, September 25, 1907.

To the Hon. W. B. HEYBURN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

HONORED SIR: You will, I hope, pardon me for the liberty that I take in addressing this letter to you, but I have got into some trouble here on this the Cassia County Forest Reserve, and I wish to make my grievances known to a little higher authority than an ordinary forest-range rider. Two years ago about this time in 1905 I settled here on Shoshone Creek by laying a foundation for a house, posting a notice of a homestead location, and taking possession of the same according to the usual custom of settlement in an unsurveyed country, I being the only man to ever really locate in this valley outside of the Shoe Sole Cattle Company (Sparks & Herald). I had a map of the Cassia County Forest Reserve, and according to that I figured that I was on United States land and not on the forest reserve. I could not find any corner stones in the dense sagebrush, so I hired an independent surveyor and went back 12 miles to a surveyed line, where I knew there was a corner stone and took up that line and ran in here across an unsurveyed country and found a corner stone, and when I came to run out the land I had chosen I found that I was just across the line on the forest reserve. In the meantime the cowboys had thrown the foundation of my house into the creek. I then went to Range Rider Back, who had been sent in here by Superintendent Peter Wrenstead, of Pocatello, and asked him for a permit to cut some more house logs and some wood, and he told me he could not issue me a permit then, as he had no blanks, but that I could go ahead and cut my timber and leave it on the ground where I cut it and he would stamp it later on when he came in here again. He never came to stamp it that fall, and before he did come in the next spring some one else hauled off the timber I cut.

In the meantime the act of June 11, 1906, was passed, allowing a homestead on a forest reserve. I then applied to the United States land office at Hailey, Idaho, and tried to enter the land under that act, but was told there by them that they had no instructions as yet to grant any papers on the land. They advised me to take possession of the land as a squatter, as in all cases of unsurveyed land. I then went to Maj. F. A. Fenn, United States forester at Boise, and had him apply to the Department for me. I then went to Fenn, as he was an old acquaintance of mine, we having served together in the Nez Percé war in 1877. In due time I received a permit from the Department at Washington acknowledging my application, but stating that I might expect some necessary delay in getting the land inspected by the forest inspectors. I then went on and built me a shack, and moved into it with my family, and began the improvement of the place. While I was building this shack, Forest Rider Ruchfield, under Wrenstead, came in here and came to the shack and saw me. I had two other men helping me. I showed him my permit that Fenn had secured for me, and he gave me no further instructions whatever. This spring as soon as the logs would peel good, I began cutting me some more logs on the land that I claimed—as meantime I had surveyed the land, as it adjoined a surveyed township—to build me a better house. I also wrote to Major Fenn and told him of my intentions. I cut about fifty logs and peeled them, and while I was cutting these logs Forest Rider George Crockett was at my house nearly every day and saw me. I showed him the logs and told him what I was cutting them for, and he made no objections to my cutting them, as they were all cut on the 160 acres that I claimed, and I showed him the lines. As there are about 10 or 15 acres of timber on the 160 that I claim, and every foot of the land is agricultural and tillable land, which is the SW. ¼ of sec. 24, T. 14, S. R. 17, E. B. M., all went well until about three weeks ago. One day, while I was away from home, Forest Supervisor Wrenstead came to my shack and posted a notice of it, confiscating it and all of my outbuildings, and ordering me to vacate the place, my home.

Now, he proposes to arrest me for cutting timber on the land to build me a house without special permit from him (Wrenstead). Now, I would say that I was the first settler in this valley and the means of getting it settled up, and since I settled here there have been probably 100 located here, and I located nearly all of them by showing them corner stones and giving them the dimensions of their land. Now, all the good land is taken up and the Forest Department proposes to drive me from my home because I am guilty of the crime of digging out the sagebrush and trying to redeem the worthless domain and making myself and family a home. Now, in conclusion I would say that I first came to this country here in the West thirty-nine years ago, and for fifteen years I stood between the frontier settlers and the hostile Indians and took part in every Indian war from the Rio Grande in Texas to our northern border, and from the Missouri River to our Pacific coast, as scout, guide, interpreter, etc., and I am a veteran of the civil war. Now, this great and rich nation will not allow me a home as a last resting place in the land that I redeemed for her from a savage foe, when such men as now run the Forest Service dared not to cross the Missouri River at Omaha, and I dare to say that I have done more for the West and this nation than any other man living in it to-day and got less pay for my services.

Hoping that I have not troubled you too much in writing you such a long letter, I am,

Yours, very truly, J. A. PARKER.

P. O. Box 931, Twin Falls, Idaho.

P. S.—I have a book called the Use Book, which F. A. Fenn sent me, and that states that if a forest rider sees anyone cutting timber illegally he must notify such settler to stop such cutting, in the presence of one or more witnesses. The forest riders here knew that I was cutting those logs from the time I cut the first log. I would never have taken the land in the first place if I had known it was on a forest reserve, and I would gladly abandon it now if there was any more good land to locate—even now, after two years' lost time—rather than to live on a forest reserve and endure so much red-tape business.

To the Hon. WELDON B. HEYBURN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your favor of November 26, 1907, and wish to thank you very much for the interest you have taken in this matter, and I shall not forget you should you ever need my support. I now wish to say that since I received your favor I have received a letter from the United States Forester, of Washington, D. C., in which he states that Supervisor Peter Wrenstead states that the land that I have selected, the SW. ¼ of sec. 25, T. 14 S., R. 17 E., B. M., is rocky and is subject to killing frosts every month in the year. Now, I wish to say that this quarter section has not got one-eighth of an acre of rocks on it, and if crops can not be grown on this piece of land, then there is at least 100 ranchmen in Idaho who are terribly out of luck or terribly big fools, as there are probably that number of people who have taken up land under the homestead and desert acts in the same valley that is neither higher or lower than the land that I had selected, and they are building on them, grubbing out the sagebrush and making homes on the same. It may be that Supervisor Wrenstead, of Pocatello, thinks they are all doing this work for their health, but as I know the major part of them personally, and they seem to be a pretty healthy lot of men, I hardly think so.

The Forester at Washington sends me a blank application and requests me to select another location, but if Superintendent Wrenstead's statement is correct, what would be the use for me to select another location if this land is unfit for cultivation, as I could not get any land that is of a lower altitude on the Cassia County Forest Reserve, as this land is the very lowest land down the valley that is on the forest reserve; and if I get out of this scrape of locating land on a forest reserve, why should I go back into another of the same kind, by locating more land under the jurisdiction of the same supervisor, who overruled the judgment of 100 Idaho ranchmen who are spending their time and money making homes for themselves on exactly the same land, where there is no more difference to their land and mine than there is in the two sides of the streets of Boise City. I only ask that the Department of Agriculture allow me to take off the improvements that I have put on this land, and I am ready to play quits with all forest reserves, where it is possible for supervisors to be ruled by stock associations, and locate a home elsewhere, where I shall be allowed to use my own judgment and my fellow-ranchmen's judgment, whether I can raise crops on it before I spend my time and money in improving the land for a home, or I can go to the Canadian Northwest, as hundreds and thousands of the best citizens of this country are doing, where there is no forest reserves, while good lands are held on this side of the line as forest reserves for stock associations to graze their herds on, and thus cut out the best citizens that ever inhabited any country in the world. I am only speaking the opinion of every man in this valley.

Yours, very truly, J. A. PARKER.

APRIL 2, 1908.

Hon. GIFFORD PINCHOT,
Chief Forester, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Referring to your letter of the 28th ultimo, in which you advise me that the application of Mr. J. A. Parker, filed November 27, 1906, under the act of July 11, 1906, for the SE. ¼ sec. 25, T. 14 S., R. 17 E., has been rejected, you are respectfully requested to advise me the reasons for adverse action on his application.

Mr. Parker advises me that he settled on the land in 1905.

Very truly, years,

W. B. HEYBURN.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, FOREST SERVICE,
Washington, April 6, 1908.

Hon. W. B. HEYBURN,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Your letter of April 2 is received. Mr. J. A. Parker's original application was for the SE. ¼ sec. 25, T. 14 S., R. 17 E., B. M., in the Cassia National Forest. It was denied for the reason that the land was found to be very rough and rocky, with a steep slope to the west, and absolutely worthless for agricultural purposes. The report shows that directly west of the area applied for, on the A. D. Norton estate, is a good body of timber in which the applicant erected a cabin in 1907, not 1905 as stated in his letter.

The section lines have not been established, and Mr. Parker was under the impression that he was settling in the SE. ¼ sec. 25. It is apparent that what he really desired was the land which supports this body of timber.

Subsequent to his application being rejected, he applied for permission to remove the improvements which he made, which could not be granted for the reason that the material used was taken in trespass from the Norton estate.

As you were informed March 28, Mr. Parker's amended application was for land which had already been listed upon the application of Mrs. M. L. Maxon, and therefore could not be accepted.

Very sincerely, yours,

GIFFORD PINCHOT, Forester.

Mr. HEYBURN. I desire to say in this connection that I am not undertaking to say that in all these cases these men are right. I am not undertaking to defend these homesteads. I am showing these matters more particularly for the purpose of demonstrating the unrest, the unquiet conditions that are brought about by this interference in community affairs by strangers to the community. The thing of paramount importance to the Government is that it should have citizens and that the citizens should have homes. That is the foundation of our Government. These lands and valleys and mountains and rivers were here before man was. They were here when "the morning stars sang together," and yet they counted nothing for civilization, nothing for government, nothing for that which we represent in this legislative body and for which this country and this flag stand. It is the men and the men with homes that count for a nation and make and constitute the nation; and when they settle, some with one degree of capacity and some with another, that they should have these disturbing agencies interjected into the community is not in the interest of good government, nor is it right and just and fair. They are entitled to live up to the highest measure of the individual capacity and to be left alone as much as possible to work out that foundation upon which the next generation and the next and the next shall rise to build the succeeding higher standards of civilization and government. That is our duty—to make that road as clear and smooth and firm as possible for those people.

Mr. President, shall we leave this vast country in solitude, with no promise except the statement that this Service has come to stay? It has not come to stay, as long as I am in a position to speak and controvert it. It has not come to stay, I believe, as long as there is in the legislative bodies of this country a proper spirit of understanding and appreciation of the purposes for which the Government is created. If the rights of our forefathers had been hampered and pestered as these pioneers are, they never would have reached the Mississippi River. There would have been no Louisiana purchase, I will say to the Senator from Minnesota. There would have been a stagnant band of struggling, pestered immigrants upon this shore. The same blood that made them rise up and gain their freedom is the blood that is struggling for the same rights in that country to-day.

The idea of taking a State and putting nearly one-half of it in a forest reserve! Aside from the question of depriving the State of its rights, a community that made the best record for growth in the last decade of any State in the Union, both in property and in increased citizenship, think of drawing a line right in front of the forwarding, stepping foot and staying it, and saying, "You shall never finish the step. Stand there. Do the best you can. If you can make a living or maintain a State, do it. But that solitude is owned by your neighbor, who was supposed to be your friend, ready to join you in the development and growth of this country, but has announced all at once, 'I will take no further part; I contribute nothing by taxation. I will allow no one to come in here and occupy this land. You shall build no cities, no communities. You shall make no market for the products of that part of the State owned by the citizenship. You shall do none of these things that tend to the greatness of the Government and the State and the highest development of man.'"

Now, are you going to give them a million and a half in a lump fund to emphasize this and furnish the house of the burglar? Are you going to give them $500,000 to string wires and more firmly intrench themselves behind this great error of Government? I trust not. I do not want to see this Department of the Government grow as it is growing.

I am in favor of planting forests. I would plant them in Nebraska and Kansas and Iowa and everywhere else—great forests—and I would contribute to it out of the Public Treasury if necessary. But I would not go in and seek to plant forests in a State that is already more than a third forests. I will stand for anything that tends to protect the forests from destruction and devastation, but I will not be hoodwinked by poetry or romance or high-sounding phrase. I know what tends for civilization and growth in these frontier countries. The woodman's ax precedes the builder's trowel, and the mansion of pretension and dimensions follows the settler's hut. The settler's hut represents just as much the civilization of the country as does the grandest mansion that is to follow it.

Mr. LODGE. I understand the Senator from Wyoming does not expect to go on further with the bill to-night.

Mr. WARREN. Unless some Senator desires to speak upon the bill, I ask that it be laid aside for the day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the pending bill be temporarily laid aside. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ALBERT S. AUSTIN.

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6826) to correct the military record of Albert S. Austin.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to add at the end of the bill the following:

Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall accrue or become payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to review and revoke General Court-Martial Orders, No. 9, Headquarters Army of the Potomac, April 1, 1864, approving the proceedings and sentence in the case of Albert S. Austin, captain and commissary of subsistence of volunteers, assigned to duty as chief commissary of subsistence, cavalry corps, with rank of lieutenant-colonel, and to disapprove of the same, and to issue to him an honorable discharge as of date April 1, 1864: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall accrue or become payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REMOVAL OF RESTRICTIONS ON LANDS OF FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES.

Mr. OWEN. I ask unanimous consent that Calendar No. 588, the so-called "restrictions bill," be made the special order for Friday, May 8, after the routine morning business, subject to appropriation bills.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 15641) for the removal of restrictions from part of the land of allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes, and for other purposes, be made the special order for Friday, May 8, after the routine morning business, subject to appropriation bills. Is there objection?

Mr. HALE. In view of the nearness of the time when we all hope to adjourn, I do not think any assignment should be made especially of any particular bill, and as at present advised, I must object to such assignment. The essential thing that we ought to do—and we will never get off if we do not do it—is to push the appropriation bills. In rather an unadvised way, I think, the Senate agreed to mortgage the entire day to-morrow. It ought to be devoted to finishing the present appropriation bill. Then we ought to take up the other bills and pass them; and therefore I gave notice the other day that for the present I should object to any assignment of any bill for any day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

THE MASONIC MUTUAL LIFE ASSOCIATION.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6358) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate The Masonic Mutual Relief Association of the District of Columbia."

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to amend the act referred to by striking out the word "Relief" and substituting therefor the word "Life" in the name of the association, so that as amended it shall read: "The Masonic Mutual Life Association of the District of Columbia."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, May 6, 1908, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, May 5, 1908.

[Continuation of the legislative day of Monday, May 4, 1908.]

The recess having expired, at 11.30 o'clock a. m. the House was called to order by the Speaker.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. SMITH of California. Mr. Speaker, I desire to rise to a question of personal privilege. There have been circulated through the mail to each Member of the House certain criticisms of my personal conduct and official action by the Chamber of Commerce of the City of Los Angeles, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

LOS ANGELES CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
Los Angeles, Cal.

Copy of resolutions in re Sierra Forest Reserve and Congressman Smith.

Whereas Congressman SMITH, of this State, in a recent speech in the National House of Representatives, relating to a proposed extension of the Sierra Forest Reserve, attacked the administration of the Forestry Bureau, presided over by the Hon. Gifford Pinchot, because of its favorable attitude toward such extension; and

Whereas the statements of said SMITH, on the occasion referred to, were, in several important particulars grossly unfair, misleading, and false, and were calculated to deceive Members of Congress and other persons not acquainted with the facts, to the prejudice of the Forestry Bureau and to the injury of the city of Los Angeles in connection with its project for obtaining a water supply from the Owens River Valley, as appears from the following specifications, based on the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, to-wit:

First. Said SMITH charged said Forestry Bureau with seeking to have such forestry extension made in order to obtain control of water rights in the Owens Valley in the interest of "one party" favored by that Bureau, who desired to secure said rights to the exclusion of other claimants having earlier appropriations, thus conveying to the House the impression that such favored party was a private individual or corporation. That said SMITH having made such charge, persistently evaded questions by other Members of Congress, which, if candidly answered, would have disclosed the fact that the party referred to by him was not a private individual or corporation, but the city of Los Angeles, and that the Chief Forester, desiring to aid that city in carrying out its project, had refused to approve certain private power and water schemes conflicting therewith, and it was only when compelled by the pointed inquiries of other Members of Congress that said SMITH finally stated, "I think, perhaps, in justice to the House I should throw one side light on this question. The party that I have referred to as desiring to obtain this monopoly of the water in the valley is the city of Los Angeles."

Second. Said SMITH, having been forced to disclose that the real ground of his complaint against the Forestry Bureau was that it had seen fit to encourage and help a public enterprise as against certain adverse private projects, then endeavored to avoid the effect of his admission by asserting that the city of Los Angeles "is proposing to construct an irrigation system," and that it did not want or intend to use the waters in question for municipal purposes, but desired to secure control of the same for the irrigation of lands adjacent to Los Angeles. This assertion was false, as said SMITH well knew. The sole purpose of the city of Los Angeles in going to the Owens Valley for water is to obtain a supply for municipal purposes sufficient for its present and its future needs. As a matter of course, under a wise provision, there should be a considerable quantity of water in excess of the city's needs for many years to come, and while this excess supply may be used for other purposes, including irrigation, until all of it shall be required for use within the city, it will merely constitute a reserve supply, which ultimately will be devoted exclusively to municipal uses.

Third. Said SMITH also endeavored, in his speech, to discredit and injure the city's water project by asserting that nothing has been done toward carrying it out, "except some surveys and some efforts to finance that undertaking." This assertion also was false, as said SMITH well knew, or might easily have ascertained had he desired to make a candid and truthful statement on the subject.

The Owens River project of the city of Los Angeles was initiated in the spring of 1905. The city has voted bonds in the amount of $24,500,000 for the purpose of carrying out this enterprise, and a force of more than 700 men is now employed in connection with the construction of the necessary works. Of these bonds, $1,500,000 were sold prior to the passage by Congress, in June, 1906, of the right of way bill in aid of such project, and $1,020,000 have been sold since that date. Out of the funds thus raised, expenditures have been made or contracted substantially as follows:

For lands and water rights	$1,300,000
For machinery, surveys, and general construction expenses	900,000
Total	2,200,000

The chamber of commerce recognizes as true one statement made by Mr. SMITH, namely:

"I have been resisting it (the extension by the Forest Reserve) in season and out of season for nearly a year. I have been doing all that I could to block the progress of the movement from the time it began;" and the chamber finds, in the mental attitude thus revealed, the reason and the animus which prompted Mr. SMITH in making the misrepresentations and misstatements of which his argument in the House is chiefly composed: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce denounces S. C. SMITH, Representative in Congress from the Eighth District of this State, for his unfair and untruthful statements in Congress concerning the water enterprise of the city of Los Angeles, the most important and extensive work of its kind ever undertaken in the West, and for his hostile and malicious opposition to the Forestry Bureau, which, under the administration of the Hon. Gifford Pinchot, has been conducted upon the wise and just principle that the remaining natural resources of this country should be conserved for the use and benefit of the people.

I hereby certify that the above is a true and correct copy of resolutions adopted by the directors of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce at their regular meeting held April 22, 1908.

GEO. H. STEWART, President.

Attest:
FRANK WIGGINS, Secretary.

Mr. SMITH of California. Mr. Speaker, it looks as though a commercial organization representing a city like Los Angeles and a Representative in Congress ought to be able to discuss a matter of business difference and a question of public policy without either calling the other hard names. There are some people, however, who feel that they have not quite made an argument complete until they have indulged in some personal vituperation.

Now, my position in this matter does not interfere with the city of Los Angeles acquiring a water supply, which I admit that she needs, and I have not been at all secret in my offerts in behalf of my constituents. Perhaps you understand by this time that Los Angeles is not in my district, but it is going into my district for a water supply, and I have been endeavoring to protect the valid water rights which are held by some farmers in that valley from confiscation for the city of Los Angeles. And I read in this communication that has just been presented that they acknowledge that the question at issue is one as to whether the Government shall destroy these water rights held by the farmers in that valley, by denying them a right of way for their use, so that Los Angeles may carry off the water to the vicinity of her gates and devote it to irrigation there for an unknown number of years to come.

I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read a communication which I filed with the President of the United States in opposition to the extension of the forest reserve over that valley.

The Clerk read as follows:

APRIL 16, 1908.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following protest against extending the boundary of the Sierra Forest Reserve so as to include a portion of Owens River Valley in Inyo County, Cal.

(1) The act of June 4, 1897 (30 Stat., 11) defines what lands may be included in a forest reserve in the following language:

"No public forest reservation shall be established, except to improve and protect the forest within the reservation, or for the purpose of securing favorable conditions of water flows, and to furnish a continuous supply of timber for the use and necessities of citizens of the United States."

Then, as if to make the provision more emphatic, the same section proceeds to say:

"but it is not the purpose or intent of these provisions, or of the act providing for such reservations, to authorize the inclusion therein of lands more valuable for the mineral therein or for agricultural purposes than for forest purposes."

It is not claimed by anyone that the portion of Owens River Valley referred to is in any sense such land as the law says may be included in a reserve, but, on the contrary, it is admitted by all that it is not forestry land, but is rich bottom, timberless land, suited in the highest degree for agriculture, and it being only the lower course of the river that is to be added—the watershed of the river is already in this reserve—it can not be and is not claimed to be a matter of water conservation, is not "for the purpose of securing favorable conditions of water flows," as permitted by the statute. And, for the same reasons, it can not prevent the contamination of a city's water supply.

2. It is admitted that the proposition to include this valley in the reserve originated with the city of Los Angeles, and the object which she has in view is to have the Forestry Bureau deny the right of way for certain irrigating canals that are projected for the irrigation of lands in this valley, the ultimate purpose being to defeat certain valid water rights (by depriving the owners of a right of way), and thus perfect a certain later claim to the waters of that river held by that city. To understand this proposition, it seems necessary to review briefly the history of recent events in that valley.

Following the passage of the reclamation act, the public lands of this valley (constituting a large part of the valley) were withdrawn from entry, and all of the unused waters of the river and its tributaries were filed upon by J. B. Lippincott, reclamation engineer, for and in behalf of the Reclamation Service. Two reports on reclamation work were subsequently made. One, by Mr. Lippincott, indicated that 150,000 acres of rich bottom land, and largely public land available for homesteaders, could be irrigated at a cost of about $20 per acre. The second report was made by Reclamation Engineer Taylor on a smaller project and indicated that from 50,000 to 75,000 acres could be irrigated at a cost of $4 to $6 per acre.

While these events were transpiring, the city of Los Angeles began to look about for an additional water supply, and deciding to look to Owens River for it, agents were sent into that valley in the early part of 1905 and began to secure options on private water rights. Subsequently these options were taken up by that city, and she claims to have secured for her perpetual use about 10,000 miner's inches of water.

Incidentally it may be mentioned that the city of Los Angeles claims a population of about 260,000 to 280,000 people, and her present water supply is about 2,400 miner's inches. Thus it will appear that she has secured water sufficient for fully 1,500,000 of people—enough for many decades.

I wish to state at this point, and state it most emphatically, that there is no contest or controversy whatsoever affecting the 10,000 inches of water which Los Angeles has secured as above stated. The people of Owens River Valley regret to see farms laid waste and the water taken out of its natural basin, but realize that the city has acquired it honestly and is entitled to do with it as she pleases.

Los Angeles publicly announced her plans as above outlined in July, 1905. The citizens of the valley, seeing the activity of Mr. Lippincott in the affairs of Los Angeles, had fears that there might happen just what did subsequently happen, namely, the abandonment of the reclamation project by the Government. They therefore made certain filings on the waters of the river, that irrigation development might proceed if the Government retired from the valley. These filings were made about August, 1905. Later in the year Los Angeles's plans had grown upon her until they included a vast scheme of irrigation near her gates, 240 miles from her intake on the river. She then proposed to take out of the valley 30,000 inches of water, and in October, 1905, filed her claim to additional water of the river—the same water covered by the farmers' claims. Here is the whole point of difference. The people in the valley want this unused water in the river used to fertilize their valley where it will make homes on Government lands at $4 to $6 per acre; Los Angeles wants to take it 240 miles away, through 20 miles of tunnels, into another watershed and apply it to private lands, the cost being $400 to $500 per acre.

Now, as stated above, the object sought in having the forest boundary extended is to put the Forestry Bureau in a position where it may defeat the water rights of the farmers and turn over to Los Angeles water privileges which she does not rightfully own.

(3) It sems hardly necessary to anticipate the needs of Los Angeles as a city beyond the 10,000 inches of water which she has secured; but it may be in order to point out the fact that if she should in the remote future need more water, she can take it away from the farms in Owens Valley by purchase, or if need be by condemnation. The law of California, with reference to the right of eminent domain, is as follows:

"1240. The private property which may be taken under this title includes * * * property appropriated to a public use; but such property shall not be taken unless for a more necessary public use than that to which it has been already appropriated."

Owens Valley contains eight or ten villages and towns with schools, churches, and all other features of good society. The people are enterprising, of a high type of citizenship, and all the hopes of the valley are bound up in the spread of irrigation there. They ask only for a square deal, and confidently expect it from this Administration. They ask merely to be allowed to work out their own destiny with the opportunities which nature has given them, without interference from any arm of the National Government. The Government has declined to aid in the development of the valley, and we think that it should not obstruct that work.

Believing that the Forestry Bureau has no proper function to perform in Owens Valley, and hoping the boundaries will not be extended over it, I have the honor to subscribe myself,

Your obedient servant,

S. C. SMITH, Member of Congress.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House, Washington, D. C.

Mr. SMITH of California. Mr. Speaker, there is very little more that I care to say in connection with this matter. I thought it was due myself to place the matter before the House in order that it might not think I was undertaking to interfere with a city securing an adequate water supply. In the communication that I filed with the President I made it as plain as I knew how to make it that I was merely endeavoring to save to the people of the valley in my district the water rights which they have honestly acquired under the law of California. It will be observed that the communication from the Chamber of Commerce admits that an act of confiscation if performed in behalf of an individual would be wrong, but when performed in behalf of a city it seems to take on a different color. I shall not argue to this House that in this great Christian nation there is one rule of morality for transactions between individuals and another rule applicable where a farming community is on one side and a municipality on the other. Such an argument, I think, would not be appreciated by the authors of the communication that has been sent to the Members, and I know it is not needed by the Members of this House.

I desire to express my appreciation for the many expressions of confidence in the correctness of my position that have come to me from individual Members of the House since the communication arrived yesterday, and I apologize to the House for taking its time this morning with this personal matter. [Applause.]

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 21260), the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 264, nays 2, answered "present" 7, not voting 114, as follows:

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. WATSON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill. The amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] is pending, which, without objection, the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the word "substance," line 5, page 79, "and the causes of explosions in mines located in lands," so as to read: "For the continuance of the analyzing and testing of the coals, lignites, and other mineral fuel substances, and the causes of explosions of mines located in lands belonging to the United States," etc.

The CHAIRMAN. On this amendment the gentleman from Minnesota had reserved the point of order.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, as there are no public lands in my State, my utter unselfishness in the matter must be confessed at once. I want to cover the evil that grows out of mine explosions. I want to cover it where the United States has jurisdiction; hence the broad language I use. For instance, we can go into the Territories, wherever they are; but recently we have turned the Indian Territory and Oklahoma Territory into a State. There are large coal lands that are being worked there over which the United States has jurisdiction, because they belong to the United States, and are worked by private parties. I was so informed this morning at the Geological Survey. I hold in my hand a letter, which I asked for this morning. It is signed by the Director of the Geological Survey, in which he states that in December, 1907, there was an awful mine explosion in New Mexico, a Territory, of course, where eleven persons were killed in the Bernal mines by an explosion of coal dust. By this investigation they found that such explosions occurred.

Mr. BONYNGE. Was that on public land or was not that land that had been taken?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. In a Territory, where we have jurisdiction.

Mr. BONYNGE. Some citizen may have taken up the property under the public-land laws and segregated it from the public lands.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That is all right. It does not make any difference, because, being in a Territory, Congress has constitutional powers to act.

Mr. BONYNGE. Oh, yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. In a Territory we have jurisdiction to pass laws relating to mine inspection.

Mr. BONYNGE. That is true if it is in a Territory.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That is my point. In Oklahoma, which is now a State, there are coal lands that were formerly in that Territory, and they are owned by the Government of the United States—some of them—and some of them are held in trust for the Indians. Those coal lands are being worked, and explosions and troubles of that character have occurred there or may occur. At all events, it being completely within the constitutional power of the Government to go into Oklahoma to look after these lands of the United States, the amendment that I propose is so broad that you can not only go into a Territory, but you can go into a State like Oklahoma and other States and examine mines in public lands.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Would it not be better to have a comprehensive bill, enabling the Government to make inspection of all coal that enters into interstate commerce, or mines that produce coal which enters into interstate commerce, and get at the question in that way?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That might be better.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That would enable the Government to investigate the explosion that occurred in Pennsylvania last year.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I think that would be better, but we have not done that.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I understand there is a measure under consideration for that purpose.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That may be true. The trouble is, there have been too many measures under consideration and not enough that have been made into law on this subject.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am hoping this measure will come out and be made a law.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I hope so, too; but here is a provision that has already come out where you can make a law of it by putting in a few words, or you can amend it if you want to. I care nothing about the question of authorship. Now, I have a paper in my hand showing the immense amount of coal mined in New Mexico. In 1897 it was only 716 tons. In 1907 it was 2,300,000 tons. In Indian Territory it was 3,400,000 tons. The men killed per thousand in the Indian Territory in 1905 were five; in 1907, four. In New Mexico in 1905 the number of men killed per thousand were two, and in 1907, ten, thirty-four being killed in that year.

Now, gentlemen, we have the power to go into the Territories. We have the power to go into our public lands wherever they are. We have the money. We have these men losing their lives. Why, human flesh in these mines is getting to be very cheap—almost as cheap as Swift's beef. Think of the widows and orphans who have been made desolate by these explosions. I join in the appeal that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILSON] has so well and eloquently made time and again—that Congress do something to prevent these disasters in the future.

Mr. NICHOLLS. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman who has just spoken as to the purpose of investigating the cause of mine accidents, but I fear that there is going to be confusion in the House because of trying to have more than one Department or bureau attend to the same thing.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The superintendent, Mr. Smith, told me this morning that he would have the execution of the law as to this matter that we are now passing, and that, under the Secretary of the Interior, he would have to execute the provisions on this subject contained in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. So regardless of which bill we put this provision into he will have to execute the law.

Mr. NICHOLLS. I should like to state that there is evidently some error in connection with this last statement, for the bill that has been reported by the Committee on Mines and Mining provides for a Bureau of Mines, and it would not be under the control of the Geological Survey. It would be in the Department of the Interior, but under the separate supervision of a chief of the Bureau of Mines. I think that to adopt the amendment offered would only result in confusion, and at best would only be a partial attempt to improve what really demands improvement from the hands of Congress, and that is something that will lessen the great mine disasters in our country that result in such great loss of life. Because the committee has reported a bill providing for the establishment of a Bureau of Mines and Mining, with power to investigate and report upon the causes of mine accidents, throughout the entire country, I beg to oppose the amendment, and hope that it will be defeated.

I want at once to say that I understand full well the gentleman from Tennessee is doing what he is with the very best of motives and with a view to helping the miners, but I want to point out that I fear it would only defeat a much larger and more beneficial measure in their behalf.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman alludes to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill?

Mr. NICHOLLS. No; I allude to a separate bill.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Are you going to get it reported out?

Mr. NICHOLLS. Yes; it has been reported.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Are you going to get it passed?

Mr. NICHOLLS. If the Speaker——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Oh, "if the Speaker," "if the Speaker!" [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, I am not a miner. [Laughter.] I want to say that the proposition which is in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill does not us the words "public lands" a single time. It says "Territory and Alaska." The public lands of Oklahoma and other States can not be reached under that provision because it says "Territory and Alaska." The amendment I put in this bill says "public lands," and so you could go to Oklahoma, Kentucky, Iowa, Tennessee, or wherever the public lands are, and send a man down in the mines and compel the man who is mining to submit to a complete inspection, because we have the constitutional power behind it and the sinews of war put in the inspector's hands to compel the miner to surrender to the investigation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired. [Laughter.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania be given five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania may have five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to inquire whether the gentleman from Tennessee is to use the time or the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair put the request that the gentleman from Pennsylvania should have the time.

There was no objection.

Mr. NICHOLLS. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to make any extended remarks on this question, but I will say in answer to the gentleman from Tennessee that the bill reported by the Committee on Mines and Mining provides for an investigation in every State and every Territory, and if need be in all of the mines, for the purpose of finding out the cause of these disasters. It is not necessary that a complete inspection of the mine be made as it is done regularly by mine inspectors, but that certain very important points be taken up and the mystery connected therewith solved. For instance, there is a great deal of difference of opinion as to the cause of many of our disasters. Experts differ and miners differ very much as to these causes, but whatever the causes may be, they result annually in the death of thousands of miners.

Mr. ADAIR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLLS. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ADAIR. The gentleman is very familiar with the difficulty in getting bills passed through this House. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania have any assurance from the Speaker, or from those who are apparently in control of the legislation of the House, that the bill of which he speaks and which has been reported by the committee will be passed by the House, or will be given an opportunity for passage in the House?

Mr. NICHOLLS. I have no assurance.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I can answer the gentleman that we have that assurance.

Mr. NICHOLLS. The committee has reported the bill unanimously, and I hope that the Speaker will consider it of sufficient importance for him to recognize somebody to move the passage of the bill.

Mr. ADAIR. Does not the gentleman think that in view of the past experiences, it would be better to take the present opportunity of getting this legislation in the interest of the miners than to take the chances of the passage of the bill to which he refers?

Mr. NICHOLLS. I would say not, for the reason that we already have inspection in most of the mines, and this would limit the investigation provided for to mines on Government lands. A great deal of the mining is done in various States of the Union, and this would hardly make a scratch in the problem itself.

Mr. ADAIR. I am in favor of the gentleman's bill, but I do not want to lose the opportunity of getting some legislation.

Mr. NICHOLLS. This would be giving them something—I was going to say in name, but not in substance—but it would give them something that would only go a very small way toward meeting the real necessities of the case.

Mr. ADAIR. Would there be any objection to allowing this amendment to be passed and let this go in the bill and then follow later with the passage of the bill to which the gentleman refers?

Mr. NICHOLLS. First of all, it would be duplicating authority.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I will have to insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota makes the point of order.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the gentleman think that it is subject to a point of order?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is it not a continuation of work already in progress?

Mr. TAWNEY. The work which is authorized in the paragraph, which now carries an appropriation of $250,000, is included and authorized in the organic act creating the Geological Survey. There is nothing in the organic act creating the Geological Survey which would authorize mine inspection or investigation of mines.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to ask the gentleman from Tennessee whether he knows any law authorizing this?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Only the general law authorizing the Geological Survey and the proposition that is in the bill for the investigation of coal, lignites, gases, and so forth: and, in fact, I believe the words "and so forth" are used in the paragraph. Surely that is broad enough to let in this proposition. In addition to that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] said in reply to my inquiry yesterday to that, this:

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Before the gentleman takes his seat, I want to ask him a question. I could not hear the gentleman very distinctly, as there was so much elocution on this side. I want to know if this amendment will arm any Department with authority to investigate mine explosions.

The reply of the gentleman from Pennsylvania was as follows:

Mr. DALZELL. I think the paragraph is broad enough to cover that, though it does not contemplate it. It is for a continuation of work. It is nothing new; it is a continuation of work already under way.

Just as I said now, work already begun. It is a continuation of work already begun and has been since 1905. I asked him another question, and he stated that a great deal of work had been done.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know of any better authority than to quote from the leader of the Committee on Rules, and from the general law on the subject, and I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that I am doing all I can to help the miners in their troubles, and I shall vote for any bill at any time that comes along, if it is within the limits of the constitutional power of Congress to help them. I think it is very clear that it is a continuation of public work already done.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee is not in order. The Chair does not think that it is necessary to render an opinion on the point. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CHANEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add as a new paragraph after line 9, page 79:

"For continuing the work authorized by the act approved March 3, 1891, and for the protection of the lives of miners in the Territories in the District of Alaska, and in public and Indian lands wheresoever situated, and for conducting such investigations as will increase safety and efficiency in mining, to be immediately available, $195,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to accept for use in the investigations named above any site, buildings, equipment, or fund which in his judgment it may be proper to accept; such acceptance shall be reported to Congress, and shall not be considered as binding the Government of the United States beyond the appropriation made by Congress in any one year."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment. If the gentleman desires five minutes, to discuss the merits of the proposition, I will withhold it.

Mr. CHANEY. I would be obliged to the gentleman.

Mr. TAWNEY. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. CHANEY. Mr. Chairman, the appalling loss of life in the coal-mining industries of the country has called very emphatic attention to the necessity for discovering the causes of these great catastrophes. Over here in West Virginia, only a short time ago, 350 lives were snuffed out in a very few minutes on account of an explosion which occurred there, and the persons operating the mine and those superintending the mine were absolutely unable to discover what was the actual cause of the explosion. Only recently a disaster occurred, as has been referred to by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES], and there it was not known what was the reason of the explosion which occurred. Human life is being sacrificed every little while because of the inability of men who manage these various enterprises to know what is the reason. No one seems to know how it is that gases explode, or that gases in combination with dust explode, and cause these losses of life. Recently the Committee on Mines and Mining investigated the question, and recommended a bill for the establishment of a Bureau of Mines and Mining in the Interior Department, in connection with the Geological Survey, for the making of scientific study of the causes of these various disasters, and the hearings, if bound together in one volume, would make a very large book. In the report that is made by the Committee on Mines and Mining with reference to this particular thing, this is said:

The great growth of the mining industry of the United States in recent years has been attended with a disproportionate and appalling loss of life, due to accidents and explosions in mines. The horror and sadness of some of these are still fresh in our memories. It is inconceivable that such accidents might not be prevented. The cause or causes of them are obscure, as was shown at our hearings, but the danger, whether gas or dust or both commingled, or whatever the cause, must disclose itself to adequate scientific investigation. When we recall that these accidents in 1906 sacrificed the lives of more than 1,500 persons, who in darkness and danger were courageously pursuing their vocations, the appeal in this regard becomes well-nigh imperative.

And in a report made by an expert of the Geological Survey it is found that in 1906 there were 2,061 men killed in American coal mines and 4,800 injured. Since 1890 our total death record has been 22,840. There ought to be no delay in pursuing some investigation by which this loss of life may be prevented. When a coal miner goes down into the bowels of the earth he takes his life in his own hands anyhow. There ought to be some way by which people may be able to avoid these terrible accidents, and it is testified by the men who appeared before the Committee on Mines and Mining that the only way that it can be done is to enter into a scientific investigation of the subject, and to engage such experts who may be able to give it or discover what the trouble is. Only by some such means as that proposed in the bill, which has been reported by the Committee on Mines and Mining, will we relieve that situation, and in order that we might not fail in getting at this as quickly as possible, and for fear there may not be opportunity to pass that bill that is reported favorably by the Committee on Mines and Mining, we ought to proceed to an investigation of this subject now, and we ought to appropriate the money by which it may be done.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield for a question? When was that bill reported?

Mr. CHANEY. It was reported on the 6th day of April, 1908.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And this is the 5th of May, and we have not had that bill passed yet.

Mr. NICHOLLS. May I ask the gentleman whether, in his opinion, the passage of this amendment would prejudice the passage of the bill providing for a Bureau of Mines and Mining?

Mr. CHANEY. It would not prejudice that bill; it only helps it along. It can be provided in connection with it.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I withhold the point of order for a few minutes to allow Mr. CAMPBELL to address the committee.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, the appalling mine disasters that have occurred in this country within a few years have appealed to the whole country, and it seems to me that it is highly important that the most scientific investigations that can possibly be made shall be made as to the cause of these great disasters. The question as to whether they are gas explosions or dust explosions or whether caused by one condition or another ought to be made the subject of the most searching scientific investigation of which this country is capable. Now, it is said, why not have this done by the States where the mines are located and where the States alone have jurisdiction wholly over the mines? This is upon a broader question and goes beyond State lines. We have been legislating here for the general welfare. We have taken up questions and legislated upon them where the conditions appealed to the whole country and arose above localities and State lines, as I am sure these appalling disasters do. If there is a way to find out what the real causes of the disasters are, it should be done, in order to apply a remedy for them. There ought to be no pains spared or expenditure withheld that would bring to the country the information and the results so greatly desired. I am therefore hoping that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHANEY] may be adopted.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I am obliged to insist upon the point of order, but I want to say first that there is——

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman withhold——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I hope the gentleman will withhold his point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has spoken twice on this proposition, and I desire to get along with the reading of this bill if possible.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I hope the gentleman will not do that. The gentleman from Pennsylvania last night wanted to address the House on this point.

Mr. TAWNEY. He addressed the committee in general debate.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. It was not, I think, on this point, and he was shut off yesterday afternoon. I hope the gentleman will hold his point for five minutes and let the gentleman explain his propostion.

Mr. TAWNEY. If I continue to withhold the point of order until all gentlemen have spoken on this proposition who desire to speak, we will make no progress whatever with the reading of the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would suggest to the gentleman from Minnesota to let one speech be made on this side. Three have been made on that side.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will withhold it for the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILSON] for five minutes, and I give notice I shall make the point of order then.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHANEY] is of vital importance to the mining industry of the United States. The number of men that are annually slaughtered in the mines require that immediate action shall be taken by Congress. If we do not do something in the present Congress, it means a year's delay at the very least. While that delay is taking place, thousands of lives are being lost. Over 3,500 lives were lost in the mines of the United States in 1907. Some 9,000 men were killed and injured. And yet with that enormous loss of life in the mines there seems to be hesitation on the part of the Members of this House to give an appropriation to investigate into the causes of those disasters and their loss of life. There are many things that are unknown to even those who are skilled in mining affairs in connection with mining. In many of them great explosions have taken place in recent years, and expert men who have given their entire lifetime to a study of the question have been unable to determine the cause.

The operators of coal mines and the coal miners themselves are a unit in asking that legislation of this kind be enacted, so that a systematic investigation can be proceeded with to determine what are the causes, to the end that the lives of miners may be protected and the property of the employers as well. There is no man who has the management of a mine who desires a condition of affairs to exist wherein the lives of the miners are continually endangered through causes over which he has no control or through causes that he has no means of knowing how to control. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] will withdraw his point of order and allow this proposition to be enacted by the House.

Mr. NICHOLLS. Is it not a fact that the difference between this amendment and the one offered lately by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] is in the fact that the first amendment provided that the Bureau of the Geological Survey should have the money for its use, and that this provides that the Secretary of the Interior, in whose Department it is provided for in the bill to have the Bureau of Mines, should have the use of the money under this amendment in the Department of Mines bill?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. As to whether or not that construction can be placed upon it, I am not sure, but whether the appropriation is to be made for the use of the Geological Survey or for the use of the Bureau of Mines, I care not. What I want is to see an appropriation made that will cause an investigation to be commenced immediately and conducted systematically.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania permit an interruption?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Have you or your organization ever appealed to your own State for an appropriation to make this investigation in the State for the purpose of protecting the lives of citizens of the State of Pennsylvania?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. I do not know of any appeal that has been made to the State of Pennsylvania or to any other State to have this investigation made. But, as a matter of fact, if we did appeal to the various States for the means to conduct these investigations, it would mean a multitude of different investigations and that much additional expense, every State investigating in its own particular way, while one general investigation is all that is necessary.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILSON] whether the same question might not be asked as to every agricultural investigation and every other investigation that is made by the General Government? As the gentleman from Pennsylvania says, it seems to me it would be bad business to have a number of small investigations rather than one sufficient for the whole purpose.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. The same question might be asked with regard to every scientific investigation undertaken by the Federal Government, no matter in what line of industry or in what walk of life. I hope this proposition will be allowed to come to a vote.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota is recognized.

Mr. STANLEY. I would like to ask a question of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY]. I had no idea of saying anything on this subject, but since the gentleman from Minnesota has asked the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILSON] a question with reference to the appropriation of the various States toward the discovery of gases and other scientific investigations for the protection of life, I would appreciate it very much if the gentleman from Pennsylvania would allow me three or four minutes in which to answer that question.

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania has not explained that amendment to my satisfaction and perhaps not to the satisfaction of the gentleman from Kentucky. I do not know whether the gentleman from Pennsylvania can do so.

Mr. STANLEY. I did not mean it that way. I meant to address myself to it.

Mr. TAWNEY. We have consumed more than enough time in the consideration of the merits of a proposition which is, in my judgment, entirely obnoxious to the rules of the House. Aside from the investigation for which it provides, in the language of the proviso carried by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana is not only the most novel but, in my judgment, the most vicious piece of legislation ever proposed in Congress. That proviso authorizes the head of the Executive Department to accept any site, any building, any equipment, or any funds that may be contributed by any individual, by any corporation, by any State, or by any institution of any State, a proposition that has never before been made in any legislation either State or national.

Now you propose to authorize the Federal Government to enter into a copartnership with any or all of these and give to the head of an Executive Department authority to accept money to be expended for a Government service in his discretion. This is going a much greater distance in the direction of absolute paternalism and copartnership between the Government of the United States, individuals, and corporations, and what not than has ever before been dreamed of. There is no authority of law for the proviso, and no authority of law for the investigation proposed.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is there any more paternalism in this than a soil survey in Cherokee County, Kans.?

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, a soil survey in Cherokee County, Kans., may be necessary for the purpose of determining the character of the soil and the products of the State of Kansas.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is that any more paternalistic than to ascertain what is the cause of mine explosions?

Mr. TAWNEY. Authority is not given the Secretary of Agriculture to go out and accept land from the people of Cherokee County, Kans., for the purpose of investigating the soil. Authority is not given, and has never been given, to an executive officer of the Government to accept money from a private individual or a corporation to be expended for carrying on Government work, and expended within the discretion of the head of that Department or the head of any Executive Department. There is absolutely no law authorizing either the original proposition or the authority contained in the proviso which the gentleman has offered.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Would you have any doubt of the authority of Congress in coal mines on public lands located within a State?

Mr. TAWNEY. I have no doubt about the authority of Congress to investigate coal lands belonging to the United States, but when we go out of the public domain and enter upon the jurisdiction of the States the duty to protect the lives of the citizens of the State rests upon the State, and not upon the Federal Government, and the Federal Government has no constitutional power to regulate or control the operation of mines or the domestic affairs of the people in any respect whatever.

But aside from the question of investigating, I repeat the authority in the proviso is absolutely unauthorized by law, and of course renders the proviso obnoxious to the rules of the House. I insist upon the point of order.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If the Chair will permit me, I will state that this morning I was at the Geological Survey and talked with Mr. Smith, the Director, and he told me of a report that had just been compiled and not yet printed, with reference to a mine disaster in New Mexico that had been investigated and reported upon, which is alluded to in the letter which he sent me this morning. I think you will find the law books on your desk there. Now, here is an actual, physical examination in the Indian Territory or New Mexico, under that law, and they found and reported that a coal-dust explosion has caused the disaster, and was done under existing law.

Mr. CHANEY. I want one moment on the point of order. Down to the proviso there is scarcely any question that a point of order does not lie. As to the proviso, it was an entirely innocent proposition in putting in the proviso, so that the Government might avail itself of any assistance that may be offered upon the part of any States that have already undertaken to discover the causes of these disasters, who would be perfectly willing to allow the Government to use everything they have in apparatus, buildings, or anything else. It was not the idea that there was to be anything of particular value given to the Government. It was for the purpose of obtaining that much of the experimental work which has been done by the States. Now, I care very little about the proviso.

Mr. TAWNEY. That may be the purpose of the gentleman from Indiana, but it is not the purpose of the men who originally formulated this proposition, I will say to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. CHANEY. That may be possible.

Mr. TAWNEY. The purpose that is back of the proviso is well known to those who have investigated it, and in the editorial that I called attention to yesterday, I might say, there is the very language, which indicates clearly what the real purpose is:

It would be a serious error to discontinue or to cripple the laboratory at this juncture—

That is, at the Carnegie Technical School—

The proposed Bureau of Mines, provided for by the pending legislation, will need the services of the laboratory—and it should really be enlarged for that purpose, instead of being put out of business. The laboratory has not been conducted extravagantly, and it has produced results of immense value to American industry. It has just reached a point where, in the natural course of events, its usefulness will be greatly enhanced.

That is this laboratory at the Carnegie School in Pittsburg—

Referring to the legislation that is now pending, referring to the provision which the gentleman from Indiana has offered, and which is carried on another appropriation bill.

Mr. CHANEY. But the gentleman will not undertake——

Mr. TAWNEY. But that is neither here nor there. There is no authority in law, and I hope no authority will ever be given by Congress to any executive officer of this Government to accept money from private individuals, corporations, States, or institutions for the purpose of carrying on a governmental service. If the Federal Government is compelled to make these investigations on the ground that it is more capable of performing that service than the States, then let the Federal Government control the service and appropriate all the money that is necessary. Then we will know what it costs and will have the right at all times to supervise and control the service. But I submit that when we establish the precedent of going into partnership with States, with educational institutions, with corporations, or with private individuals, we are going beyond the limit of what has ever been contemplated in organized government here or elsewhere.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want to make an inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota yield?

Mr. TAWNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want to know if there is any provision in any pending bill requiring investigations of these accidents or explosions on the public lands or in any Territory?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman that there is nothing in the bill that gives express authority for that investigation, but I agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] and other gentlemen, who, in discussing the paragraph yesterday which it is now proposed to amend, said that there would be implied authority under that paragraph for the Geological Survey to make the investigation of mines or the cause of mine disasters, and under that implied authority the Geological Survey is now making this investigation.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman [Mr. DALZELL] stated to me yesterday, as the RECORD shows, that it was implied, but not contemplated. Now, why do you not put it literally there? Surely the gentleman does not want a great Department to work upon a mere matter of implication, where thousands and thousands of lives are lost. My heavens, let us put it into black and white, to compel investigation of accidents in mines which are situated upon public lands and in the Territories. Why leave it open to implication or construction? Why not enact it literally and compel it, and if that is not sufficient, then let us enact a criminal law and bring them up before a jury and a court and punish them for their failure to act? I tell you, gentlemen, as I said a few minutes ago, human life is getting to be almost as cheap as Swift's beef.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Indiana that it is not in order to offer an amendment before the ruling is made, because if it goes out it can not be amended. If it stays in, it can then be amended.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I think the amendment is obnoxious to the point of order, but I think the original proposition is not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is clearly of the opinion that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana is obnoxious to the rule and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. CHANEY. I now offer the amendment without the proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Insert as a new paragraph after line 9, page 79:

"For continuing the work authorized by the act approved March 3, 1891, and for the protection of the lives of miners in the Territories, in the district of Alaska, and in public and Indian lands wheresoever situated, and for conducting such investigation as will increase safety and efficiency in mining, to be immediately available, $195,000."

Mr. TAWNEY. I reserve the point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Before the discussion begins, the Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota a question. Section 18 of the act of March, 1891, provides that the mining inspectors provided for in this act shall receive a salary of $2,000 per annum, and their actual traveling expenses when engaged in their duties. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota whether or not his bill appropriates the salaries for these inspectors?

Mr. TAWNEY. This bill does not, but the legislative bill does and always has.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the legislative bill carry that item?

Mr. TAWNEY. The legislative bill carries that item this year, and there is no disagreement between the two Houses on the proposition. That act was passed in 1888. It does not include Alaska, nor does it include Indian lands, as the Chair will see by reading the act, nor is it operative in Territories that have enacted laws governing this whole subject of mining. And all the remaining Territories of the Union have adopted mining laws, and therefore this act is inoperative except for the purpose of inspection, which is authorized and appropriated for in the legislative bill.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. Certainly.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill whether any provision has been made in any bill now before the House or likely to come before the House which reaches this purpose? If there is any better plan, I would be in favor of it; but if there is no plan, I think we ought to adopt this.

Mr. TAWNEY. Numerous provisions are pending in both Houses on the subject. I understand there is one reported from the Committee on Mines and Mining creating a new department of government for having jurisdiction and control over mines all over the United States regardless of whether they are within the jurisdiction of the States or of the Federal Government. What prospects there are of this bill being enacted into law at this session the gentleman is as well informed as I am. I can not give him any information.

I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana upon what basis he fixes the amount necessary to conduct these investigations? No bureau of the Government has been organized to carry them on. It will take three months before they can begin, and it will be a physical impossibility for a bureau to expend $195,000 during the coming fiscal year, or until Congress convenes next session. I submit that if he is going to insist on this amendment, we ought to pay some attention to the actual necessities for the investigation, and not appropriate three times as much money as is necessary for that purpose. I confess that I can not see how it will be possible for any bureau to spend $195,000 before Congress will meet again, when the bureau will be able to give Congress a careful estimate of what the probable cost will be during the next fiscal year. I have no doubt that if we once begin this investigation, it will continue over a series of years, and possibly we shall never see the end of it. If the gentleman has any information as to the necessity for this large sum of money, I would like to have him state it.

In view of the increase that the committee made yesterday for investigation of fuel, in view of the fact that a part of that appropriation would be available, I fail to see the necessity of this large appropriation. When we come to realize that no division is yet constituted for this purpose, when you realize that one will have to be created and organized, and that it will take time to do this, it seems to me that this appropriaion is exorbitant. If the gentleman will modify his amendment so as to carry a sufficient amount to initiate the work, so that the Department, as well as Congress, may have an opportunity of ascertaining and determining what will be necessary for the investigation for the next fiscal year——

Mr. CHANEY. I will say for the benefit of the chairman of the committee that the investigations were made in regard to the amount of money to be required, and took into account all the necessary laboratory work and the pay of the experts and all those who would be required to go into investigation on the subject.

Mr. TAWNEY. But they will have to first get the men.

Mr. CHANEY. The gentleman makes a correct point when he says that it is possible, if we fail to get the bureau organized right away, there will be more money carried in the appropriation than is necessary before the next session of Congress. I have no desire to have a greater sum of money than is necessary.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does not the gentleman think that $50,000 would be ample, and more than ample, to pay the expense of organizing for this work and carrying it on until Congress meets again?

Mr. CHANEY. Yes; for mere organization.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will reduce the amount to $50,000, I will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. CHANEY. Mr. Chairman, I will accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the amendment will be modified in accordance with the statement of the gentleman from Indiana, who offered it.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. What is the proposition, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the modified amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing the work authorized by the act approved March 3, 1891, and for the protection of the lives of miners in the Territories, in the District of Alaska, and in the public and Indian lands wheresoever situated, and for conducting such investigations as will increase safety and efficiency in mining, to be immediately available, $50,000.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia and Mr. FITZGERALD reserved points of order.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I shall oppose that, and shall do it for this reason: I understand that there is pending on another appropriation bill, having been placed there as an amendment in the Senate, substantially the proposition offered by the gentleman from Indiana. In other words, there will come before this House in a short time a proposition to make a proper expenditure of an appropriation for the investigation of explosions in mines. I myself asked the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to permit such a provision to go on in the House, and did think that in a matter of this sort the committee might have had regard, in view of the different rules of the two bodies, to the desire of Members of the House on that subject. The amount now proposed is too small to carry on the investigation. There can be no doubt, Mr. Chairman, of the necessity of such an investigation, and there can be no doubt that it is quite as proper to be undertaken by the Federal Government as any other of the investigations which the Federal Government is now conducting.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. On what does the gentleman base his statement that $50,000 would be inadequate to inaugurate this service and carry it on until Congress convenes, when we will all know how much will be required?

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. I base the statement upon this, Mr. Chairman: In the first place, the amount contained in the amendment first offered, not the last one, by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHANEY] is about the amount which is estimated by the Government experts as necessary, and in the next place, I know something about the coal-mining business, and I know something about these explosions. It ought to be said to this House that the explosions in coal mines are a development of modern mining and an unfortunate and unexpected incident of what were deemed improvements in the methods of mining. In other words, years ago the miner used to work in bad air. Mining laws were passed which aimed to give him a safer place to work, in better air, a more healthful condition in which to work; but it so happened that as those improvements were made in mining we found that somehow or other they contributed toward the probability of explosions; and the frightful explosions which have occurred in the last two or three years in this country have been, remarkable as the statement may seem, in seams of coal which were opened years ago and had no explosions, proving therefore that they were not gaseous in their nature, and they have occurred in the mines which were best equipped and best conducted.

There is, I believe, no doubt anywhere that one of the best equipped mines in the United States, in the world, in fact, was the Monongha mine in the second district of West Virginia. In other words, to make it brief, this is the fact, recognized and known by everybody acquainted with coal mining, that the causes of these explosions are mysterious; that they have developed not through neglect, but as an incident to what was supposed to be an improvement in mining methods. There is no investigation conducted by the Government of a more primary nature, and there is none which would have a more general beneficial effect in its character that the one proposed now to be conducted. I am opposed to a small appropriation. Therefore I want the Members of this House who favor appropriating money for the purpose of investigating explosions in mines to support the Senate amendment when it comes to this House on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and in that way accomplish all that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHANEY] hopes to accomplish—not a mere part of it, as would be the result, it seems to me, of accepting the last amendment proposed.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman believe that if the National Government undertakes the work of developing the reasons or causes of explosions in mines that the different States will continue with the same activity seeking for the same information?

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I answer that by saying this, that if the Government of the United States shall make this appropriation, the State of West Virginia will not only continue her efforts to have safe mining laws, but will be inspired and aided by the Government efforts to still more active investigations in the same direction. And even if I were compelled to answer that the State of West Virginia would not continue to investigate, yet it would leave the gentleman from Illinois no comfort in this discussion, for why should the State of West Virginia investigate for the State of Pennsylvania? Why should the State of Pennsylvania investigate for Illinois? Why should Illinois investigate for the Government lands and for the other States? This is a matter that is general in its nature and concerns the whole country, concerns the development of the natural resources of the country, and concerns the lives and safety of very many people. It is general and governmental in its nature, in my opinion.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Chair supposed that there was a discussion of a point of order in progress.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserved the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thought it was made.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I made the point of order and withdrew it on the condition that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana would be accepted, appropriating $50,000 instead of $195,000. I do not think there is any use of our becoming hysterical about this proposition at all. If we enter upon this investigation, the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GAINES] knows very well that the investigation will not be completed in the next six months. He knows very well that there is not a man to-day, either in or out of the Government service, who can make any approximate estimate of what the cost of this investigation will be.

Now, if we go at it in a reasonable, practical, sensible way, and provide a sufficient amount of money to enable the Bureau to effect its organization, initiate the work, and carry it on until Congress convenes next December, those carrying on the investigations will be able to make a reasonable estimate of what the cost and expenses of the investigation will be for the next fiscal year.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that the Government is now making this investigation?

Mr. TAWNEY. The Geological Survey is engaged in making or has instituted this investigation, but the extent to which they have gone I do not know.

Mr. MANN. The investigation will undertake to determine the cause of explosions in mines.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. They are not making and can not make them, if the gentleman will permit, without an appropriation. To make these investigations require expensive and delicate apparatus.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit me, one of the best young geologists in this country anywhere who can be found has been engaged in this work, and the Geological Survey for a considerable length of time has been conducting an investigation of the causes of explosions in mines.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Under what law?

Mr. MANN. I do not know; I know the fact; I do not know the law.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. I only wish to make the statement——

Mr. MANN. I know the individual.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. If it is a continuation of existing work, perhaps the Chair will desire to change his ruling with reference to the question of the point of order to the amendment first offered by the gentleman from Indiana and we can come to a vote on the main proposition.

Mr. MANN. That will not affect the point of order at all, as the gentleman from West Virginia well knows. The point I want to ascertain from the gentleman from West Virginia is, he says the State of West Virginia will continue to make these investigations. Is he proposing, then, to have the General Government conduct one investigation, the State of West Virginia conduct another investigation, the State of Pennsylvania another investigation, the State of Illinois another investigation, and each State conduct an investigation along precisely the same lines?

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. I can answer that it is not proposed to have them do the same work, but the State of West Virginia would not, because the General Government was making a general investigation, cease to make special investigation as to particular conditions there existing, nor would the State of West Virginia ever undertake to make any more of an investigation than that which concerned the State of West Virginia, so there is general work to be done by the General Government, and special work to be done which the State of West Virginia, at least, will not neglect.

Mr. MANN. The State of West Virginia can not make an investigation of the causes of explosions in coal mines without that investigation being of value to everybody engaged in the mining business.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Of course.

Mr. MANN. The general proposition, in fact, will be this: The General Government shall appropriate this, and every State will instantly cease its investigation to any extent, because they will say, as they have on every other thing where the General Government undertakes an investigation, "Oh, the General Government is doing that; let them carry on the investigation;" and instead of having two investigations being carried, we will have only one.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Now, if the gentleman will permit me——

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I want to ask the gentleman if he does not believe it to be the duty of the General Government to protect the lives and health of the people of this country?

Mr. MANN. I do not believe it is the duty of the General Government to protect the lives of people in Indiana, however, as much as it is the duty of the State of Indiana. Since when does the gentleman desire the General Government to walk into the homes of the people of Indiana? For goodness sake, what is the State of Indiana in existence for?

Mr. HOLLIDAY. If the people of the United States can do it better than the people of Indiana, then the people of the United States ought to do it.

Mr. MANN. Well, I think the people of the United States can do a good many things better than the people of Indiana do them——

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Then the people of the United States ought to do it.

Mr. MANN. And better than the government of Indiana itself does them, but I am not in favor of wiping out the government of Indiana on that account, because I have hopes that it will be improved when the present Chairman of the committee gets in the governor's mansion. [Applause.]

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Now, will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I take the floor for the purpose of asking the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GAINES] the practical question. At the beginning of this session of Congress it was his deliberate judgment that $25,000 would be sufficient to conduct this investigation—at least to begin it—and he was asking the Committee on Appropriations for a recommendation for an appropriation of $25,000 for that purpose. Now, I submit, Mr. Chairman, that if we appropriate $50,000 now it will be ample to begin the work or to continue the work if it has already been begun under existing appropriations made for the Geological Survey. But I think, and this is my only reason for making this suggestion, as I said the other day, when we begin a new service it is incumbent upon Congress to begin with the smallest possible amount and make the service as efficient as is necessary for the purpose to be accomplished.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. TAWNEY. Just a minute.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Your statement of facts I want to correct.

Mr. TAWNEY. You can state it.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. I am sure I had in mind at the time I approached the chairman of the committee the sum of $180,000. I asked him whether there was any chance whatever that he would not make the point of order upon an appropriation. He smiled in a way that was a sufficient answer, with that genial smile with which he always lets us see that these things are hopeless, and I did not discuss it in detail. I do not know what amount I mentioned to him, but I never got the chance to talk seriously with the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] on this subject, but any persiflage, or what not, that left upon his mind $25,000 was certainly no impression I intended to create. I never had such an amount in mind in my life.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is not material, Mr. Chairman, whether the gentleman was in earnest or in fun when he suggested the appropriation of $25,000 on the urgent deficiency appropriation bill. The practical question now is whether he is willing to accept a reasonable appropriation for the purpose of inaugurating this service and leaving to the future—the next six months, we will say—to develop the extent of this investigation and the probable cost in order to carry it on for another fiscal year.

They will have to come back here year after year with their estimates for this service if we once inaugurate it. I do not think we are justified in appropriating for the next fiscal year more than it will be physically possible for them to spend, and thereby laying the foundation for future estimates for this particular service.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield? I personally know, because I am just from the office; that the Government is now making the investigations; that right now lying on the desk of Mr. Smith, the Director, is a report on an explosion out in New Mexico which killed eleven miners, and they have found it was a coal dust explosion. They have reported that. As to how much money it has taken to do that I do not know, or how much was needed I do not know, but as a matter of fact the Government is now making that kind of investigation, and there is not any law, so far as I know or can find, that directs an investigation. I do not know of any law that literally gives the Department that power.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman or the committee will accept the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHANEY] reducing the appropriation proposed from $195,000 to $50,000, there will be a law for the investigation if the committee agrees to the amendment.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I would like to make a parliamentary inquiry. Can the committee vote upon the last amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHANEY] pending the question of the point of order? If not, why does not the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] withdraw the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the parliamentary status to be this: The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHANEY] offered an amendment, and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] stated that if the sum provided for in that amendment were reduced he would withdraw the point of order. Therefore the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHANEY] offered to make the reduction or the change in the amendment, which can not be done without unanimous consent. Unanimous consent thereto having been refused by various Members objecting, the original amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana is now pending, and upon that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] reserved a point of order. That is the status. Debate will proceed, therefore, until somebody asks to have it closed, and asks to have a decision made on the point of order.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I rise to ask the chairman of the committee a question or two.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to be heard on the point of order, if nobody else does.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I want to ask the chairman of the committee a question or two.

Mr. SHERLEY. I have no objection to that.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Early in the session, Mr. Chairman, I introduced a bill providing for this investigation. While I have not a single miner in the district which I have the honor to represent, yet, impelled by the reports of these great disasters in West Virginia and other States, I took it upon myself to introduce that bill. It was referred to the Committee on Labor; first to a subcommittee and reported favorably; then to the whole committee, and reported favorably.

Mr. TAWNEY. What is the gentleman's question?

Mr. BARTHOLDT (continuing). And that bill has been upon the Calendar of the House since that time. I have been informed that in the legislative bill there is carried an item which provides for exactly that kind of investigation and work by the creation of that bureau of mines; and as a result of that action, Mr. Chairman, I did not press the joint resolution which I had introduced. Now, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee whether this item carried in the legislative appropriation bill will cover this investigation?

Mr. TAWNEY. The provision in the legislative bill, I will say for the information of the gentleman from Missouri, does not authorize the creation of the bureau of mines specifically. It authorizes almost everything that this amendment authorizes but the proviso, which authorizes a copartnership between the Federal Government and any individual or corporation or a State or institution that may institute in a State any of these investigations. It did not specifically provide for a bureau of mines and mining.

I will say further, and I will say this to the committee, that the legislative bill is not the bill to carry an appropriation for this service. The legislative bill provides for the servce of the executive, legislative, and judicial departments of the Government here at the seat of government. The sundry civil bill, to which this amendment has been offered, is the bill upon which provisions of this kind should be carried; and if this amendment of the gentleman from Indiana goes in, it authorizes the inauguration of this investigation. The only question is whether we should appropriate more money, an amount of money which every man here knows can not be expended during the next fiscal year, or whether we will appropriate enough to enable them to organize this service, institute an investigation, carry it on until Congress meets next December, when we will all know a great deal more about the necessities of the service than we do now. That is a proposition which is, I think, entirely reasonable, and for one, I contend that we are not justified at this time in appropriating more money than is absolutely necessary.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. What I want to know is this: Whether if this amendment in the legislative bill becomes law, is enacted, it will not obviate the necessity of any further action at this time on this same subject. That is what I want to know.

Mr. TAWNEY. That proposition carried in the legislative bill is the identical proposition carried here, except that it is a little broader with reference to Indian lands and lands under the control of the Government of the United States. The proposition here is one which authorizes a copartnership between the Government and State institutions for the purpose of carrying on Government service. That is the only difference. If the committee does not see fit to accept the proposition I offered, I will have to insist upon the point of order.

Mr. BONYNGE. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if the amendment made to the legislative, executive, and judicial bill is adopted, is it not confined to work in Alaska and the Territories?

Mr. TAWNEY. Oh, no. It was amended in the Senate so as to cover the whole territory, and that is what this bill does. It is the identical same language.

Mr. STANLEY. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is not in order. The Chair understands the gentleman from Minnesota insists upon a decision.

Mr. TAWNEY. That was the condition, Mr. Chairman, upon which I said I would withdraw the point of order if the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana was accepted.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. I object.

Mr. SHERLEY. I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky demands the regular order, which is a decision by the Chair.

Mr. STANLEY. I hope my colleague will not insist upon a demand for the regular order. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Minnesota to the matter of appropriations by the Federal Government.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman from Kentucky, my colleague on the committee, withhold his demand for the regular order until the Chair can again submit the request for unanimous consent?

Mr. STANLEY. If my colleague insists upon the demand for the regular order, I have nothing further to say.

Mr. SHERLEY. I have no desire to stop anybody, but we have been discussing this matter in an academic way for an hour.

Mr. STANLEY. If my colleague insists, I have nothing further to say.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am going to insist on having a ruling on the point of order. There has been ample opportunity for discussion. I do not want to take any more time of the committee than necessary.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman from Kentucky yield to the Chair to submit the request for unanimous consent?

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. If that is agreed to, the proposition will be on the amendment.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. I shall renew my objection.

Mr. TAWNEY. Very well; I insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota insists upon the point of order. The Chair is ready to rule.

The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana is subject to the point of order. The act of March 3, 1891, is a specific act, and provides for a specific purpose. It provides certain definite, fixed machinery to carry that purpose into execution. It also provides for appropriations for that machinery, by providing for nine inspectors and other officials to carry into execution the purpose set forth in that act.

The Chair is informed that appropriations for that purpose are made in other appropriation bills passed through this House. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana provides for continuing the work authorized by the act approved March 3, 1891, and for the protection of the lives of miners in Territories, and for conducting such investigations, and so forth, going outside of the provisions of the original act, and asking to have provision made for other things which were not set forth in the original act or provided for by the original act. Therefore the Chair thinks that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana is not authorized by law, and is subject to the point of order, and the Chair sustains the point made by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment offered by my colleague be amended to make the amount $50,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment having been declared out of order, the gentleman may offer another amendment if he sees fit to do so. The gentleman offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 9, page 79, insert as a new paragraph:

"For continuing the work authorized by the act approved March 3, 1891, and for the protection of the lives of miners in the Territories, the District of Alaska, and in public and Indian lands wheresoever situated, and for conducting such investigations as will increase safety and efficiency in mining, to be immediately available, $50,000."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to speak to the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I thought this was a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I ask unanimous consent for the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. If that consent is given, well and good; if not, we shall make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman ask unanimous consent for the adoption of the amendment?

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. That is all that is proposed.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. To obviate the question raised on the point of order, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the point of order be waived, and that the amendment proposed by his colleague be adopted. Is there objection?

Mr. HACKNEY. Reserving the right to object, I want to state here that I do not believe $50,000 is at all adequate. I do not believe we ought to start in by piecemeal. I think we ought to face this matter fairly and squarely and stand for the appropriation of $195,000 as originally intended.

Mr. PAYNE. Does not the gentleman see that the point of order will destroy the whole thing?

Mr. HACKNEY. With a view that this will open up the matter and bring to the eyes of the House what we ought to do, I shall not object, although the amount is inadequate.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the last paragraph.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. This is a request for unanimous consent, and I insist that it be put.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I object to the request.

Mr. NICHOLLS. I object.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made by two gentlemen, and the gentleman from Alabama moves to strike out the last word. The gentleman is recognized.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I make the point of order that there is no last word. The amendment has gone out, and we have already passed the last paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken. The Clerk will read the next paragraph of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuation of the topographical surveys of the public lands that have been or may hereafter be designated as forest reserves, $75,000, to be immediately available.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I now move to strike out the last word. I wish to state that the reason why I objected to the unanimous-consent proposition that the gentlemen of the Appropriations Committee tried to force through this House without an opportunity for the House to vote on it was this: I do not think there is any more important question——

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I make the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking to his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman is in order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not care to try to dodge the proposition. If the gentleman from Indiana wishes to insist on his point of order and prevent me from stating why I made the objection I will sit down, and at some future time I will tell the House why I think it was necessary to insist on my objection. I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana if he desires to continue his objection to my making an explanation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Alabama may proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Alabama may continue for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Before the gentleman from Alabama proceeds, I would like to ask the parliamentary status of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama moves to strike out the last word and has the consent of the committee to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, my object in objecting to the unanimous consideration and passage at the same time of the resolution offered by the gentleman from Indiana was this: I consider this proposition to investigate the mines in this country one of the most important propositions now pending before Congress. It involves human life; it is a proposition that the sovereign States can not thoroughly investigate. What may occur in a mine in Pennsylvania may be of great value in the future in Alabama, or what may occur now in Wyoming may prevent great disasters in Wisconsin; but if the State of Wyoming makes its investigations solely and alone, the other States may not receive the full benefit of the investigation, nor would it get the value of other original investigations in other States, and therefore I think it proper for Congress to enter upon this investigation and thoroughly investigate the question, and I am satisfied that $50,000 will not begin this investigation, and it would be a mere subterfuge to accept that amount.

The gentleman from Minnesota stated a few minutes ago that $50,000 would be sufficient to organize the bureau until next winter; but the gentleman from Minnesota knows better than any other Member of this House that this appropriation bill and the items going into it are available for the next fiscal year, and if it is agreed to we will get no more for a year. This bill carries appropriations for the fiscal year 1908 and 1909; and if you only appropriate $50,000, you would have to wait until next year before you could get any more unless it was brought in in a deficiency bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman from Alabama does not mean exactly what he says. He knows better, if he will stop to think, because he was once a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and he knows that the sundry civil appropriation bill carries appropriations that are immediately available. The appropriations in the sundry civil bill are not subject to the same rule that pertains to other appropriation bills.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I did not say that it was not immediately available.

Mr. TAWNEY. If carried in the appropriation bill, it would be available not later than the 4th of March, or, if necessary, it could be provided for in a deficiency appropriation bill. My only reason for asking the committee to delay further appropriations beyond the $50,000 is because nobody knows to-day what is necessary, and $50,000 will supply them until they can submit a detailed estimate, and then we will have full information. If that is not a practical and sensible way of proceeding, I do not know one.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I know that the appropriations in the sundry civil bill are immediately available, but if we make an appropriation now, we get no more money until another bill comes in, and it would not be until the spring of 1909. Here is my objection to it. To-day this proposition is pending on the legislative appropriation bill. The Senate has adopted an amendment carrying out this idea in full, appropriating $190,000 for the equipment of this Bureau and carrying out this proposition. And I am not willing to compromise here. I want a square and fair vote on the Senate proposition.

Mr. TAWNEY. The legislative bill carries $190,000 for a complete investigation. It is not proposed here to appropriate all that is necessary for a complete investigation, because we know that the investigation can not be completed within the next year.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The legislative bill, as I understand, carries this appropriation for the purpose of this investigation. Now, that will enable these men to organize for the full scope of the investigation. If you only give them $50,000 now and tell them to go out and organize, they can not organize a bureau because they will not know along what lines to develop their organization or how far they can go on with it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more. I would like to ask him a question.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to object to the further continuation of the debate on this subject. If we are not going to accept the proposition, there is no use in debating it any further. The gentleman from Alabama has explained why he objected, and that is all he asked for. We have not read a line of this bill to-day.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I desire to speak to the pro forma amendment of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD.]

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that the gentleman from Alabama has made no amendment. He had the unanimous consent of the committee to speak for five minutes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I take this opportunity because I desire to call the attention of the House to a matter which has recently come to my knowledge, and which relates to this paragraph in question. It involves the preservation of the American forests. This House ought to know that for many years there has been in the Department of the Interior a gross misinterpretation of an act of this Congress, under which many million dollars' worth of public timber has been practically thrown away. The act known as the "timber and stone act" of 1878 provided that land in certain States, unfit for agricultural purposes and valuable chiefly for its timber, should be sold under certain restrictions at a minimum price of $2.50 per acre. The use of the word "minimum" obviously meant that higher prices should be charged for the more valuable land. This has, however, never been done. A recent effort on the part of a few members of this House to devise a bill whereby a higher price might be obtained for timber of greater value——

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I regret to say that the gentleman is not talking to the paragraph that has been read. I make the point of order on that ground. We will have to get on with this bill.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I think I am in order in talking on this paragraph, which relates to the forest reserves of the United States. I believe I have the right to explain to the House how our great forest lands have been despoiled.

Mr. TAWNEY. The paragraph relates to topographic surveys.

The CHAIRMAN. The subject of the paragraph is topographic surveys.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And these topographic surveys relate to the public domains, to the forest reserves, and I am endeavoring to say at this time to this House that nearly 8,000,000 acres of those valuable public forests during the last seven years, under this Administration, have been sold at $2.50 an acre. That price yielded the Government less than $18,000,000, whereas the Department of the Interior admits now, in writing, that the real value of the lands was over $80,000,000. It seems to me that this House ought to know, whether the subject be exactly germane to this particular paragraph or not, that after it had passed an act providing that these forest lands should be sold at not less than $2.50 an acre the Department has disregarded the limitation and proceeded to sell all forest lands, however valuable they were, at $2.50 an acre, and in no case has a higher price been demanded. Mr. Chairman, I am not talking here without information. I have before me the law passed in 1878, providing a minimum price. I have the admission of one of the legal advisers of the Department of the Interior that the Department has just discovered that there is the word "minimum" in the law, and that hereafter it proposes to change its policy and require of purchasers under the timber and stone act a higher price than $2.50 an acre when the value is greater. It seems to me, however, that the fact ought to be made known to this House and to the country that during the last seven years of this Administration nearly 8,000,000 acres of timber lands have been sold by misconstruing the law at something like $18,000,000, while the Department in all its branches has admitted, and admitted in writing, that the actual value of that land was at least $77,000,000, which represents a loss of at least $60,000,000.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Does the gentleman mean the lands were sold or the timber on the lands?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I mean that under the timber and stone act a purchaser got a patent to 160 acres of land for $2.50 an acre, whereas in many cases the 160 acres he got at that nominal price actually contained $10,000 worth of timber. This is well known in the Department, and yet year after year the Secretary of the Interior under this Administration has been selling these timber lands of great value on the Pacific coast, containing great forests of timber, for a mere pittance, and allowing them to pass into the hands of the lumber trust, which has been selling its lumber to the people of the United States at an advance of 70 per cent in the last ten years. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that it is a scandal that our valuable timber lands in the Pacific coast States have been sold at this lowest price, when Congress intended to provide that they should be sold somewhere near their actual value. This the Department now admits.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I think it is somewhat doubtful as to whether the word "minimum" as used in the timber and stone act is subject to the interpretation which the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] informs us the Department is now inclined to place upon it. It is my opinion that Congress intended just what the Department has held all these years; it intended that these lands should be sold for $2.50 per acre. If the Department now attempts to place a new interpretation on the language and charge more than $2.50 per acre, all of the best lands will be homesteaded and the poor lands remain unsold. But, Mr. Chairman, whether that be true or not, what the gentleman has said on the authority of Department officials as to the value of lands sold under this law illustrates the reckless extravagance of statement which has been indulged in in regard to the sale of lands under this law.

It is barely possible that somewhere, some time, there may have been a tract of land sold that at some later time—ten, twenty, or thirty years after, may have been worth $10,000. It is barely possible that that is true. That any land that was ever sold under the timber and stone act was worth any such price as that when sold is certainly not true. Had that been the case, it would have been sold immediately upon the passage of this act, and not long thereafter. Now, the fact is, Mr. Chairman, that 90 per cent at least of the lands that have been sold under the timber and stone act were worth at the time they were sold but little more than $2.50 an acre. I have personal knowledge of the fact that many tracts of land have been sold and are now being sold at $2.50 an acre under the timber and stone act that are not really worth $2.50 an acre. The homesteader with a farm in a valley with a little rough land lying adjacent to him containing small shrub timber buys it for a wood lot and an additional pasture, and he pays more, in the intermountain States at least, for such lands than he could sell them for in the majority of cases after he purchased them—certainly more than they are worth except as an adjunct to the farm.

Now, we unquestionably did sell some valuable lands on the Pacific coast for $2.50 an acre. I think that is true. Ordinarily, however, when sold they were far distant from market, and only the construction of expensive lines of railway made them valuable.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MONDELL. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think there have been many miles of railroad lines constructed to these lands, but does the gentleman claim that these railroad lines have been constructed for the "poor little settler" whom he has pictured here as acquiring these valuable lands for a song? Have not these lines been constructed to accommodate great lumber companies which have in seven years acquired most of these 8,000,000 acres represented in these 50,000 timber claims? Is not that the fact? Is it not a fact that these 50,000 timber claims have passed very largely into the hands of great lumber companies which have been exploiting the public domain?

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, I think that land sold under the timber and stone act and lands that have been acquired under other acts have undoubtedly, in many instances, been gathered in considerable holdings, but I think any gentleman who knows anything about the lumber industry understands that it is absolutely essential to the carrying on of the industry to have a considerable holding; that you can not set up a sawmill for the sawing of timber on every 80-acre tract in the country, or every 160-acre tract.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. Now, I did not rise for the purpose of claiming that we did not sell some lands under the timber and stone act for much less than they were worth when——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman dispute that the Department of the Interior is in a position to judge the value of these lands?

Mr. MONDELL. I will say to the gentleman that, while there are no doubt men in the Department of the Interior that are in a position to judge of the value of some of the lands sold under this act, it is also true that some officials of that Department have uttered the most exaggerated statements in regard to this, as they have in regard to many other public-land matters, and that men who are competent to judge know that many statements made are very greatly exaggerated, and it was for the purpose of calling attention to that exaggeration, which I believe does no good, that I rose. Now, we did sell, it is true, and have sold in the past, some very good timber land for $2.50 an acre. These lands, some of them, became very valuable later. I think in the main the lands when sold were not worth a great deal above the Government price. In many instances they were entered by men who immediately sold to parties who desired to use them for lumber purposes. I am not defending the operations of the law in all cases, but I think if gentlemen of the House, from hearing the statement of the gentleman, have the opinion that in the main these lands which have been sold are very valuable, it is an altogether erroneous opinion. So far as the present condition is concerned, practically all of the valuable timber lands are in forest reserves, or if they are not in forest reserves they ought to be. There are millions of acres of land that do not contain any timber worth mentioning in forest reserves. There are millions of acres of other lands containing but very little timber in forest reserves, and surely those lands that do contain valuable timber ought to be in the reserves and, in my opinion, they are at this time in reserves.

So that whatever may be said as to the workings of the timber and stone act in the past, it is at this time an act which enables the settler, and it is taken advantage of in nine cases out of ten by the settler, to acquire a tract of rough, broken land lying adjacent to his farm, which, in the majority of cases, is not actually worth $2.50 an acre on the market.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Against the gentleman's statement is the official statement of the Assistant Secretary of the Interior, who admits that the value of these 50,000 claims which have been taken up during the present Administration, within seven years, equals $77,000,000, for which the Government only received $17,000,000. Now, it seems to me the gentleman ought not to dispute the fact that the Department is in a position to have accurate knowledge of the value of the land. The gentleman from Wyoming must have a knowledge of all the enormous lumber shipments that have come from that region of the United States. He must know of those that are now coming from that region of the United States. How, then, can he claim that there are no timber lands there except those preserved in the Government reserves? The fact is that lumber claims have been taken up in enormous quantities lately and have passed into the hands of lumber companies.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I object to the gentleman making a speech in my time. He is taking all my time. I have not said that there was not any timber land in private ownership. There are very large areas of timber land in private ownership, acquired under all sorts and kinds of laws, but the amount of such land taken under the timber and stone act is infinitesimal compared with the amount acquired by railway land grants, as school lands, under the forest-reserve lieu-land law, by soldiers' additional entries under the homestead law, and other forms of entry.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. The timber and stone act now applies almost exclusively to sparsely timbered lands. Surely, whatever may be the present view of the Department, I hope and trust that as to the few acres of broken, rocky, scrub timber land remaining outside of forest reserves the Department does not propose at this late day to raise the price. If they do, it means simply perpetual Federal ownership of every piece of scrub timber and every rocky hillside throughout the entire public domain, the perpetual retention of those lands in public ownership, paying and contributing nothing to the support of the communities in which they lie and necessarily constantly open to depredation by all comers.

The proper procedure is to continue to sell these lands at the price named in the law, and in the main they have been sold at what was a fair and reasonable price, although it is true that in some instances quite valuable and very valuable lands have been obtained under this law. But that has been the exception and not the rule, and I have no hesitancy in saying, with some knowledge of the situation, that he knows that the land entered during the period referred to, under the timber and stone law, had no such value or anything like any such value as suggested from the official source to which the gentleman has referred at the time the entries were made.

Mr. GRONNA. Is it not true that the Department will have the right to put these timbered lands that the gentleman has spoken of in the forest reserves?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Even though the law were subject to the interpretation which the gentleman from Nebraska understands the Interior Department now proposes to place upon it, it would not have been wise, even when there were lands of considerable value subject to entry under it, to have materially raised the price, because that would have simply resulted in the lands being taken under the homestead law, the lieu-land law, or some form of scrip.

If the price were now to be raised, the really valuable timber lands, if such there be, would be homesteaded rather than purchased, so that the Government would be making a spectacle of itself by giving away lands under the homestead law for nothing, or under the commutation clause of the homestead law at $1.25 an acre, which were not adapted to cultivation, but which were intended to be sold at $2.50 an acre.

Certainly, the gentlemen of the Department do not imagine that with the present homestead law on the statute books they could get any considerable price for the remaining timber lands on the public domain if there were any of any considerable value.

Committees of Congress have discussed this matter many times and declined to favor changes in the law. The use of the word "minimum" has also been noted, but no one, so far as I know, has ever suggested that the law intended anything different from what it says, to wit, timber and stone lands shall be sold at the minimum price of $2.50 per acre; in other words, at $2.50 an acre.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Clerk wil read.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, before the Clerk proceeds to read I should like to ask unanimous consent to return to the section in relation to the investigation of mining disasters.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I understand the objection to the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHANEY] making an appropriation of $50,000 has been withdrawn and, adopting the language of that amendment, I should like to reoffer it, and I ask unanimous consent for that purpose.

Mr. HACKNEY. I think the gentleman is mistaken as to the objection being withdrawn. Until the other gentlemen who are interested in that matter are here I shall have to object. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] if certain other gentlemen come in, I will try to confer with them. At this time I will have to object myself.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I submit to the gentleman that the objector has withdrawn his objection.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asked unanimous consent to return to this paragraph. The Chair put the question, and no objection was heard. The question now is upon the amendment which the gentleman from Missouri offered, and which the Clerk will report.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHANEY]. I adopt that language, and ask that it be reported.

Mr. HACKNEY. I make the point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri makes the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. HACKNEY. I will state to the gentleman that if he will wait until the other parties interested in this matter are upon the floor, we might be able to make an agreement.

Mr. TAWNEY. Unanimous consent having been given to return to the paragraph to offer the amendment, I suggest that we read, and we will recur to the paragraph hereafter.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless objection is heard, the amendment will be considered as pending, subject to the point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. With the point of order reserved.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, for the United States Geological Survey, $1,085,520.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, changing the total, to conform with the amendments which have been adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend page 79, line 15, by striking out "eighty-five" and inserting "three hundred and thirty-five."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Bringing home the remains of officers and soldiers who die abroad: To enable the Secretary of War, in his discretion, to cause to be transported to their homes the remains of officers and soldiers who die at military camps or who are killed in action, or who die in the field or hospital in Alaska, and at places outside of the limits of the United States, or who die while on voyage at sea, $25,000.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman whether this is in pursuance of law or not?

Mr. TAWNEY. That is, the paragraph in regard to bringing home the remains of officers and soldiers? No; there is no statute under which it is authorized.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I reserve the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. TAWNEY. It has been the practice for a great many years.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I want to ask a question about it. What does it mean by saying, "To enable the Secretary of War, in his discretion." Is it entirely discretionary with the Secretary of War whether or not he will provide for bringing home the remains of officers and soldiers?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes. That was put in for the purpose of enabling the Secretary of War to decline where the officers or persons have sufficient means or left sufficient means to convey his remains from the place of death to his home.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Does not the War Department, for instance, bring home, or cause to be brought home, the remains of any enlisted man who dies abroad in the Government service? Is there any exception to the rule?

Mr. TAWNEY. We have also appropriated for bringing home civilian employees from the Philippine Islands and also those in the military service.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Is that also discretionary—in the discretion of somebody?

Mr. TAWNEY. It seems to be.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Why should it be in the discretion of anybody—the Secretary of War, or anybody else—to say whether or not he will have the remains of a soldier who died in the Philippines or in Alaska or anywhere else outside of the United States brought home?

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I would say to the gentleman that there are instances where the Government is under no moral obligation to bring his remains home. The man may have met with death dishonorably, or under such circumstances as would not entitle him to the same consideration as other soldiers should receive. Some discretion has to be left with the Secretary of War—a discretion which I know, on examination, is not often exercised.

Mr. TAWNEY. The man may be excluded from that benefit of the provision in consequence of his having committed crime, and his friends may not, perhaps, want his remains brought home. Of course the Secretary would have power to exercise discretion.

Mr. DRISCOLL. It seems to me a queer discretion to place in the hands of anybody. But I want to ask a further question. Has the Secretary any discretion by this paragraph to pay the expenses of burying?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not think he has; I do not think the money has been expended in burial, except where the burial takes place in a national cemetery.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I think the gentleman is mistaken about that, because I had one of my constituents die in the line of service in the Philippine Islands, and he was brought home from the Philippine Islands and buried at his father's residence, some 5 or 6 miles south of Nashville, near my old home.

Mr. TAWNEY. The question is not as to the expenses of bringing his remains home, but as to paying the expenses of the actual burial.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, of course, I can not testify about that; but they brought him home, and they paid all the expenses.

Mr. TAWNEY. There is one class of people whose burial expenses are borne by the Government, and that is the surviving soldiers of the civil war or the Navy who die in the city or District.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I have been interested in a case where a man died in the Spanish war, and his remains were brought home and buried, and his father has never been remunerated by the Government. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, then, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask, is it the idea of the gentleman from New York that when a soldier dies, say, in the Philippine Islands that it shall not be left to the discretion of the Secretary of War as to whether he will allow his remains to be brought back at the expense of the Government, or if it should be made compulsory?

Mr. DRISCOLL. Well, it seems to me that in every instance in the case of an enlisted man that his remains should be sent home for burial.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, of course, it ought; because he goes off under the country's flag, and the presumption is that he shall come back under the flag; and if he dies in line of duty or dies of disease or wounds, he should be brought back under that flag.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I can hardly imagine an instance where the Secretary of War should exercise a discretion against bringing home the remains of a soldier who died abroad.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. It is hard enough now, I am told, to get volunteers to go into the Army, because they have got to go to the Philippine Islands, and if you get it into their heads that if they die of disease or by wounds there, that their remains will not be brought back, you will have very great difficulty in getting any to enlist.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I would like to say to the gentleman, if he will yield, that no such condition ever arises. This discretion is lodged in the Secretary of War, so that he will not be compelled to bring home the bodies of persons who die of contagious diseases, which might infect a whole shipload, or, in other cases, as, for example, where a man might be shot for desertion in the islands, or suppose he should die while in prison, serving out a sentence for being a thief, or cases of that kind. Where a man has an honorable record and dies in the service, there are no instances where the Government has refused to bring men home.

Mr. ADAIR. Does the gentleman believe that the soldier himself really cares as much about it as his relatives and friends do back in this country? And does not the gentleman believe that it does not make any difference with what disease he dies or how he loses his life, that he should be brought back to this country for the satisfaction it will give to his friends and relatives?

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I think I may say it is always done where it is practicable to do it. The Department have construed this law very generously. There are a few isolated cases in which it would be impracticable to bring them back, and some discretion must necessarily be lodged in the Secretary, but this discretion has never been abused in the past.

Mr. ADAIR. I doubt if the fear of not being brought back would result in keeping anybody out of the service.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Was this drawn in this way in order to give the Secretary of War discretion to refuse to bring back the remains of soldiers who died of contagious disease, or for some such reason as that?

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I do not know what induced the drawing of this paragraph in this way.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Is it not an unusual provision?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; it has been carried for a great many years.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If gentlemen on the other side have used all of my time that they desire, I will use the remainder of it myself. Even when a soldier dies of some contagious disease, it is pretty hard on his people at home to leave his remains in that wilderness.

Mr. TAWNEY. There is nobody who knows of any instance of that kind. The gentleman from Indiana only stated that as a possible case where the discretion in the Secretary might be exercised.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is this the usual language—"in his discretion?"

Mr. TAWNEY. It has always been.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. BOUTELL having taken the chair, a message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives, by Mr. LATTA, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

On May 2, 1908:

H. R. 16515. An act authorizing the purchase of a steel ferryboat for use between Angel Island and San Francisco, Cal., and a steel cutter for use of immigration officials at San Francisco, Cal.

On May 4, 1908:

H. J. Res. 155. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain tents for use at the national convention of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks to be held at Dallas, Tex., in July, 1908.

On May 5, 1908:

H. R. 19463. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Bringing home the remains of civil employees of the Army who die abroad and soldiers who die on transports: To enable the Secretary of War, in his discretion, to cause to be transported to their homes the remains of civilian employees of the Army who have died or may hereafter die while in the employ of the War Department in Cuba, Porto Rico, Hawaii, China, Alaska, and the Philippines, including the remains of any honorably discharged soldiers who are entitled under the terms of their discharge to return transportation on Government transport, and who die while on said transport, $2,500.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, just a moment. I notice here, in line 23, page 111, they use the words "who die abroad." Why are those words put in there? If they die in the Philippines, that is not considered abroad.

Mr. TAWNEY. We have soldiers who are abroad, and we have civilians who are abroad, who die there and they are brought home.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I understand they might die in a foreign country, but the Philippine Islands are not a foreign country and they are not "abroad." Will this cover civilian employees dying in the Philippine Islands?

Mr. HAY. If the gentleman will read the wording of the paragraph, he will see that it is very specific in its terms, and it includes Cuba, Porto Rico, Hawaii, China, Alaska, and the Philippines.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Oh, yes; I see. That is all right.

The Clerk read as follows:

Lincoln's Gettysburg Address: For placing iron tablets containing the address of President Lincoln delivered at Gettysburg, in seventy-seven national cemeteries, $3,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do this, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of making a request I have never before made during the sixteen years I have served in this House.

The paragraph just read authorizes the placing of iron tablets in the national cemeteries in the United States containing that remarkable and memorable address by President Lincoln delivered on the battlefield of Gettysburg upon the dedication of that portion of the battlefield now known as the "Gettysburg National Cemetery." It was my great privilege at the age of 8½ years to listen to Mr. Lincoln as he delivered that address, and it has been my privilege, as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, to recommend the authorization and the appropriation for the publication of that address as provided in the foregoing paragraph.

Almost forty-four years thereafter, on the 30th of last May, from the spot where that address was delivered, I had the honor of delivering the memorial address in the Gettysburg National Cemetery.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that I may print in the RECORD the address which I delivered upon that occasion. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The address referred to is as follows:

I do not plead for States rights. I plead for the right and the duty of the Federal Government to protect itself and its Treasury against the encroachments of the States and private interests upon its powers, its duties, and its revenues.

MEMORIAL ADDRESS OF JAMES A. TAWNEY.

FRIENDS AND NEIGHBORS OF GETTYSBURG AND ADAMS COUNTY: You can but imperfectly understand, and words are inadequate to express, the emotions with which I visit this spot and address you upon this occasion of momentous interest. Yonder beyond Wolf's Hill, on the old Low Dutch road connecting the York and Baltimore pikes, stands the house where I was born. From its attic window, with my brother, on the afternoon of the third day of this memorable battle I witnessed the fearless but modest Gregg and the gallant Custer repulse and drive back the cavalry of Stuart and Fitzhugh Lee. The roads which radiate from the center of this town like spokes from the hub of a wheel, the farms, the schoolhouses, and the churches were once as familiar to me as its bed is to a brook, and their names will ever retain a precious old-world charm. Whenever in imagination I linger over these scenes a host of memories come trooping forth from every hill and woodland.

On the morning of the opening day of the battle I was picking cherries for my mother, high up in a big black cherry tree on the farm then owned by "old" John Snyder. Well do I remember the haste with which I climbed down out of that tree and ran home with my cherries while the first thundering tones of the battle rolled over Gettysburg and the surrounding country. I remember, too, that our house was used as a hospital for the wounded; that the enemy began shelling it on the third day and that it was saved by the act of a Union soldier, who unfurled my sister's red flannel petticoat, with my fishing pole as a flagstaff, from the top of the highest chimney on the house. On Tuesday following the battle I rode over the field with my grandfather, and there on the north side of Culp's Hill I saw the bodies of some sixty soldiers lying in one uncovered grave. And all over this countryside, in every wood and valley, I can at will hear the voices and see the fancy-painted faces of long ago.

It seems but yesterday that I listened to those words from the lips of the immortal Lincoln uttered upon the dedication of this ground as a national cemetery, almost from the spot where I now stand. "Here let us highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain." The American people made this resolve and they have kept it. The marvelous development of our united country, the universal prosperity of its people, the entire obliteration of sectional hate, and our rapid growth in international prestige and power in the forty-four years since that resolve was suggested by Lincoln, show how well we have kept it. To-day we occupy the first rank among the nations of the world. All this goes to prove that these dead have not died in vain.

It is therefore with peculiar emotions and a profound sense of the honor you have bestowed upon me that I address you to-day. And yet let the truth be said that neither my personal associations with this battlefield nor the great honor you have conferred upon me weigh anything in comparison with the vast political significance which this day, in this place, has for me, and must have for us all and for the nation at large.

Year by year we gather on this hallowed field to honor those who died that the nation might live. We pause in our accustomed ways; we turn aside from our usual occupations; we here commune with each other on the themes which these recurring occasions suggest; and beneath the bright blue sky, in the presence of a renewed nature, clothed in her divinely beautiful green robes of spring, we gather up those wondrous expressions of the Creator's kindest thoughts—the flowers—and tenderly strew them upon the graves of our departed heroes.

But is this all? Our coming here has about it some of the sadness of a requiem; it has about it some of the solemn reverence of prayer. Beneath these skies and upon this great occasion our country becomes a sanctuary; this battlefield an altar; these dead our sacrifice, and our love and reverence for the nation a kind of religious worship. Yet this is not all. In memory these brave dead have become sceptered sovereigns, whose spirits rule us from their graves. We all strive—we must strive—to realize the ideals for which they died.

Year by year your invited orators here seek to utter words whose sincerity and truth shall measure up to the sincerity and truth of those awful days in July, 1863—words as sincere as those silent graves yonder, words as true as the hearts of men—our fathers and brothers—who here faced shot and shell in the cause of our national life. No man can hope to speak words as full of meaning as were their actions upon this field. In my mind's eye I can see them now—the alert, intrepid Buford, with his cavalry, sighting the foe near Willoughby Run, on the Chambersburg pike; the hurried preparations for battle to hold Lee's army in check until Meade could arrive; the deadly clatter of the musketry, in which thousands fall, and Reynolds's fearless and masterful disposition of his infantry. I can see the fall of Reynolds in the dust and blood and heat. I can see the fearful slaughter of that first day, until some 50, aye, 60, per cent of all who fought fell hors de combat. I can see the temporary defeat of the Union forces, and their hasty retreat through the town in the face of enormously superior numbers, but finally holding the Confederate army in check until their end was attained and our victory of the first day was won. And then Lee's terrific attack upon Sickles's corps; the frightful slaughter in yonder wheat field and at the foot of Little Round Top and in Sherfy's peach orchard; and then Hancock's stubborn resistance, made successful by the valor and heroism of the gallant First Minnesota; and there that night, beside their dead and dying, comrades of the second day's battle, I can see the men sleeping upon their arms. Then the ominous silence that preceded the thundering roar of the cannonade and fearful decimation of the enemy's forces, which was quickly followed by the final act—Pickett's brave but desperate charge across these fields, up the slope to the point now known in history as the "high-water mark" of the rebellion—and then the retreat of the enemy under the cover of night through the gaps of yonder mountain, leaving the Army of the Potomac in complete possession of the field.

What words can even approximate a description of the awful scenes of those three days; what heart, how large soe'er it be, can adequately appreciate the valor and enormous cost of that fight for the nation's life! It is for us rather to think over these scenes than to attempt to describe them, and to try to understand and appreciate the heritage of glory into which we have come. In silence, beneath these skies, where every man may be alone with his God, it is fitting that we should, each for himself, take to heart the lessons of these graves, these hills, and these fields.

Most of the battles of the world have been fought in the name of religion, and religious wars have ever been the most cruel and relentless of all. Many others have been fought for the purpose of individual or national aggrandizement; while others have been fought to satisfy the pride or satiate the ambition of a few worldy kings, rulers, and princes. But the battle of Gettysburg, like those of Marston Moor and Runnymede and Bunker Hill, was fought to determine the proper bounds of civil and political liberty. It was fought to settle a purely political issue.

There is but one great problem in politics and that is the adjustment of the central power of the State or nation to the local self-government of the people. Our whole political life vibrates back and forth across that invisible boundary at which the liberty of the individual or the community ceases and the authority of the central government begins. Principally all of the really political battles of the world have grown out of the opposition and clash of these two great conflicting forces. They might be called the centrifugal and the centripetal forces of government. If you swing about your head a stone tied to the end of a string, two forces will operate to determine the path of the stone—the centrifugal force, on account of which the stone tends to fly off in a straight line at right angles with the line of the string, and the centripetal force of the string itself holding the stone in its circular path. Just so in politics. There is always the centrifugal tendency of the individual and the locality to fly off and pursue a path of its own in conflict with the rest of the body politic, and there is the strong centripetal power of the government tending to draw and hold us closer together.

This was the issue when good English yeomen wrested Magna Charta and the right of trial by jury from King John; this was the issue when they forced the king to grant them representation in the Government of England and the privilege of voting their own taxes; this was the issue when the cry, "no taxation without representation" arose in Boston Harbor and the war of the Revolution began; and this was the issue at Bull Run, at Shiloh, at Vicksburg, and at Gettysburg where brother fought against brother and this fair field was drenched with fraternal blood.

Has the individual State the right and should it manage and control its affairs without regard to the other States in the Union, or are we essentially one people, bound in all we do as individual States to respect the institutions and conserve the welfare of all? This, my friends, is for us the one great problem of government. In one form or another it returns again and again in our political life. Here on this battlefield it took the form of the doctrines of "secession" and "States rights." To-day it faces the American people in a more subtle form, of which I wish briefly to speak.

Permit me to remind you that no great problem of government can be solved once for all and so solved that it will not rise again. The opposite forces of government are always present and operative, and their adjustment to each other is always changing with the changing problems and circumstances of our industrial and political life.

The conditions under which our Government arose were peculiar, and in many respects they remain unparalleled in the history of the world. At the close of the American Revolution the colonies were just so many separate and independent nations or governments; they had risen by charter in entire independence of each other. They differed materially from each other in type of government and in social institutions. The colonies had but little in common except the dangers and exigencies of their pioneer life. Their first attempt to unite in a common government was under the Articles of Confederation, but there was no central power or authority to act for the people as a whole. Foreign nations could neither recognize us as a nation nor enter into treaty relations with us. It was therefore necessary that the States organize themselves into a single, comprehensive government—one that would include the whole country, with full power to act in all matters affecting what was then considered the common interests of the whole people. Owing to differences of opinion as to what constituted the common interests of the whole country and the jealous regard of the States for their right of local self-government, there was great danger that they could never come together in a single government. Everyone knows the story of how our present Constitution was constructed; how difficult it was to secure its ratification by even a bare majority of the States, and how, after much criticism, discussion, and amendment, it was slowly adopted by all. The doctrines of "States rights" and "secession" were nothing more than survivals, in the political traditions of the country, of an idea which, historically speaking, underlay and molded our Government. It was by the consent of the several States that they were finally united into a nation, and it was natural to hold that relations thus established by agreement in severalty could be dissolved at will.

But since the early days of the nation, and partially as one of the results of the rebellion that received its crushing blow upon this memorable field, the thought of the people about their Government has changed much. By a series of subtle transformations no less than marvelous we have come to possess, in effect, a new Government.

The necessity of the colonies entering into treaty relations with other nations was the first great interest tending to bring them together. To secure recognition and standing as a government, they must unite. This was the first step toward those economical and political relations with other powers and peoples which have since come to be the pride and glory of our common country. Since that time how vast have become the common interests binding the States in the unity of one Federal Government! All our interstate and foreign commerce, all our diplomatic relations with foreign powers, all our wars, our armies, our navies, our island possessions, our history, and our future, all these impress us with the great importance and necessity of our constitutional federation of the States.

Furthermore, there is another reason why the public thought about the Government was changed. The colonies had no railroads, few newspapers, no telegraph, and no telephone, while to-day lightning leaps responsive to the voice and touch of man, and the steel rail and the iron horse afford the means of quick communication and the rapid transportation of products, keeping the States in intimate contact and close acquaintance with each other. We have come to be great readers and great travelers. What happens in San Francisco vitally concerns those living on the Eastern seaboard; what transpires in the South is of material interest to those who live in the North. Where formerly each State produced its own raw materials and manufactured them into food and clothing for home consumption to-day nearly every city and town in the land is at some season of the year dependent upon the whole country for the necessities of life. For these reasons, and partly as the result of the civil war, there has grown up in this country an intense national sentiment. We are inclined to boast of our American citizenship before we even mention our State citizenship. National laws are scrupulously observed while State enactments are but little respected.

In the early part of the nineteenth century there was fear and danger that the Union of the States was as a rope of sand and would fall apart. To-day there is more reason to fear that the several States and the local self-government which they represent will, for all practical purposes, disappear from our politics as distinct entities and be swallowed up in one all-embracing Federal power. The States not only seem inclined to allow, but in many instances are anxious voluntarily to surrender, to the Federal Government the discharge of duties and the exercise of powers and privileges reserved to them by the Constitution, especially when the exercise of those powers involves the expenditure of money. They are also to-day either soliciting or acquiescing in a degree of Federal supervision over their domestic affairs that less than half a century ago would have led to revolution had the Federal Government attempted to force such supervision upon them.

Much of the Federal legislation now being enacted, especially that creating new services in respect to the local affairs of the people, would not twenty-five years ago have been tolerated by the States at whose instance, through their Representatives in both Houses of Congress, such legislation is now demanded. Even private interests, interests entirely outside of State and Federal governmental functions, are, through the activities of the Federal bureau chiefs, aided by the people of the States, seeking Federal legislative authority and Federal appropriations with which to develop local industries for the benefit of private enterprise.

The recent surrender by the Southern States of the exercise of the right reserved to them by the Constitution to maintain control, and regulate local quarantine, primarily because of the expense incident to the maintenance of an efficient State quarantine; the practical surrender to the Federal Government recently made by the State of Maryland of sovereignty over her oyster beds, that the State might be relieved of the cost of an accurate and necessary survey; the Federal inspection of the products of private manufacturing establishments and the sanitary inspection and control of the establishments themselves; the Federal inquiry into the physical, mental, and social conditions surrounding women and child labor in all local industrial occupations, with a view ultimately to securing national legislation to regulate domestic occupation; the inspection of cattle, of insects, and of all agricultural products; the investigation of soils, in which the Federal Government has no interest; the care and disposition of timber on State lands set aside by the States as forest reserves; the actual breeding of horses and cattle, primarily for the benefit of the few fancy stock raisers of the country; the making of topographic and geological surveys of States in which the Government does not own a foot of unoccupied mineral or agricultural land; the making of topographic surveys of cities and counties, primarily for the benefit of municipalities, private owners of waterworks, and interurban and other electric railways; the free testing of coal by the Federal Government for the benefit of private owners of coal mines to determine its quality in heat units and the best and most economical utilization of the by-products; the free testing of building materials for the benefit of private individuals, contractors, and consulting engineers; the work of gauging streams that are nonnavigable in States where the Federal Government owns no land and therefore has no jurisdiction or control over the streams gauged, a work which, as testified to by the former Director of the Geological Survey, is performed for the benefit of municipalities and "primarily for the benefit of prospective investors in water powers." These and many other undertakings which belong exclusively to the States or private interests to do and to pay for, but which have been authorized by Congress and must be paid for from appropriations made from the Federal Treasury, exceed the legitimate functions of the Federal Government as conceived by the founders of our political institutions and as declared by them in the Constitution of the United States.

To illustrate the unprecedented growth of Federal supervision and control over the local affairs of the people at the solicitation or with the consent of the States, I will call your attention to the extent of the special agent and inspection service ten years ago and at the present time. It is through this service that supervision and control over the domestic affairs of the people is exercised by the Federal Government. In 1896 the inspectors and special agents, including those employed in the Treasury, the Post-Office, and the Interior Departments, where that service is legitimately employed in protecting the revenue, the mails, and the public domain, numbered, all told, 160, and this service cost the Government in 1896, in round numbers, $1,300,000. In 1907 we are employing an army of three full regiments of inspectors and special agents—3,000 men—and this service is now costing the American people about $9,000,000, while the full quota heretofore authorized has not yet been appointed or appropriated for. The number of men employed in this service in 1907 is therefore more than eighteen times greater than in 1896, and the cost has increased about 700 per cent in ten years.

We hear it said by some that whatever enters into or concerns interstate commerce and whatever affects the welfare of the people of more than one State logically falls within the provisions of the National Government, and this is made the apology for such authorizations and expenditures as I have referred to and for many other demands upon the Federal Treasury which the Congress has not yet seen fit to grant. But can you name a single important matter which does not affect the people of more than one State? Is there any phase of any great industry which does not come within the scope of interstate commerce? In short, is there any important private undertaking these days which can not upon some such pretext be brought within control of the Federal power? And yet, my friends, this is the tendency of the times, the growth of which during the last decade can be comprehended only by a careful analysis of national legislation and the aggregate annual expenditures of the Federal Government. If this tendency is not checked and the States continue to surrender the exercise of their reserved powers, or fail to exercise them in harmony with the interests of their sister States, then the Federal Government, as a dernier resort, may be compelled to assume practical control over the States and the affairs of their people. In that case, with the vast and varied local and national interests of a hundred or a hundred and fifty millions of people, how long would it be before the task of government would become so complex and the financial burden so stupendous that of its own weight our splendid system of government would fail?

I grant you that it is more difficult now than formerly to draw a line between Federal and State authority, and between Federal and State expenditures; but it is not an insurmountable obstacle to the continuance of our dual system of government, nor should this difficulty be made the pretext for the Federal absorption of the functions of the States in respect to local self-government. But I would call your attention to the fact, and endeavor to impress upon you the direction in which all this is tending. The inclination on the part of the States to let the Federal Government exercise the rights reserved to them is greatly weakening the powers of the States. What is infinitely worse, it is weakening the respect of the people for the authority of the States. It is also causing the people to ignore and forget all those wise considerations which led the founders of our Government to provide for local self-government by reserving to the State all governmental powers not expressly conferred by the Constitution upon the Federal Government.

It has been suggested that the reason for this practical change in our system of government is to be sought in the imperialistic aggressiveness of the party now in control of the National Government. But, my friends, let us not deceive ourselves with shallow reflections. The real reason lies deeper than this. The tendency on the part of the States to surrender the exercise of powers belonging to them and the willingness of the Federal Government to assume such exercise, together with the burdens incident thereto, is not peculiar to any political party nor to any particular section of our country. It exists in all parties and in every section of our fair land. Let him who doubts this statement examine the record of the vote of the representatives of the people in the House and the record of the vote of the representatives of the States in the Senate. He will find that when there is a demand, either from the people or from the States, for the authorization of a new Federal service, a service which belongs to the States or to private interests to do, and an appropriation from the Federal Treasury to pay for the same, there will almost always be found in both Houses of Congress a majority composed of men of all parties and from all sections of the country who do not even pause to inquire whether the proposed authorization and expenditure falls within the legitimate function of the Federal Government. Their only concern is whether the revenues will be equal to the consequent increased appropriations; and even this consideration has but little weight, especially if their State or any of their people are to be the beneficiaries.

The true reason, my friends, why the people are willing to let the National Government perform and pay for so many things which properly fall within the obligations of the States is found in the fact that they do not realize that they are themselves paying for the things which the National Government pays for. The Federal revenue is secured by indirect taxation, while the money in the treasuries of the several States is secured by direct taxation upon the property of the people.

When any State increases its appropriations for any purpose, every legislator knows that that means an increase in the direct tax upon the people. Moreover, he knows that the people know this and that they watch with zealous care the tax rate which they must pay in cash from their own pockets. The legislator is slow to expose himself needlessly to the criticism and disapprobation of his constituents. Therefore needed legislation is postponed because of the expense it involves, and the Federal Government is appealed to, whenever possible, through the President, through the people's representatives in Congress, and through the various Departments and bureaus of the Government. From my experience I can say that the Departments and bureaus of the Federal Government are at all times eager to enlarge the sphere of their activities and powers by taking on new services and securing increased appropriations. When popular demands are strong enough and it has become obvious that the States will not severally or jointly undertake obligations belonging to them, though seriously needed, the experience of the last ten years shows that the Federal Government, through its legislative and executive departments, is only too willing to undertake such responsibilities and relieve the States of the burdens they involve.

My friends, our dual system of government is threatened today by the tendency of the States thus to put upon the National Government the burden of administering their local affairs, and this tendency is constantly increasing as the result of the failure on the part of the States to perform their functions of local self-government, and in this failure they are encouraged by a sentiment created by the press of the country, teaching the people to believe that if the State legislatures do not act, "the question as to whether such legislation belongs in the field of the Federal Government will sink to a purely academic question."

I do not plead for States rights. I plead for the right and the duty of the Federal Government to protect itself and its Treasury against the encroachments of the States and private interests upon its powers, its duties, and its revenues. Where will this tendency end? To what result, think you, does it naturally and inevitably lead? Whither are we going in this centralization of Federal power and mutilation of local self-government? I lay no claim to prophetic powers, but I bring to you the thought of many of the ablest men in the public service to-day, when I say that we are unconsciously drifting toward a highly organized, bureaucratic form of Federal Government, such as has become the bane of most of the Old World governments of Europe. We are, either consciously or unconsciously, being drawn away from the simple and sublime ideals of local self-government, which not only gave shape to, but enabled us to adopt, the Constitution and have given unique significance to our political history up to the present time.

The remedy for this tendency, which we can not much longer look upon with indifference, lies in the simple application of the golden rule by each State to itself.

The only possible remedy lies in each State taking upon itself the burden of enacting all needful legislation and administering its own affairs within the rights and powers which it possesses, and in each State so legislating and administering its affairs that other States may do likewise without injury to any. The individual State should not only rise to the legislative needs of its own people in respect to local self-government, but should also consider what is deemed needful for the people of other States and act accordingly. Unless this is done, unless the States can thus join hands in the wise discharge of all the obligations devolving upon them under our dual form of government, it is inevitable that some of the fundamental features of our present system of government must sooner or later be abandoned. For it is certain that a people, believing as we do in self-government, will not long tolerate a condition of affairs in which the States fail either to exercise the rights reserved to them for the benefit of their own people or to exercise these rights in harmony with each other and for the best interests of all.

It has been said by a member of the Senate of the United States that such unity and harmony between the States is not possible; that it can not be attained without the interference of the Federal Government. This may be true; but, my friends, no such doubt entered the minds of the makers of our Constitution, or was ever expressed by them or by anyone else until within the last decade. They had supreme confidence in the power of the States to legislate in harmony with and for the best interests of the country as a whole. If their confidence was unfounded, if we must, with the further development of our industries, our commerce, and our political institutions, fall back upon the strong arm of the Federal Government to support and sustain us, then must the political significance and importance of our State boundaries become less with time and the splendid conception of local self-government, which has guided and restrained our lawmakers heretofore, be proven a failure.

The vital question, therefore, which confronts the American people to-day is, whether our dual system of government, in the form conceived and established by its founders, is ultimately to be wrecked upon the rock of a highly centralized bureaucratic Federal authority, or whether it can endure in the form originally created as the nation moves on to greater heights of development in industry, in wealth, in power, and in international influence.

Here, then, let us renew that high resolve, uttered upon this spot forty-four years ago by the immortal Lincoln, that this Government "of the people, by the people, and for the people," in the form in which it was conceived by the founders of the Republic, in the form that has made us superior to all governments in the past, in the form for which brave men laid down their lives upon this and many other historic battlefields, shall not perish from the earth.

The Clerk read as follows:

National Cemetery, City of Mexico, Mexico: For making repairs and improvements to the United States national cemetery located in the City of Mexico, Mexico, $15,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, the national cemetery at the City of Mexico was established in 1850, when the first appropriation was made. Two years later an appropriation of $1,480.34 additional was made. Since that time there has been no appropriation whatever for the maintenance of this national cemetery near the City of Mexico. This appropriation is for the purpose of renovating the lodge, repairing the walls, and putting the cemetery in proper condition and making it conform to the surroundings and conditions of other cemeteries in that vicinity. The area of this cemetery is 2 acres; there are 1,515 bodies buried there—765 unknown and 750 known.

The Clerk read as follows:

Military posts: For the construction and enlargement at military posts of such buildings as, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, may be necessary, $800,000; but no part of the money appropriated for military posts shall be used for the purchase of any land nor for the establishment of any military prison.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 113, at the end of line 18, insert:

"Provided, That no part of this sum or the following sum shall be expended for the construction of quarters of officers of the Army, the total cost of which, including the heating and plumbing apparatus, wiring and fixtures, shall exceed in the case of quarters of a general officer, the sum of $15,000, of a colonel or officer above the rank of captain $12,000, and of an officer of and below the rank of captain, $9,000."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Drill ground, Fort Des Moines, Iowa: For the purchase of 239 acres of land adjoining the military reservation of Fort Des Moines, Iowa, required for use as a drill ground for the garrison, $50,600.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that paragraph. Mr. Chairman, I assume that it will not be contended that there is any authorization for this appropriation, and in my judgment it could not be regarded as the continuance of a work already begun.

I find in the Digest this syllabus:

The purchase of adjoining land for a work already established was held to be a continuation of the public work; but an amendment for acquiring a new site was ruled out.

A further syllabus says:

A proposition to purchase a separate and detached lot of land for an Army target range was held not to be in continuation of a public work.

The CHAIRMAN. From what page is the gentleman reading?

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Page 351 of the Digest. Mr. Chairman, I have not before me the full text of these rulings, and I do not know how far they go, but it seems to me as if this was legislating upon an appropriation bill, and it seems to me to go further than almost any piece of legislation that has ever been attempted. The very able gentlemen who compose that committee are always very zealous in keeping out any legislation from other appropriation bills. In my judgment, an appropriation for buying land for any purpose ought to be submitted to the appropriate committee, and in this case it is the Committee on Military Affairs, and should have an examination and consideration on its merits, and the appropriation should not be made until it is authorized by law.

I have no objection to this particular item and have no objection to an appropriation being made for it if made in the proper manner, but I want to fix the responsibility somewhere. I may say that there are numerous bills before the Committee on Military Affairs providing for the purchase of independent tracts of land and other tracts adjacent to property now owned by the Government. I am anxious to know what committee has jurisdiction of this class of legislation. If the Committee on Appropriations has jurisdiction to buy land wherever they choose, to any extent they choose, then of course that relieves the Committee on Military Affairs from giving it any consideration. If this committee can buy 100 acres of land, they can buy 1,000 acres, or a whole State. I think it is a dangerous innovation, and I think it ought to be stopped right here and now.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I do not think this is subject to a point of order. The ground proposed to be bought at Fort Des Moines simply squares out a tract now owned by the Government and gives about 1 section of ground, all told. It is immediately contiguous to the present property owned by the Government and is, in part, as I understand, partially surrounded by the land now owned by the Government. I may state that this matter was brought to the attention of the committee not only by the War Department, but by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, who thought that the jurisdiction was with the Committee on Appropriations.

Some years ago the Government acquired about 400 acres of land south of the city of Des Moines and has established thereon a military post. I know that this is absolutely contiguous ground to the ground now owned by the Government and feel sure that within the ruling for the mere enlargement of existing reservations the point of order ought to be overruled.

The CHAIRMAN. Was there a limit of cost originally placed on the site?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. There never was. The site was given to the Government of the United States on which the post now stands, as I understand the facts.

Mr. ADAIR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ADAIR. Will the gentleman state when the post was built?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I could only give it roughly. It is six or eight years ago.

Mr. ADAIR. It has been occupied and used during all this time?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It has been growing all this time, and every year some work has been done on it. I have not been there all the time.

Mr. ADAIR. What land has been used for drilling purposes?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I confess my lack of knowledge upon this subject, but the only ground I am familiar with is the ground surrounded by the quarters.

Mr. ADAIR. No other ground has been rented or used for drilling purposes except that now owned by the Government?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I am not prepared to say as to that.

Mr. ADAIR. The gentleman does not know whether this land is really necessary for the use of the Government or not.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Oh, yes; I do know that it is really necessary.

Mr. ADAIR. But the gentleman says that he does not know whether any of the land has been used and whether it is necessary.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Ah, but the gentleman ignores the fact that I said to him that this post had been steadily growing and is being built now.

Mr. ADAIR. And the gentleman is figuring that this post will grow sufficiently large to warrant it.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. No, no; I say this post now is a very considerable post, and this land will give it a single section of land, which is a very inferior quantity of land for a military post.

Mr. ADAIR. The gentleman says he does not know whether the land now owned by the Government has been used for drilling, and whether it is sufficient, and whether any other land has been used for that purpose.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The gentleman misquotes me. I did say I did not know whether the Government had occupied any other land or not, but I do know in the present state of the development of the post the amount of land owned by the Government is inadequate.

Mr. ADAIR. Does the gentleman know how many soldiers are kept and stationed there?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I do not know. It is a regimental post.

Mr. ADAIR. The gentleman believes the purchase of this land is necessary for the use of the Government?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. That is my judgment. It is the smallest post I know anything about.

Mr. ADAIR. And the fact is the gentleman has not as much information as we really need upon the subject.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Why, I think so; not perhaps as much as will satisfy the gentleman, but I think as much as the gentleman needs.

Mr. ADAIR. I am in favor of the purchase of this land if the gentlemen of the committee can convince me that the land is needed for the use of the Government; but when the gentleman says he does not know whether any other land has been used by the Government for drilling purposes, the evidence is hardly sufficient to warrant me in supporting the proposition.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I am not urging the proposition. It is a matter of no earthly concern to me. I was discussing a point of order, but when the gentleman says that because I stated I did not know that the Government has used other land for a growing post, and that that indicates that the land is not needed, I think he is in error. This is a very small tract of land for an Army post, with this added. The War Department has urged the purchase of it to this committee.

Mr. ADAIR. The War Department has urged the purchase of it?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Why, certainly; or we would not dream of putting it in the bill.

Mr. ADAIR. Well, that is the information that we want.

Mr. PERKINS. How far is this land from Des Moines?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. In my judgment, it is 4 or 5 miles out of Des Moines.

Mr. PERKINS. Is it farming land?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Yes; it could be said to be, in a sense, farming land, as such land would be, near a large city of nearly 100,000 people.

Mr. PERKINS. Does the gentleman not think that $200 an acre is a pretty good price for farming lands?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Farming land in Iowa of best quality and small improvement, without being adjacent to a large city, would well be worth $125 to $140 an acre.

Mr. PERKINS. But there is a very large portion of the State of Iowa that is not worth any such sum.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Certainly; but it is not the best.

Mr. PERKINS. Is this good land?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. This is regarded as a good part of the State.

Mr. PERKINS. The price here looks like a very large price.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It was the price that the Government was able to get option on the land for and at which the War Department recommends its purchase. Personally I know nothing about it.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Will the gentleman yield for a question? I would ask the gentleman if this is a work already established within the meaning of the decision rendered?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. If the gentleman asks me for my opinion on the question of parliamentary law, I think this is a work in progress within the meaning of the rules of the House.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question or two? A military post has already been established or is established at Fort Des Moines, and drilling ground is a necessary incident to a military post, and additional ground is needed for the purpose of drilling. It impresses me—I asked the question, but I will answer it—that this provision is in order.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I think it is in order.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It is merely enlarging an establishment that has already been created and is in operation.

Mr. BUTLER. Whose district is it in?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I can not see that that bears upon the question of a parliamentary law at all, but it is in the district represented by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I would like to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania there is a small provision in the bill a few paragraphs further on for Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind.—not in my district, but in my State.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, upon the point of order I desire to make a simple statement or two in reply to what the gentleman from Iowa says about this land being contiguous to that part of the land now owned by the Government being one of the reasons why this ought not to be subject to the point of order. That has no bearing upon the question whatever, and it strikes me the gentleman is most desperate in that statement, because if it were within the rule that it could be purchased in this way because of its being contiguous to the other part, then a whole county or the whole State of Iowa could be purchased unless divided by streams or other separating obstructions. And again I desire to state that during the Fifty-ninth Congress there was a provision being carried on an appropriation bill for the purchase of some adjoining land to the St. Elizabeth Insane Asylum. The point of order was raised against that appropriation for that purpose and the then occupant of the chair decided that it was contrary to existing law and sustained the point of order. It strikes me, sir, as the gentleman from Indiana has said, that it is entirely improper for us to legislate in this way to purchase land in any number of acres. If we can purchase 239 acres we can purchase 239,000 acres or we can purchase 239,000,000 acres. If we can appropriate $50,000 to buy it with, then we could appropriate $50,000,000 just as easily. Therefore, it strikes me that it is wrong for the Congress, without due consideration by the proper committee, to carry an appropriation for the purchase of land when no investigation has been made whatever concerning the matter. I believe, sir, it is subject to the point of order, and in the wisdom of the Chair I think he will sustain the point made by the gentleman from Indiana.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is made to the paragraph beginning with line 3, on page 114, and ending with line 7. The paragraph recites that—

> For the purchase of 239 acres of land adjoining the military reservation of Fort Des Moines, Iowa, required for use as a drill ground for the garrison.

In the opinion of the Chair the decisions are very clear. There is a uniformity of decisions on this proposition, the Chair finding as many as six or eight running through the last three Congresses, clearly declaring that the purchase of adjoining land for a work already established is a continuation of a public work. Of course the fort is already established and this is for the purchase of land adjoining. The point raised by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] as to whether or not it is required for use as a drill ground was not clear to the Chair as being of great weight under the circumstances. The Chair thinks that it was not necessary to have inserted the words "required for use as a drill ground for the garrison," but that is simply explanatory and does not render the whole paragraph subject to the point of order. The Chair thinks that it is a continuation of a public work, and therefore overrules the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Target range, Sparta, Wis.: For the purchase of 7,600 acres of land, more or less, near Sparta, Monroe County, Wis., as a site for a target range, the sum of $150,000, appropriated by act of June 30, 1906, for target range, Camp Douglas, Wis., or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby made available.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order to that paragraph for the purpose of getting some information in reference to it. In the first place I would like to know whether the purchase of this target range has been authorized by law.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I will state the facts are these, for the information of the gentleman from Indiana: In the last Congress we authorized the purchase of a target range at Camp Douglas, Wis. We not only authorized the purchase but appropriated the money, $150,000, for that purpose.

Now, the purchase can be made under that authorization at the limit of cost or for the amount appropriated, but after further investigation the War Department found that there was a far better tract of land lying in the vicinity of Camp Douglas, or lying west of Camp Douglas, near Sparta, which was far better adapted for target practice, and the area was very much larger. I know something about the land, as I have passed through it on the railroad, and the War Department has earnestly recommended that this appropriation be made available for the purchase of this land, rather than the purchase of that which has heretofore been authorized.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. How far from Camp Douglas is this tract of land?

Mr. ESCH. I will say to the gentleman it is only about 15 miles west of the Camp Douglas site.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. What means of communication are there between the camp and the target range?

Mr. ESCH. Two trunk lines of road pass near this new tract, one of them being the Milwaukee line and the other being the Chicago and Northwestern. It has better topographical features, is better adapted to the use of artillery, which is the main purpose of the original appropriation, and has better drinking water and a better range, both for rifle and artillery.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Now, will this provision be followed by a proposition to remove Camp Douglas over to the target range as a matter of convenience?

Mr. TAWNEY. Camp Douglas, I will say, is a State reservation.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It is a military camp, I understand.

Mr. ESCH. It is a State reservation.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is a State reservation, and where the State troops hold their encampment each year.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. This is a target range for the militia?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; it is for the United States Army. The original proposition was this: The committee thought inasmuch as this land which it was proposed to purchase for the Army for a target range lay in close proximity to the State reservation known as Camp Douglas, where the State troops meet every year; that if we could get the consent of the legislature of the State of Wisconsin to use their buildings we would purchase this land adjacent to Camp Douglas.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. How far from any military post is it?

Mr. TAWNEY. There are Fort Sheridan, Fort Snelling, at St. Paul, and——

Mr. CRUMPACKER. How far is Fort Snelling?

Mr. TAWNEY. About 175 miles.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Is that in sufficient proximity to these military posts to be available for target practice?

Mr. TAWNEY. They are using this ground now. The artillery at Fort Snelling come there every year—march down and encamp there for artillery target practice.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. There is no limitation apparently on the cost of the purchase in this provision here.

Mr. TAWNEY. This is simply making the $150,000 available that was heretofore appropriated for the purchase of the other site.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. If it costs more than that——

Mr. TAWNEY. The War Department has informed the committee that they have got the option on the land and it will not cost more than the amount asked for.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I have no doubt the gentleman thinks this is necessary, at least, and proper——

Mr. TAWNEY. It is so located that the artillery and the regiments of the Army that are located at three posts can congregate or assemble there for target practice, both artillery and rifle.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Is there any other target range in that part of the country?

Mr. TAWNEY. Those three posts—Fort Snelling, at St. Paul, Fort Des Moines, of Iowa, and Fort Sheridan, of Illinois——

Mr. CRUMPACKER. What do they do now for target practice?

Mr. TAWNEY. They have none. Fort Snelling has been using a part of this ground by the consent of the State of Wisconsin and the consent of the private owners. There are no buildings on this land at all.

Mr. BUTLER. Is that an artillery range?

Mr. TAWNEY. Artillery and rifle.

Mr. ESCH. An artillery range requires 3½ miles with our new model artillery piece.

Mr. BUTLER. I am not criticising the proposed appropriation. I am looking for information. How wide is this strip?

Mr. ESCH. It is a range 4 miles, I think, in one direction and possibly 3 in another.

Mr. BUTLER. You do not need a strip 4 miles wide to shoot a cannon ball through.

Mr. ESCH. That artillery piece will carry 4 miles.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The New York Tribune of this date—May 5—has this to say of currency legislation, which I desire to read to the House——

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. To what section is the gentleman making objection?

Mr. FOWLER. To the last section read. I move to strike out the last word. [Reading:]

CURRENCY LEGISLATION.

Three or four new amendments to the Vreeland currency bill are announced, and it is expected that several more will result from the Republican conference. Apparently it will be altered to suit any group of Members who will promise their votes for it in consideration of such amendments. That may be the way to get the bill through the House, but it is not the way to reform the currency. The process makes it look as if the House leaders cared not what sort of measure they finally passed, provided only that something gets through, because they do not expect the bill which will finally come out of the joint conference committee to bear the slightest resemblance to the bill passed by the House. The apparent intention is to put some proposition through, so that the Senate and House can come together and agree on a measure acceptable to both branches.

That is at present the real danger to currency reform. The Senate has already voted for a bond-secured currency, and it is expected that whatever form the Vreeland bill finally assumes in the House the Senate will practically substitute the Aldrich bill. Then, when it comes to a conference, with the Senate conferees standing firmly for a bond-secured currency, and the House conferees indifferent as to what kind of currency is provided for, the Aldrich bill will finally get upon the statute books. If that is the result of the present efforts of the House leaders to enact some sort of currency legislation to stand before the country on, they will probably have cause to regret it, for they will have to apologize all through the campaign for providing something which hardly anybody wants and almost everybody distrusts.

As for the Vreeland bill itself, the best that may be said in its behalf is that while there is no evidence of any demand for it, there is also no evidence of any strong hostility. No banking or business organizations are urging its passage, but it has not encountered such general and outspoken opposition as has the Aldrich bill. It can not be said to be in the interests of Wall street or of any group of bond speculators, nor can it be said to be distinctly unfriendly to any section or to any class of banks, unless it turns out that the clearing-house provision is unworkable for banks in small communities. Unless the Aldrich bill should be grafted upon it in the end, it probably would not prove to be a dangerous measure in a campaign.

Leaving out of consideration the crudities in which it abounds, and which its author recognizes—for he had hardly introduced the bill before he began offering amendments—it provides no satisfactory measure of currency reform. To go to its fundamental faults, it follows no tried system for the issue of bank circulation. Two methods have been used in other countries with success, and the Vreeland bill, instead of accepting one of these, introduces a new and untried plan. One method is to let the individual banks of the country take out circulation based upon their general assets. The other way is to have a central national bank to rediscount the choice commercial paper of the individual banks, the central bank issuing its notes based on its general assets composed of this rediscounted commercial paper. The Vreeland bill follows neither of these plans, but provides for clearing houses to "segregate" the assets underlying note issues. No one knows how this would work, and no one can see why in so delicate a matter as the currency the lessons of experience should not be followed. Other nations have found it necessary, moreover, to provide machinery for the redemption of bank circulation. The Vreeland bill here again neglects to profit by the experience of other countries and leaves redemption to the United States Treasury, a system which is working badly with the present national-bank notes.

It is confessedly an "emergency" measure of a temporary character, and if it is passed the country will not long be satisfied with it. It will not give to the United States such an elastic currency system as foreign nations have, and the business interests of the United States will not be content until they are as well provided for as are rival interests abroad. Whether the Vreeland bill passes or not, there should be a provision for the creation of a thoroughly representative currency commission, not one that would be obviously controlled by Congressional leaders against real currency reform, but one which the country would accept as promising a broad-minded solution of the problem.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOWLER. Just one moment more.

Mr. MADDEN. I object to a further extension.

Mr. FOWLER. I ask that I may be allowed to read this article.

Mr. TAWNEY. Include with that the name of the paper and the name of the author.

Mr. FOWLER. I ask consent to print two additional editorials.

[Journal of Commerce, Tuesday, May 5, 1908.]

BEWARE THE VREELAND SNARE.

There is to be a "conference" of Republican members of the House to-night, and Speaker CANNON and the minions who do his bidding are credited with the purpose of forcing through the Vreeland bill as the basis of a scheme for an emergency currency to be finally cooked up in a conference committee named by the leaders in the plot. There is an attempt to catch those who realized the dangers of the Aldrich bill with the snare of the Vreeland bill, which, if there were any chance of its enactment, would be still more dangerous, but we are convinced that there is no expectation or intention of securing the final enactment of the Vreeland bill. That is not what it is for. It has been contrived to catch those unwary persons who had been brought to understand the Aldrich scheme, but who may be taken with the plausible pretense of organizing clearing houses to obtain additional circulation in case of emergency on security of commercial paper, without realizing what the actual effect of the plan as embodied in the bill would be. When introduced it included the main features of the Aldrich bill, but these have been eliminated, and now it is only the Vreeland clearing-house association contrivance.

Is anyone simple enough to suppose that this is going to be carried through the Senate if it passes the House? All pretenses of that kind are "springes to catch woodcock." Its purpose is merely to get something from the House to the Senate wherewith to restore the essential provisions of the Aldrich bill in conference committee and face both Houses with a common report in its favor and compel them by all the force of party authority and discipline to take the dose.

The design is too transparent to deceive any intelligent Member of the majority and too unscrupulous to be submitted to by any self-respecting Member. But why should anybody be fooled by the Vreeland bill, even supposing there was an honest intention of having it enacted or any prospect that it could be enacted? On its own merits it is worse than the Aldrich bill. What does it propose to do with the clearing house associations, which would be nothing that the name implies, but only combinations of ten or more banks having a capital and surplus of $5,000,000 or more, organized for the sole purpose of issuing additional circulation? Their object would be to "render available as a basis of additional circulation any securities, including commercial paper, held by a national banking association.

The ten or more banks could get from the Treasury Department ready-made "additional notes" on the application of their own "executive board" on any kind of securities they had on hand or chose to buy or borrow that the same executive board of their own choosing would accept. This would go far beyond the State, county, city, town, village, and school-district bonds of the Aldrich bill, and take in any "cats and dogs" of promoters and syndicates in which the banks might be interested, provided their own executive board would accept them. If they had 50 per cent of their capital already tied up in notes secured by Government bonds, they could get additional notes up to the full limit of capital and surplus and to 75 per cent of the security deposited with their own association. It would in effect be an indirect loan of the association to its members on this kind of collateral, in notes supplied and guaranteed by the Government.

What about redemption of these notes? This is reduced to an absolute farce. The supervision of these issues and of the necessity and distribution of them by the Treasury, with over 6,700 banks scattered all over the country, could never be exercised with effect. With the force of employees increased tenfold, it could not be done except in a haphazard way. In any case the Department must prepare plates for different denominations of these notes for all the banks and print and keep on hand for them an amount equal to 50 per cent of their capital, ready to be issued "in an emergency," which would mean whenever they wanted them badly enough to pay the tax. There would be the possibility of inflating the currency with $750,000,000 of them, and they would spread like quicksilver through the channels of circulation. They would be "used, held, and treated in the same way as circulating notes of national banking associations heretofore issued and secured by a deposit of United States bonds," and be "subject to all the provisions of law affecting such notes."

They could only be got rid of under the present system of redemption by being gathered up and sent to the Redemption Bureau at Washington to be exchanged for "lawful money of the United States." The Bureau has been overworked for three months in dealing with the redundant volume of notes issued to meet an emergency in the previous three months in the regular form, and the lawful money in the Treasury has been depleted while the public funds are congested with bank notes. What would be the effect of this "additional" flood every now and then?

But this kind of redemption, the only kind that currently goes on, is not retirement of the notes, and consequently not real redemption. They are sent back to the banks of issue and kept out until the banks choose to retire them by depositing lawful money and taking up the security. How would that work with these Vreeland "additional notes?"

There is a special provision that they may, without the monthly limitation, "make such withdrawal at any time by the deposit of lawful money or national-bank notes with the Treasurer of the United States, and upon such deposit a proportionate share of the securities so deposited may be withdrawn." "Or national-bank notes!" What kind of final redemption is that of one lot of bank notes with another lot? These "additional notes" would be "national-bank notes," to be "used, held, and treated" like any other, and the notes of one bank or a thousand banks could be used to retire the notes of another. The mix-up of this kind of inflation, based upon no extra reserve of coin, but merely upon miscellaneous collateral securities, would be something frightful.

At the bottom of such schemes can only be crass ignorance and intellectual incapacity or an utterly reckless dishonesty. The plea that something of this kind must be accepted or nothing can be done should evoke a devout prayer from the whole country that nothing be done until reason can resume its sway and common sense and common honesty can be admitted to the councils of the nation in dealing with a subject that so concerns the well-being of the people and the safety of all their affairs. There is no safety now except in the death of all these stupid makeshifts.

[New York Times, May 5.]

THE VREELAND BILL.

Nothing could be more admirable than Mr. VREELAND'S industry, unless it is his readiness to oblige. Day after day he produces fresh versions of his bill. Mr. VREELAND, of the Salamanca Trust Company, Cattaraugus County, wastes no time over objections. He simply offers a new bill.

Praise of Mr. VREELAND, however, is something different from praise of the bill, which he himself prefers to alter and amend rather than defend. According to our Washington advices, he is "willing to submit his bill to any changes" to-day's conference may suggest. Obviously, therefore, nobody knows what the bill will be to-morrow, or even what it is to-day, for that matter, since it exists as yet only in Mr. VREELAND'S mind. Only two things are sure—it will not be the Vreeland bill unless it provides for the issue of some large part of a billion dollars of emergency currency, or if it does provide for any method of getting in the currency after it is put out.

The omission of adequate methods of redemption is quite as characteristic of the bill as its ample, not to say excessive, provision for issue. Neither of these basic characteristics is among those details which either Mr. VREELAND or the conference can alter at this stage of the game.

Yet these points are well worth consideration, for the redemption of the existing volume of bank notes which Mr. VREELAND intends to double is at the present time embarrassing the Treasury to an extent few realize. As Representative FOWLER said on the floor of the House, and as other Congressmen are remarking privately among themselves, the Treasury has now suspended gold payments except upon specific demand. A year ago the Treasury held $146,000,000 of free gold and now it has less than $40,000,000. The Treasury is obliged to receive bank notes for redemption and in payment of dues to the United States, and it is obliged to disburse lawful money for redemption of notes and to meet an excess of expenditures.

The Treasury relies upon the banks, the banks rely upon the Treasury, and Mr. VREELAND proposes to lay a double strain upon the mutual reliance without providing any increased strength to either. It is rather a bill to create than to cure an emergency.

With justice did Mr. Vanderlip in the Sunday Times express the foreign opinion that the wonder was not that we experienced emergencies, but that we escaped them. As a permanent provision for the evils it designs to remedy the bill is worse than we deserve as a punishment for the manner in which we palter with the subject. It is only defensible as a temporary concession to the political necessities of the moment, and all that is possible to commend in it is contained in the reported limitation of it to a two-year period.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is there any objection to the gentleman's continuing?

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Do you want any more time?

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, because of my liking for the gentleman from New Jersey, I ask that he may have five minutes' additional.

Mr. DALZELL. I shall object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection has been made, and the gentleman from Tennessee is recognized.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What time is this conference to commence, Mr. Chairman? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee has been recognized to offer an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend as follows:

"After line 14, page 114, insert: 'Target range, Fort Oglethorpe, Ga.: For the purchase of 924 acres of land adjoining the Caloosa Springs tract, now the target range, Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., $18,500.'"

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, an estimate of $18,500 is made by the War Department for the purchase of this tract of land adjoining the present target range for the completion of that range. It was sent to the Committee on Appropriations. It happened that no hearing was had upon that question, and no action was taken by the committee. I assume when the House ascertains the facts, as they appear from the statement of General Aleshire, which I have in my hand, there will be no objection to the adoption of this amendment.

Some four years ago, by act of Congress, at Fort Oglethorpe, a target range was ordered to be established. It was found by the War Department that part of the land, the 924 acres, the taking of which they now seek to make legal by this act of acquisition, was, as a matter of fact, forcibly taken and that it is being used by the Government and unpaid for. The Government wants the balance of these tracts. A board of officers of the War Department says that it is necessary. The farmers—owners of part of the land—are not able to live in their houses, or upon the land in order to cultivate their fields, by reason of the fact that the soldiers in practice shoot over the fields, making it unsafe for them to use them. The Government has for two years and more had actual use and occupation of these lands. The price is fixed at not a very large figure, much lower than some of those we have passed upon, and I take it as a matter of common justice the Government will pay for the land it has used and is still using.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to say I can not possibly consent to favor this amendment, and I can not see how the House or committee can agree to it. An estimate was made for the purchase of this land two years ago, a year ago, and again at this session of Congress. Now, the Committee on Appropriations rejected the estimate two years ago and also a year ago, when the condition of our Treasury was such as to justify the purchase if it was deemed absolutely necessary for the use of the Army. Now, I want to call the attention of the committee to this fact, that this contract for the purchase of this target range was made by the War Department without any authority for that purpose. There was no appropriation made, and without any appropriation, without any authorization, the War Department proceeded to enter into a contract for the purchase of this large tract of land to be used in connection with the target range of the Government. Now, I do not feel justified in acquiescing in the conduct of any Department that will proceed to create an obligation and try to bind the legislative department by a solemn contract with an individual or anybody else, and then come to Congress and get authority for making the contract and an appropriation to execute it.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Minnesota is wrong in reference to this. Congress authorized the establishment of a target range there by law some four years ago, and part of the land in the range was used but unpaid for by the Government. The Government encroaches upon the land controlled by the citizens to the extent of 924 acres of land, so that it can not be used by the people, the owners, on account of the target practice, making the balance of the land unavailable by reason of the fact that the soldiers shooting over that tract make it unsafe for the people to live on their land.

Now, the Department, ascertaining these facts, on complaints from the people there, which complaints I hold in my hand, sent a board to investigate the situation. That board of officers reported that these 924 acres of land were absolutely necessary for the purposes of a target range which has been authorized by law. They report further that the people owning the land can not live upon it, by reason of the fact that the Government, occupying and controlling a part of it adversely, uses the balance of it in such a way for the target range as to make it not habitable.

Mr. TAWNEY. How much of the time during the year does the Government occupy, even under its contract, the land it is proposed to purchase?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. About once a week, I think.

Mr. TAWNEY. How far removed from the troops that use it is this range?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Eight or 10 miles, I think.

Mr. TAWNEY. What is the size of the range they now have there?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. It is only a few hundred acres. I will say to the gentleman that this is a meritorious case. We are not asking you to buy anything more. We are asking you to pay for what you have taken by use or made valueless by the act of the Government.

Mr. TAWNEY. No; you are asking us to confirm the unauthorized act of the War Department.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. The War Department has not this particular piece of land.

Mr. TAWNEY. I understood the gentleman to say that they have a contract.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. They have taken by law part of another piece of land and they have taken by force this piece of land and rendered it valueless. I am surprised at the gentleman from Minnesota. He has just agreed to the passage of a large number of these matters, several of them out in the West. Why can not this be done at Fort Oglethorpe? Why will not the Government pay for that which it has taken at Fort Oglethorpe? It is not a matter of grace; it is a matter of common decency and honesty that this House should pay for that which the Government has appropriated, which it is using this very minute. The board of officers making the report have reported substantially according to the statement I have made, which I have now in my hand, giving the names of the men who are inconvenienced by this conduct on the part of the Government. It is a matter of common justice. We are asking no favors for our people.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, my objection is not particularly to acquiring this land at Fort Oglethorpe. I am opposed to acquiring most of the sites for additional land contained in this bill. I was amazed to hear the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. TAWNEY] urge as one objection to this amendment the fact that the War Department has entered into a contract without authority to acquire this land, depending only upon the appropriations to be made by Congress.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am taking the statement of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. He is mistaken himself.

Mr. FITZGERALD. When the committee reaches the item for the military post at Manila, to expend $180,204 to acquire more than 6,000 acres additional, I hope the chairman of the committee will recollect that a contract has been made for the purchase of that land, without authority of law, depending only upon an appropriation being made by Congress.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will call the attention of my colleague on the committee that that was not a contract for the purchase. It was an option obtained to purchase within a given time at a fixed price. In this case they do not assume to go on and purchase the land or contract for the purchase of the land and go into the possession of the land, as they have done in the case referred to by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I want to object just once more to the statement of the gentleman——

Mr. FITZGERALD. General Ayleshire, the Quartermaster-General, says:

A copy of a contract for a deed of such land to the United States, providing Congress shall appropriate the necessary funds before the 30th of June, 1908, has also been received.

I undertake to say, Mr. Chairman, that you can not distinguish between those contracts by calling one an option and the other a contract. They are both dependent upon an appropriation being made for the purchase by Congress.

There is in this bill $489,000 for the acquisition of additional land to Army posts. Four hundred and eighty-nine thousand dollars, although, as the chairman has pointed out, this year we face a deficit of $60,000,000 and next year the unprecedented deficit of $150,000,000.

To show the effect these extravagant expenditures are having on the country, and the way the country is looking at them, I shall ask the Clerk to read the following extract from the Indianapolis News, a stanch Republican paper, at least during campaign times, however independent its proclivities may be outside of campaign time.

Mr. OVERSTREET. If the gentleman from New York will allow me, I am glad to have his authority for the stanch Republicanism of the Indianapolis News. It is one of the most independent papers ever published in the United States.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman state one occasion during the past ten years when it has supported the Democratic ticket in the State of Indiana?

Mr. OVERSTREET. It supported Cleveland in his last campaign.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But that was sixteen years ago.

Mr. OVERSTREET. There has not been a Democratic candidate whom an independent paper could support since. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. This paper is like a number of other so-called "independent" papers, claiming to be independent and invariably supporting the Republican candidate during the campaign, however much it may criticise them outside the campaign.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more in order to have this illuminating Republican document read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. As I was saying, I want this illuminating Republican document read from a Republican paper that masquerades as an independent. I know that in the State of Indiana, just as in the State of New York, there are a number of innocent persons who are deluded and misled by journals of the character of this one, but I hope that that side of the House, at least, will listen attentively to this article in the Indianapolis News, which has not supported a Democratic candidate since 1892.

The Clerk read as follows:

[From the Indianapolis News.]

OUR HAPHAZARD FINANCES—INCREASING EXPENDITURES IN FACE OF A DECLINING REVENUE.

Probably ours is the only Government in the world, certainly the only civilized government, that would deliberately increase expenditures in the face of an obviously declining revenue. We have spent $66,000,000 more this year than last. And there is no suggestion from any responsible source that we ought to economize in any direction. On the contrary, there was an insistent demand from the President that we spend $40,000,000 at the very least for four great battle ships, an amount almost one-third as large as our present total naval expenditures, even on the present inflated basis. Of course it is true that, under our present system, no one knows, or can know, much of what is going on. In a recent utterance Mr. Cortelyou, Secretary of the Treasury, expressed regret that the law compelled him to make estimates, which, he said, "are, for the most part, problematical." How problematical they were in this case will be clear, when we remember that Mr. Cortelyou figured that there would be a surplus for this year, the year ending with June, of $42,000,000. As we now see, the deficit is likely to be considerably in excess of $60,000,000. As most of our revenue is derived from taxes on consumption, and as consumption depends on the condition of business, it is manifest that any estimates of the Secretary of the Treasury must be "largely problematical." No private business that was conducted in accordance with such principles could hope to avoid bankruptcy.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me add that no public business conducted in accordance with such principles can hope to avoid bankruptcy. For these reasons, Mr. Chairman, I consider that the acquisition of additional land for the enlargement of Army posts at this time is the most foolhardy thing for which money can be expended. I would be glad to see every item in this bill carrying money for additional land go out. I shall point out when we come to the item appropriating for additional land for Fort William McKinley, in the Philippine Islands, that some men have almost gone daft on the question of enlarging military posts, as will appear from different parts of the bill where these absurd and ridiculous estimates are submitted.

The article just read makes one mistake; it says that there has been no warning from any responsible source. I undertake to say that unless that side of the House heeds the warning given by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, who has established a reputation for accuracy in foretelling the condition of the Treasury, that that side will be overwhelmed in the enormous deficit that the country will face in the approaching campaign. I say, God speed it, and as the deficit increases may the vote cast against the Republican party grow. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON].

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. MOON of Tennessee) there were—ayes 19, noes 46.

So the amendment was lost.

The Clerk read as follows:

Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind.: For the purchase for military purposes of land adjoining the military reservation, Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind., $100,000.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee how much land is proposed to be bought?

Mr. TAWNEY. About 300 acres. I will say that there is a triangular piece lying between the railroad and the line of the military reservation, and that is what, I understand, is to be purchased.

Mr. HAY. Is it not a fact that the Department estimated for 6,250 acres, at $750,000?

Mr. TAWNEY. That is what the Department estimated, but the only purchase we authorized is within the limits of the $100,000.

Mr. HAY. Is it not the purpose, however, to continue the appropriation from year to year until the $750,000 is expended?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman that it is just the opposite. As was stated by the gentlemen who are interested—not the Department, but Representatives of that State who appeared before the committee in behalf of this estimate—the purchase is for this particular tract of land, and when that is completed the further extension of the post will not be asked for. At least this was the statement of the Members who appeared before the committee.

Mr. HAY. In view of the statement that the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Minnesota, has made as to the finances of the country, does he think it is absolutely necessary at this time for military purposes to expend this $100,000?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will state frankly to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] that what actuated the committee in making this recommendation was this: This triangular piece of land lying between the railroad and the military reservation is becoming very valuable, parts of it is now being disposed of for saloons and for other kinds of objectionable business. If we delay the purchase the necessity for our owning that land and controlling it will constantly increase, and the price of the land will likewise increase. It was considered a matter of economy, as well as protection to the enlisted men of the Army, to own the land as soon as possible.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. CURRIER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 5999. An act to correct the military record of William Keyes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 14789. An act to amend an act entitled "An act for the protection of game in Alaska, and for other purposes," approved June 7, 1902.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Military post, Manila, P. I.: For the purchase of approximately 2,574.35 hectares of land for an addition to the Fort William McKinley Military Reservation, to be immediately available, $180,204.50.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. Mr. Chairman, as I understand this proposition, it is to add 7,000 acres to the post at Fort William McKinley. There are now 1,800 acres at this post. In the Army appropriation bill there is appropriated for barracks and quarters in the Philippine Islands $731,000, and of that $731,000, $211,000 was set aside for the purchase of land in the province of Luzon. I do not know of any other Army post in the province of Luzon that would or ought to take up any very large part of the $211,000 set apart for the purpose of purchasing land. It does seem to me that in the present condition of the Treasury, in the present attitude of the Government toward the Philippine Islands, with no well-defined policy toward those islands, it is bad policy to purchase large tracts of land in the Philippine Islands, particularly at a post where they have land enough to drill all the forces that are now in the Philippine Islands, or which at any other future time may be carried there. A very small proportion of the forces in the Philippine Islands are kept at Fort William McKinley. They are scattered all over those islands, and there can be no urgent military necessity for the purchase of this very large tract of land at a cost of $180,000. It is stated that unless the Government buys this land or authorizes it to be purchased now the option which the Government has upon it will expire on the 1st of July, and the Government will lose the opportunity of buying the land.

I think it would be a very fortunate thing if the Government should have that option expire before the appropriation was made and before the land was bought. If this appropriation were made, there would be in the neighborhood of $400,000 appropriated for the purchase of land for military purposes in Luzon alone. It seems to me, with the warning of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations ringing in our ears, when it is not necessary from a military standpoint, when it is not necessary from any standpoint, that for the Government to expend this large sum of money is poor policy, and the committee ought to strike this appropriation from the bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman, I believe, stated that some $200,000 had been appropriated in the bill coming from this committee.

Mr. HAY. Seven hundred and thirty-one thousand dollars in all, and $211,000 for the province of Luzon.

Mr. SHERLEY. Was there any testimony before the committee as to what this $211,000 was to be expended for?

Mr. HAY. There was not. It was a statement made by the Quartermaster-General, sent in after his examination was made, and he was not questioned directly upon what land he proposed to buy with the $211,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. Can the gentleman tell us where the other money was to be expended?

Mr. HAY. The $211,000?

Mr. SHERLEY. No; I understood the gentleman to speak of $731,000.

Mr. HAY. Yes; I hand the gentleman a copy of the hearings on the military appropriation bill. The table therein shows where all that is to be expended.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, in a humble way I have been endeavoring to cooperate with the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY], the chairman of the committee, in his very commendable effort to prevent a raid upon the Treasury that will exhaust the cash resources of the United States. I have felt it to be my duty to indicate where these savings might be made without impairing the efficiency of administration. We are confronted right now in the consideration of this bill with an item where we can save a large sum of money and certainly do the Government no harm. It is urged that we ought to hasten to purchase these 6,000 and odd acres of land that the Government holds an option on, because the price may advance. On the other hand, we are told by the Secretary of War and by other gentlemen who are interested in the Philippine Islands, politically or commercially, that unless the methods of this Government are changed, unless we amend and liberalize our laws for the benefit of the trade of the Philippine Islands, that the depression which now exists in those islands will go on until the people are driven into revolt by an absolute subsidence of all profitable trade and a marked decline in all values.

We can save in this paragraph alone the sum of $180,204, not a great amount, Mr. Chairman, but enough to postpone by some little degree the evil day when the cash balance, that has been so much the object of pride with many gentlemen in this House, will have finally disappeared.

The morning papers report that my few observations here the other day on the extravagances of Congress had fallen under the observation of some of the leaders of the opposition party, and that it was not unlikely that they would do me the honor of copying the speech and sending it broadcast through the country as a campaign document. I shall be grateful to those gentlemen if they will carry that threat into execution, provided they will be reasonably honest and print the whole of it. I particularly called attention to the fact that no work of a public character, no appropriation tending to develop the commerce of the country, no appropriation for rivers and harbors, intended to promote the means of transportation and to multiply the facilities of commerce, need be impaired, and that the appropriations need not be lessened, but I thought a great saving, $75,000,000, certainly, and perhaps $150,000,000 to $200,000,000 more, might be made by curbing exepnses in the very island for which this $180,000 is to be appropriated.

I hope that when they do me the honor of copying that speech they will not fail to include the concluding paragraphs, in which I indicate that if we would but restrict the appropriations for military matters, and if we would but curb our ambition to become the great naval power of the world, we could save enough money to promote all commercial legislative work and not exhaust the Treasury at the same time. Mr. Chairman, here is an opportunity for gentlemen who are disposed to be economical, here is an opportunity for gentlemen who want to see rivers improved and harbors deepened and public buildings erected, to vote as they would like to do and not as may be dictated by a policy of the dominant party. Let the majority abandon the Philippine schemes, let the majority give up the un-American colonial enterprises in which they are engaged, and devote the American dollars, collected by taxation from our people, to the development of our own continent, and there will be no word of criticism from me and no vote of disapproval from the people. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the land in question is now and has for a long time been in the actual use and occupancy of the United States as a part of this military post. It has been leased by the Government of the United States, and that lease gives to the Government the option of buying the property at any time before the 1st day of next July. At that time this option becomes forfeited. I see my friend from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] shakes his head, but I think that he will find that I am correct, that the property is actually used and occupied by the Government now, and has been for a considerable time past, under a lease from the owners of it. This is a brigade post, at which it is essential to carry on artillery practice.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Oh, certainly.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman if it was not equally true when the original purchase was made, according to the testimony and the recommendation of General Chaffee, at that time in command, that 1,800 acres was deemed entirely adequate?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Eighteen hundred acres was entirely adequate so long as the property of others could be used for drilling purposes and for target practice.

Mr. SLAYDEN. How many troops have we at Fort McKinley?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Well, I can not give the exact number of troops, but we have two regiments of infantry, two squadrons of cavalry, one battery of artillery, and one company of engineers.

Mr. SLAYDEN. In the island of Luzon?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. At this one post. Now, Mr. Chairman, I will send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read a letter from the Secretary of War on this subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 28, 1908.

Hon. JAMES A. TAWNEY,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.

SIR: I have the honor to urge the particular attention of your committee and of the subcommittee having in charge the sundry civil bill to an item in the current estimates of $180,000 for the purchase of a tract of land adjacent to the Fort William McKinley Reservation near Manila, P. I.

The necessity for this purchase and the reason why prompt action is important are both clearly explained in a recent report of Maj. Gen. Leonard Wood, commanding in the Philippines, as follows:

PROPERTY OUTSIDE OF MANILA.

(g) Addition to the McKinley Military Reservation: Fort William McKinley was built on a very small reservation and the buildings spread about to such an extent that very little ground was left for drills or formations other than the very limited space within the circles of buildings. As the country about McKinley is rapidly building up and much of it is under cultivation, the garrison is without any suitable ground for instruction. A tract of land of about 6,000 acres immediately adjoining the reservation has been leased; this land is excellent for the instruction of troops. It furnishes ample range for artillery fire. The lease was coupled with the right to purchase all this tract at the rate of about $30 per acre. This lease and option expire June 30, 1908. Since the option was secured the electric railroad has been completed from Manila to Fort McKinley and values have increased enormously. Unless we secure it under the present option it will be impossible to secure it except at a greatly increased valuation—probably two or three times the present figure. The War Department has approved the purchase and stated that appropriation would be asked for this purpose. It should be remembered that the appropriation must be made available between now and June 30, 1908.

We have expended large sums in building a permanent post at this site, near Manila, and it may be regarded as the garrison of Manila, and Manila itself is the most important post for us to hold in all the islands.

Therefore it will require, as long as we hold the Philippines, a large garrison of mixed troops, and the importance of sufficient ground to be used as a target range and for other forms of training becomes apparent.

I desire to especially urge, in view of these considerations, the incorporation of this item in the sundry civil bill, with a provision that the sum appropriated shall be immediately available.

I am sending a letter of like tenor to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Appropriations.

Very respectfully, WM. H. TAFT,
Secretary of War.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, it appears from this letter as well as from other information in the possession of the committee that the question is not whether Fort William McKinley is to be enlarged or not, but a question of whether it is to be contracted or not. The Government has been using——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent to have five minutes additional.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The Government has already been in possession of this identical land under lease and has been using it for the same purpose for which it is now proposed to use it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Oh, certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman know how long the land has been leased?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I can not give you the exact date, but will say that it is stated in the report of the Secretary of War and the report of General Wood that it has been leased and occupied.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] permit an interruption?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. You say the Government has had the use and occupation of this land?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Under lease, with option to buy. The lease and option expire next month.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I will ask the gentleman if a while ago he did not vote against the payment of $18,000 for some land that the Government is using to-day for target purposes and appropriating without the consent of the people?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I will state that is not at all a similar proposition.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. It looks very much like it.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It may look like it to the gentleman, but this is the proposition that is before the House now, and I will show you that there is no resemblance at all between them. It is stated here by the Secretary of War and by everybody familiar with this case that, owing to the building of this new trolley line up to the vicinity of Fort William McKinley, and to the settlements growing about Fort William McKinley, every acre of this land is now worth three times as much as the contract price, and the question is whether you are going to let this option run out on the 30th day of next month, and then buy as much of this land as you want to at three times the price submitted in the contract, or whether you are going to take advantage of your option and buy the land now. I submit that there is no similarity between that proposition and the proposition of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON].

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Here is some land offered for $10 an acre and $20 an acre, that you got possession of and use and refuse to pay for, and which if you will get off of our people will get $40 an acre for.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Very well, put us off. We are apt to be put off the land in the Philippines. Our lease and option are about to expire. The land is worth about three times as much as we will have to pay for it, if any credence can be put in the testimony of the Secretary of War and the Quartermaster-General. The option and the lease on this land give us the right to buy it at a time when the land is worth three times as much as we could buy it for at this hour if the option did not exist. If we need any of this land we ought to buy it immediately under the contract and option that we have got.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman tell us what evidence there was that this land was worth three times the sum?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The statement contained in the report of the Army officers was that it was worth three times the amount.

Mr. SHERLEY. Where and when? I do not recall any such data as having been before the committee.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I will read to the gentleman from the report of General Aleshire, the Quartermaster-General, as follows:

The price of $70 gold per hectare is much lower than the Government can obtain again, and is very much lower than the adjoining land is now held, some of which is as high as $400 and $500 per hectare. Since the construction of the new electric railway and the proposed construction of other lines, all land in the vicinity is rapidly going up in price.

And I again call attention to the letter of the Secretary of War, in which it is said it would cost two or three times as much to buy it if the option expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, is it not a fact that the last time the proposition was up before the committee to buy this land they wanted more money than now?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. There never was a proposition to buy exactly this same land. It is true that when they proposed to buy over 7,000 acres of land they wanted more money than they want to buy the 6,000 acres of land.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman tell the committee what is going to be done with the $200,000 that have already been appropriated for the purchase of land in Luzon?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I did not understand the gentleman to state it was $200,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. It is $211,000. That is, that is already carried for the purchase of land in the department of Luzon.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY], as I remember, is a member of the committee that reported that bill, and I trust he knows what land they were providing for. This committee, at least, knows what land it is providing for. If the gentleman says that the land his committee provided for is this same land, then I am done.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is it not also true, though, that the Committee on Appropriations had no intimation of it and it was not brought to its attention at all, that there was this item of $211,000 for the purchase of land in Luzon?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It is true that the committee had no knowledge of this until to-day, but there is nothing to indicate here that the land there referred to is the land at Fort William McKinley.

Mr. SHERLEY. Nothing to the contrary.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Well, of course, nothing to the contrary.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's position is the most remarkable that he has ever occupied in this House. He contends that a proposition to purchase land is not to increase a post, but that to oppose it is to favor contracting the post. This lease was never heard of by anybody in the House until the letter sent to the Committee on Appropriations in January. At the last session of Congress the Secretary of War asked $265,000 to purchase 7,530 acres of land to enlarge a military post consisting of 1,800 acres of land. This addition would have made the post consist of 9,336 acres. I was somewhat instrumental in preventing that sale. This year, after one year's delay, they are able to purchase 6,437 acres of the same land for $180,000.

I have been informed that upon 1,000 acres of land it is possible effectively to drill all the troops now in the Philippine Islands. This military post consists of 1,800 acres, three square miles. The recommendation for its purchase was made by Doctor Wood, now the commanding general in the Philippine Islands. I will read two extracts from his reports to demonstrate the accuracy of the statement I shall make in a moment concerning him. He says:

At the present time this post (Fort William McKinley) is without any available reservation for movements larger than those of simple formation and close-order drills.

Mr. Chairman, this somewhat distinguished physician recommended the purchase of 17,400 acres of land at Camp Keithley Reservation, in the Philippine Islands, to enlarge a post now consisting of more than 17,000 acres of land. There is stationed at that post to-day one regiment of infantry and one mountain battery, and Doctor Wood states that the present reservation has been insufficient for the purposes of drilling and for artillery practice. Upon 17,000 acres of land he believes it impossible to drill one regiment and one battery. I undertake to say, Mr. Chairman, from this statement of Doctor Wood, that he would find it utterly impossible to drill a single regiment of the Army if he had the entire United States at his disposal. [Laughter and applause.] Just think of it! Asking Congress to buy 17,000 acres of land to increase a reservation now consisting of 17,000 acres of land because there is insufficient room to drill one regiment of infantry and one battery of mountain artillery! I think I see that old warrior [Mr. KEIFER], a member of the Committee on Appropriations, made speechless by the statement which is contained in Doctor Wood's report. [Laughter.]

We have at Fort William McKinley a reservation containing 1,800 acres of land. A lease has been made—I suppose, under authority of law. I know of no general statute authorizing the leasing of land unless specific authority be given. Under this lease it appears some unauthorized contract, similar to the one made at Fort Oglethorpe, has been made.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask five minutes more, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The same kind of unauthorized contract was made. The gentleman from Minnesota condemns the making of a contract for the purpose of acquiring land in this country, but approves it as wise business, proper business conduct, if it be to acquire 6,000 acres unnecessarily in the Philippine Islands. When are we to stop buying lands in the Philippine Islands, or how much are we to expend there? The Army bill carried over $700,000. This bill carries nearly $200,000. The committee rejected an item of $1,100,000 for the building of warehouses and $17,000 to enlarge the reservation at Fort Keithley, where Doctor Wood can not drill one regiment on 17,000 acres of land. How many other items are to come in the near future nobody knows. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the time has arrived when such influential positions with this Administration held by these distinguished doctors should cease. With doctors in command of the Army, doctors in command of our naval vessels, doctors tucked away in every conceivable position where the information they have unfits them for the duties to which they are assigned, it is time that some of these distinguished doctors should be permitted to practice medicine for a while, even if to the injury of the people of the United States. [Laughter.] This recommendation for 6,000 acres of land on which to permit a doctor to try to drill the Army, or a part of the Army, or a few troops, is preposterous. Why not take him and send him out to the public lands? They have already exiled one officer of the Army to an obsolete post because he thought differently from somebody else. Why not put this distinguished doctor out on some broad expanse of the public lands with a few troops, and after some practice, not in the clubs or in the royal palaces which he is permitted to occupy, but on the broad plains, with soldiers, perhaps he would be able to drill one battery and one regiment of infantry on something less than 17,000 acres of land.

I submit that it is time a halt should be called. This is a good time to practice the economy that is preached. This is a good time to stop these extravagant and unjustifiable expenditures. If we wish to buy a summer resort in the Philippine Islands, why not be frank about it? Why not say, "For one summer resort on the top of a mountain with an unpronounceable name, for the benefit of the physicians assigned to the command of the Army, $180,000?" Then we would be honest with the doctors and honest with ourselves. I hope the motion will prevail.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's speech does not persuade me, but the item in the bill surprises me and should be well considered before adoption. It is here proposed to purchase land to the extent of 6,360 acres, or almost a township in extent. I would not criticise the item reported because the commander in chief of the Army happens to be a medical doctor. His opinion upon the price of land may be good, but I would be apprehensive of the wisdom of such an appropriation, which to my mind, on the information which I now have, would involve the most outrageously extravagant expenditure of public money that I have seen since I have been a Member of this House. [Applause.] I can not vote because I am paired. Therefore, I propose to make my speech against this proposed appropriation. I am informed by men who have visited this post that it is not only elegant, but that it is almost extravagant in many of its appointments.

I am not disposed to criticise people who desire the luxuries of life and great comforts, but I would be disposed to criticise members of this Government and Government officials who insist upon taking money from the Treasury—which, in my judgment, they should not take—for such purpose as this. Six thousand three hundred acres of land to drill a few regiments of soldiers upon! Gentlemen who are capable of making quick calculations can tell me how many square miles of land that amounts to.

Several MEMBERS. Ten.

Mr. BUTLER. The mathematicians answer 10 square miles of ground. A cannon ball could hardly be fired across it in the direction of its greatest length. Why should we comply with a request for this unusual and unnecessary outlay for a drill ground for the Army post at Manila? When we need money so badly for urgent and necessary purposes that press hard upon us Congress ought to withhold its consent from demands that appear useless and extravagant of this kind. We ask for information and receive the answer that the appropriation is recommended by the commander in chief of the American Army at that point. This reason does not satisfy me. [Applause.]

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I am confused somewhat between the two speeches just made in opposition to this appropriation. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] seems to be possessed of the idea that he is talking against an appropriation for the purpose of obtaining something over 17,000 acres of land for military purposes in the Philippines. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] comes more nearly to the real proposition, which is 6,400 acres. I do not differ very much with the latter gentleman as to the amount of acres proposed by the paragraph to be purchased. To be exact, the proposition is to buy 2,574.35 hectares.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KEIFER. Yes; but I do not want all my time taken up.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I merely wish to correct the gentleman's impression. I did not state that this was to purchase 17,000 acres of land. I said the recommendation to purchase it is made by the same officer who recommends the purchase of 17,000 acres of land in another place, because the 17,000 acres that there is is insufficient to drill one battery and one regiment of troops.

Mr. KEIFER. Then I understand the gentleman to say that in his opposition to an appropriation to purchase 6,400 acres of land he chose to talk about something else, and some other proposition at some other time, and urged it as a reason why this appropriation should not be made. I can quite understand his explanation, but I do not understand exactly why the distinguished gentleman from New York sets himself up as a military critic. I do not know his life and occupation. I do not know how much he knows about the area that it would take to drill an army upon.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I want to suggest that my colleague has had military experience, for he attended the last Democratic State convention in New York. [Laughter.]

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I accept the suggestion and take it as the best evidence that has been furnished to me that the gentleman is qualified to criticise a man who has spent all his mature life in the Army. He is qualified to tell us here on this floor how much ground it takes to drill the small army that we have now in the Philippines, and also to tell just how much area is necessary for the purposes of a regiment of infantry, and so forth.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Did not the gentleman from Ohio inform me that 1,000 acres of land was ample to drill the troops that we had in the Philippine Islands?

Mr. KEIFER. No.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman did, and I based my opinion largely on the information furnished by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KEIFER. I said that you could put the troops on a section of land, but when you come to drill them, that is another matter.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman stated positively that all the troops could be drilled on 1,000 acres of land.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman from New York is mistaken, not purposely at all; but what I mean to say is that we are expecting to have, from time to time, on the tract of land that is proposed to be purchased, all of the troops; they may not be all kept there. They can not be camped there and their camp changed from time time, policed, and all that without occupying a very considerable part of it. Experience shows that a small army needs a great deal of ground to camp upon, to have all the necessary police regulations about it, to have quarters for officers, to have barracks for soldiers, to have camps for the artillery, to have camps for the cavalry, and when you have taken up all the ground required for these uses, then you have the balance left for drill, maneuvers, target practice, and other purposes.

Parade and drill grounds may be large or small, but should be adequate. If you are going to drill by modern methods a regiment of twelve companies, three battalions, move them by battalion or by brigade or by divisions, you need a large tract of land, and especially if you have mixed troops, such as we are expecting to have here in drilling these troops and taking care of them and preserving their health.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEIFER. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Does the gentleman expect to see such a condition in the Philippine Islands as will require the assembling of an army division?

Mr. KEIFER. We have enough for a division there now. I do not say that they are all centered in this one place.

Mr. SLAYDEN. How many islands are they on?

Mr. KEIFER. I can not give the gentleman the information.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, there is a very good reason, in my judgment, why the motion made by the gentleman from Virginia should prevail, in addition to those already stated. I am quite sure that the Committee on Appropriations did not know—certainly I, as a member of that committee, did not know—that we have just carried in the Army appropriation bill an item of $731,000 for barracks and quarters in the Philippine Islands, and of that sum it is proposed to expend $211,807 in the Department of Luzon. Now, if just outside of Manila you can buy 6,000 acres of land for $180,000, I ask some one to tell me what is going to be done with the $211,807 that they have already got? How in the name of common sense this committee can afford, in addition to that sum, to appropriate $180,000 for the purchase of land on the Island of Luzon, I do not see. I am quite sure that had this fact been known this item would not have appeared in the bill now.

I am equally sure that we can not afford to preach economy about the expenditures at home and stand for such an appropriation as this. Why, we spent the whole of yesterday fighting up and down over items in order to save a sum total of $250,000. I fought against these increases, because I accepted the statement of the gentleman from Minnesota that we needed to go slow in appropriations. But if we can afford to give not only $211,000 to buy land at Luzon, but in addition to that $180,000, what is the use of bothering about a few little items expended by the Geological Survey? Why not just throw off the bridle and appropriate ad libitum for all sorts of things?

I am not a military expert, and I do not know how much land is needed to drill troops on, but I do know that there is not needed 6,000 acres of land there. I have seen something of this post. One of the reasons why it is to be made a great post is because it is near the city of Manila, not only on account of the importance of Manila, but for the convenience of the post. You will always find that Army posts of size are located where it is convenient for people to be, not only from military convenience, but from a social standpoint. And so there is a constant tendency to magnify the post, and I do not believe, without an explanation of what is to be done with the $211,000, we ought to appropriate this sum. There is not a line in the Army bill that restricts the expenditure of the $731,000. It reads as follows:

> For continuing the work of providing for proper shelter and protection for the officers and enlisted men of the Army of the United States lawfully on duty in the Philippine Islands, including policing, rent, and acquisition of titles and building sites and such additions to existing military reservations as may be necessary, including shelter for the animals and supplies and all other buildings necessary for the post administration, $731,022.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I want to state to the gentleman that the Senate has receded from that amendment.

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes, I understand; and I am coming to that in a moment.

The words "and such additions to existing military reservations" are in italics in the bill as it passed the Senate, and I understand in conference that they have been eliminated. But there is nothing that limits this appropriation and prevents it being expended for that purpose, and the justification for the appropriation before the Committee on Military Affairs was a statement prepared and sent by General Wood, which contains a statement—

> For purchase of land, Department of Luzon, $211,807.

Now, in the absence of any statement by anybody to the effect that this money will not be expended for that purpose, I want to know how we can afford to authorize the expenditure of $181,000 more.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. I ask unanimous consent for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEIFER. I want to ask the gentleman whether he knows where the land in Luzon is to be purchased by that appropriation which he just spoke of?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not, and that is the sad part of the whole situation. Here we have a divided jurisdiction, the Committee on Military Affairs having a certain jurisdiction and the Committee on Appropriations having a certain jurisdiction, and those jurisdictions overlapping, and instead of having that detailed knowledge that we ought to have we find here a statement that $211,807 is carried for the purchase of land in the Department of Luzon. Now, I again ask, Where will this land be purchased if it is not this same land that we are asked to appropriate this money for, or land adjoining it? There is no land in Luzon more expensive outside of a city than this land by Fort McKinley.

Mr. KEIFER. I agree with the gentleman that if this is the same thing this ought to be stricken out.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. If the gentleman will wait for a moment, I think I can dispose of this matter to the satisfaction of all of us.

Mr. KEIFER. I would agree with him in those circumstances—that it should go out.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I am happy to hear the suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH]. I would like to have heard the clarion notes of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY]. I fear that if this appropriation goes through that some unkind friend might suggest—

> Where, where, was Roderick then?
> One blast upon his bugle horn were worth a thousand men.

We remember his eloquent plea of yesterday, and it has pained me to see the distinguished chairman of my committee sit silent while this appropriation was being carried in the bill. Now, if the gentleman from Iowa assures me it is going to go out, I have nothing further to say.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask that I be recognized for five minutes in which to explain some matters discovered concerning this matter since I spoke before.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, immediately upon its being suggested by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] that this $211,000 was intended for the purchase of this identical land covered by the bill before the committee, I caused a telephone message to be sent to the War Department and am advised that this $211,000 carried in the Army bill does include the money proposed to be carried here. I may say that I do not think that it can be expended for that purpose under the language in the Army bill. That is, I think they got the money, but failed to get the proper language. It will be observed that the language in the Army bill, as finally adopted, is:

> Continuing the work of providing for the proper shelter and protection of officers and enlisted men of the Army of the United States lawfully on duty in the Philippine Islands, including payment of rents, the acquisition of title to buildings and sites, and including, also, shelter for the animals and supplies.

And so forth.

The only authority in the language of the Army bill is to acquire building sites, and I do not think that confers authority to buy 6,000 acres of land for an artillery target range. They have got the money in that bill, but they have not got the language.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is a good solution.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. And now they will spend that money, in my judgment, having obtained it, for barracks and quarters not contemplated by Congress.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The bill is not yet a law.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. That section has been concurred in by both bodies in the same language. It has passed both Houses in the same language. It passed the House and was amended in the Senate, and the Senate has receded from its amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Having come to some kind of an understanding about the money, what is the reason the language of the other bill can not be fixed?

Mr. KEIFER. It is too late.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The Military Committee had no right in the first place to carry this item at all.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What is the reason we can not beat it in the House?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. But when a matter has passed both Houses and in the same language the conferees can not change it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. But suppose we beat that conference report, then what will happen?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Then it will be for the conferees again to adjust the matter, and I think now that possibly the best thing that can be done will be to have the House recede and adopt the Senate language, with the understanding that this money was given in that bill. I am not abating a particle of my contention that this option ought to be exercised by the Government for the purchase of this land before the 1st day of next July, but I will be no party to the War Department getting this money twice, once in the military bill and once in the sundry civil bill, and I hope that this amendment, therefore, will carry and it be stricken out. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I will ask to have read at the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert on page 115, between lines 12 and 13, in said bill:

"Fort Sheridan, Ill.: For the purchase for military purposes of a triangular tract of land lying adjacent to and adjoining the military post at Fort Sheridan, Ill., and containing 11⅝ acres, more or less, said tract of land having a frontage on the west shore of Lake Michigan, in the county of Lake, State of Illinois, the sum of $36,707.50: Provided, That the purchase price to be paid for said tract shall include a settlement in full of all claims for damages to said tract and to all other property belonging to the same owner and adjacent thereto."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that amendment; I reserve it.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, the amendment just read embraces the essentials and the purpose of a bill which was introduced in the Senate at this session of Congress by Senator CULLOM, of Illinois. The bill passed that body, came to this House, and was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and that committee reported unanimously in favor of the bill. That is now the situation. I am advised by the distinguished gentleman, Senator CULLOM, to offer the substance of that bill as an amendment to the bill now pending before this House. I do not know that I can make it briefer or clearer in the presentation of this matter than by reading the several official reports that have been made in relation thereto. The paper which I have contains several reports, and I will read them in their order:

Mr. HULL of Iowa, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted the following report, to accompany S. 5665:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5665) for the purchase of land for the use of the military post at Fort Sheridan, Ill., report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

This measure passed the Senate on March 19, and as a very full report was made in the Senate, the same is hereto attached and made a part of this report.

[Senate Report No. 377, Sixtieth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 5665) for the purchase of land for the use of the military post at Fort Sheridan, Ill., makes a favorable report thereon to the Senate and recommends the passage of the bill with the following amendments:

In line 4 strike out the words "an 11-acre."

In line 6, after "Illinois," insert "and containing 11.5 acres, more or less."

After the word "land," in line 11, insert the following:

"Provided, That the purchase price to be paid for said tract shall include a settlement in full of all claims for damage to said tract and to all other property belonging to the same owner and adjacent thereto."

The matter of the purchase of this property has been pending in the War Department for a number of years, and has been given most careful consideration. Your committee concurs in the favorable recommendations made by the Quartermaster-General and the Secretary of War in the following indorsements:

[Second indorsement.]

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, February 28, 1908.

Respectfully returned to the Secretary of War.

The object of this bill is to carry out the proposition of the War Department to purchase a triangular tract of land on the northeast corner of the Fort Sheridan Reservation, bordering on the lake and understood to contain 11.5 acres, more or less. The amount herein named is that agreed upon by the Secretary of War and the owner of the land as a proper price to be paid for the land.

It is suggested that the bill be amended so as to provide for the purchase of 11.5 acres, more or less, instead of 11 acres, and as thus amended it is recommended for favorable consideration.

J. B. ALESHIRE,
Quartermaster-General, United States Army.

[Third indorsement.]

WAR DEPARTMENT, March 2, 1908.

Respectfully returned to the chairman, Committee on Military Affairs, United States Senate, inviting attention to the foregoing report of the Quartermaster-General of the Army, which states the facts in the case.

This matter is one which has been pending before the Department for a number of years, and to which the most careful consideration has been given by the military authorities.

The price for the property was determined by me after making a personal inspection of the property and securing what is believed to be competent and disinterested expert advice. It is considerably less than the value heretofore placed upon the property by the owner.

I inclose a copy of the bill amended as suggested by the Quartermaster-General and also amended to include in the purchase price the satisfaction of all claims for damages to this tract and remainder of the 31-acre lot belonging to the same owner and of which this triangular tract is a part, by reason of the proximity of the Fort Sheridan target range.

I recommend the measure as thus amended to the favorable consideration of Congress.

WM. H. TAFT, Secretary of War.

[Inclosure.—Amended bill.]

A bill for the purchase of land for the use of the military post at Fort Sheridan, Ill.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to enter into negotiations for and purchase of a triangular tract of land lying adjacent to and adjoining the military post at Fort Sheridan, Ill., and containing 11.5 acres, more or less, said tract of land having a frontage on the west shore of Lake Michigan, in the county of Lake, State of Illinois. The sum of $36,707.50 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for payment of said tract of land: Provided, That the purchase price to be paid for said tract shall include a settlement in full of all claims for damage to said tract and to all other property belonging to the same owner and adjacent thereto.

[The time of the gentleman from Tennessee expired during the reading of the above, but was extended for five minutes.]

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, I just want to say a word or two. I wish to say that the bill passed the last session of Congress for the purchase of this property, but it resulted that the fund out of which it was to be paid for was not sufficient, and therefore it was reintroduced at this session, and I hope it will be accepted as an amendment to this bill.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this is legislative.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. LAWRENCE). The Chair understands that the gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes, sir; I made it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee contains the following proviso:

Provided, That the purchase price to be paid for said tract shall include a settlement in full of all claims for damages to said tract and to all other property belonging to the same owner and adjacent thereto.

That proviso is not in the form of a limitation, but is affirmative legislation and so repugnant to our rules that the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 12, page 115, amend by inserting the following:

"Target range Fort Oglethorpe, Ga.: For the purchase of 924 acres of land adjoining the Catoosa tract and target range, Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., $16,500."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. TAWNEY. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided, and there were—ayes, 46; noes, 43.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Military prison, Fort Leavenworth, Kans.: For the reconstruction, upon land owned by the United States, of the military prison at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., the cost of which when completed shall not exceed $583,000, this amount to be expended so as to give the maximum amount of employment to the inmates of the prison, $100,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 115, in line 19, after the word "hundred" insert "and fifty."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the reconstruction at the United States military prison, Fort Leavenworth, Kans., on land owned by the United States, of a heating, ventilating, refrigerating, and power plant, the cost of which when completed shall not exceed $60,000, this amount to be expended so as to give the maximum amount of employment to the inmates of the prison, $10,000.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 115, in line 2, strike out the word "ten" and insert "sixty."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hereafter the location of mining claims under the mineral-land laws of the United States is prohibited within the area of the Mount Rainier National Park, in the State of Washington: Provided, however, That this provision shall not affect existing rights heretofore acquired in good faith under the mineral-land laws of the United States to any mining location or locations in said Mount Rainier National Park.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do this simply to say that this park was established in 1899. At the time of its establishment it was thought that the right to mine within it should be reserved, because there is quite an extensive mining territory in this region, and the provision was made authorizing the location of mines within the limits of this national park. Since that time, however, as I understand, there have been very few, if any, mineral claims established in the park. The Government is building a road into it at a large expense, and appropriations are being made for the purpose of improving it. Within the park is some of the finest scenery in the United States, and there seems to be no good reason why mining should not be prohibited within the park, and I am glad to see this provision inserted in the bill.

I withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. JONES] withdraws the pro forma amendment, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Vicksburg National Military Park: For continuing the work of establishing the Vicksburg National Military Park; for the compensation of three civilian commissioners and the secretary and historian; for clerical and other services, labor, iron gun carriages, the mounting of siege guns, monuments, markers, and historical tablets giving historical facts, compiled without praise and without censure; maps, surveys; roads, bridges, restoration of earthworks, purchase of lands, purchase and transportation of supplies and materials; competitive designs, to cost not to exceed $10,000, and selection of site (including all necessary expenses connected therewith) for a Navy memorial in the Vicksburg National Military Park, to cost not to exceed $200,000, commemorative of the services of the Union Navy in the operations of the Vicksburg campaign and siege, March 29 to July 4, 1863, and other necessary expenses, $100,000.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a point of order to the words "and historian," on line 20, page 120. There is no one of these various institutions of which I know that has found it necessary to have a historian as a permanent official under salary. And there is no authority of law for it.

Mr. TAWNEY. On what authority does the gentleman make the statement that there is no authority of law for this historian?

Mr. PERKINS. Well, I do not find any authority of law. It was carried in the last appropriation bill, not by any provision creating the office, but paying this gentleman now for the second year, and, for all I know, more years than that, this salary. I venture to say the gentleman can produce no statute of the United States which creates the office of historian to one of these parks.

Mr. TAWNEY. This has been carried for a great many years, and therefore the presumption is in favor of the existence of statutory authority.

Mr. PERKINS. Oh, no; not at all, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. TAWNEY. In view of the gentleman not being able to cite or prove to the contrary, I submit the presumption is in favor of the statutory authority.

Mr. PERKINS. My friend from Minnesota, I remember, once before made precisely the same point, that there was a presumption that law existed unless one could prove the negative, but he was not sustained by the chairman of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that in this case the burden of proof falls upon the committee, and unless the committee can produce something to justify the word "historian" the Chair will sustain the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Artificial limbs: For furnishing artificial limbs and apparatus, or commutation therefor, and necessary transportation, to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of War, $400,000.

Mr. MACON. I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee for a little information.

I notice this appropriation for artificial limbs is $280 in excess of the last appropriation. Will the chairman please explain why that is necessary?

Mr. TAWNEY. You mean $280,000 in excess of the last appropriation?

Mr. MACON. Yes, sir.

Mr. TAWNEY. What information does the gentleman want?

Mr. MACON. Why is it necessary to increase this appropriation at this time?

Mr. TAWNEY. For the reason that they are allowed every three years either a new limb or the price of a new limb, and this is the year in which they are authorized to have the new limb or the price. Every three years there is a larger appropriation.

Mr. MACON. Three years ago the bill carried $400,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. It carried more than that. A number of them have since died.

Mr. MACON. I just wanted information. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

So much of section 1178 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as makes a permanent indefinite appropriation to purchase trusses for soldiers is repealed, to take effect after June 30, 1909, and estimates of sufficient sums for the purchase of such trusses shall be submitted to Congress for the fiscal year 1910, and annually thereafter, in the regular Book of Estimates.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I reserve a point of order against the paragraph, with the view of finding out the extent to which it goes. I assume by a casual reading of the paragraph that it only undertakes to repeal the portion of section 1178 of the Revised Statutes that makes a permanent appropriation; but I had some apprehension that it might be construed to repeal also that part of the section that authorizes the purchase of trusses for soldiers.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Why, it requires an annual estimate in the same section. It does not mean to repeal the provision.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I notice that; but sometimes we get very inconsistent provisions in the same paragraph of a bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. It was not until here at this session that the committee learned of the existence of the appropriation out of which these trusses were purchased. In fact the officer of the War Department who was before us at the time the inquiry was made was under the impression that the trusses were purchased out of the annual appropriation for furnishing artificial limbs and apparatus or the commutation therefor.

Subsequent to that time the Department made an investigation and found that there was a permanent indefinite appropriation. Upon that information the committee concluded to repeal the permanent indefinite appropriation, so that we would know hereafter how much we were expending annually for this purpose, and require them to submit their estimates at the beginning of each session of Congress.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Well, I think it is important that the purpose of Congress in embodying this paragraph in the bill should be stated, and should appear in the RECORD.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does the gentleman fear that there would hereafter be no authority for an appropriation for this purpose?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is the question I had in mind; and were it not for the latter portion of the paragraph, requiring annual estimates, there would be very serious doubts whether it would or not; and even in that connection there is some doubt that might arise.

But with this expression on the part of the Committee on Appropriations in the Committee of the Whole House, that it is the sole object of the paragraph to repeal that portion of the section that makes a permanent indefinite appropriation, and not to repeal the part that authorizes the purchase of trusses, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman will notice that the language in the beginning of the paragraph says that only "so much of section 1178 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as makes a permanent indefinite appropriation" is repealed. Now, the section goes on and specifies the trusses that soldiers are entitled to under the law.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Well, I am satisfied. I do not believe in permanent indefinite appropriations when we can make annual appropriations. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the building of a retaining wall from Florida avenue to north line of hospital grounds on each side of Eleventh street; for macadamized driveways to replace gravel ones, repairing macadamized driveways, and repaving of gutters; for new cement walks to replace wooden ones; for installing fire plugs on ground, and for services of engineer to supervise all said work, $19,430, to be immediately available and to be expended under the direction of the board of trustees of the hospital, one half of said sum to be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia and the other half out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, to correct a verbal error.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 123, line 4, strike out the word "each" and insert in lieu thereof the word "east."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

California Débris Commission: For defraying the expenses of the Commission in carrying on the work authorized by the act of Congress approved March 1, 1893, $15,000.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to ask the gentleman from Minnesota what this appropriation for the California Débris Commission is for?

Mr. TAWNEY. A commission was created by law a number of years ago for the purpose of regulating hydraulic mining and the disposal of the débris coming therefrom on the Sacramento and one other river.

Mr. KAHN. If the gentleman will yield to me, I can explain it.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman from California is more familiar with this than I am, but there are two rivers in California that are navigable into which débris flowed, and this Commission is appointed for the purpose of seeing that the débris is kept from going into those rivers.

Mr. KAHN. In the development of the hydraulic mines in California the débris was allowed to flow into the San Joaquin and Sacramento rivers and their tributaries. In 1893 this Commission was created by act of Congress. Under the terms of the act the State of California pays one-half of the expense, and the Government of the United States pays one-half of the expense. The Commission consists of Army engineers and engineers of the State of California.

Mr. PERKINS. Do I understand that the pay of the Commission is for work they have done in clearing out the débris?

Mr. KAHN. No; not in clearing it out; but the work that is done is to prevent the navigable streams being filled up by the debris. When a hydraulic mine is located the engineers go there and find out whether the débris from that mine would interfere with the navigation of the river. They pass upon the location; and if it is found that the débris will interfere with the navigation of the river, permission is denied or an impounding dam is constructed at some place that will retain the débris or divert it and prevent it from flowing into the river.

Mr. PERKINS. Is this $15,000 a year paid to the Commission for salaries or is it the expenses that they are put to?

Mr. KAHN. The expenses that they are put to, and possibly a portion of it for salaries, but the State of California pays a like amount, and I believe it is principally for expenses.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman from New York that when before the committee General Mackenzie stated that the rivers are the Sacramento, the Feather, the Yuba, and the American. He also stated that the same gentlemen constitute a board in connection with the improvement of the rivers, working in connection with the State of California.

Mr. BONYNGE. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk as an additional paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Fort Logan, Colo.: For the purchase of 340 acres of land adjoining the military post at Fort Logan, Colo., required for use as additional parade ground and additional reservoir site, $110,100.

Mr. TAWNEY. I reserve a point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota reserves a point of order.

Mr. BONYNGE. If the gentleman intends to make a point of order, I do not care to discuss the proposition. I want to know what the point of order is.

Mr. TAWNEY. I have reserved a point of order in order to ascertain whether it is authorized by law. I do not know, and I make the point of order on that ground.

Mr. BONYNGE. There was a ruling by the Chair only a short time ago that the purchase of additional ground for an authorized post, contiguous to the post, is in order.

Mr. TAWNEY. Adjoining.

Mr. BONYNGE. This is adjoining the Fort Logan post.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does the gentleman's amendment in describing the land say that it is adjoining the fort?

Mr. BONYNGE. Yes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I should like to reserve a point of order until I hear the amendment read again. I understood it to be for a maneuver ground.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I make no point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota make any point of order?

Mr. TAWNEY. No, sir.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I reserve a point of order.

Mr. BONYNGE. If the gentleman from New York has any point of order to be made, I desire to have it disposed of before the merits of the proposition are discussed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. My point of order is that it is not germane to this portion of the bill, which relates to a national park.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, it is offered as a separate paragraph. We are considering the section of the bill relating to the War Department. The whole subject is still under the subdivision of the bill making appropriations for the War Department, and this is germane to that general subject of the bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. I would ask the gentleman from Colorado if the Department submitted an estimate for the purchase of this land.

Mr. BONYNGE. The Department has recommended its purchase for this specific amount, and made an investigation——

Mr. TAWNEY. When?

Mr. BONYNGE. The report was made to the Senate. The Senate bill is now pending before the Committee on Military Affairs, and I have a report from the Assistant Secretary, and a letter from Mr. Secretary Taft to one of the Senators, which is published in their report; also the report of General Bell, in which he says that he does not know of any post——

Mr. TAWNEY. As a matter of fact, the Department, upon its own initiative, has never estimated for the purchase of this land?

Mr. BONYNGE. Has never estimated for the purchase of the land; but this specific proposition for the purchase of the land was presented to them.

Mr. TAWNEY. Oh, the War Department will make a recommendation on any old thing that is sent down there with a request for a recommendation.

Mr. BONYNGE. I will wait until the Chair rules on the point of order. Then I will reply to the point of the gentleman from Minnesota. First, I desire to dispose of the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, an amendment germane to the bill as a whole must be offered in the appropriate place. There is a ruling that where a bill is considered under exceptional circumstances and the amendment is germane to the bill as a whole, it may be offered even where it is not germane to the subject-matter just read. The committee has passed that portion of the bill providing for the enlargement of military posts and is now considering provisions relating to the national parks. The provision relating to the enlargement of military posts has been passed.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, in answer to what the gentleman from New York has said, I call attention to the fact that on page 87 of the bill is a subdivision of the War Department—"Armories and arsenals"—and that continues until we come to page 141—all provisions relating to the War Department and all under the head of the War Department.

At page 141 we commence a new subdivision, entitled "Under the Department of Justice." It would be no more germane to offer my amendment as a separate paragraph after Fort Leavenworth than it would be after the particular paragraph where I have offered it. It has no more reference to Fort Leavenworth than it has to the national park. There is no authority cited by the gentleman from New York to sustain the point of order he has made that the amendment is not germane to the bill or to the provisions of the bill that are now under consideration. The subject of the amendment relates to the specific department that is provided for by the provisions of the bill now under consideration and for which appropriations are being made. It is, therefore, I submit, in order at this point and in this part of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the point made by the gentleman from New York is well taken. An examination of the bill discloses that various subjects for appropriation are taken up in order. First comes the "Treasury Department," and then comes the "Interior Department," and finally comes the "War Department," and under the War Department there are various subdivisions, first starting out with "arsenals," and finally coming to "military posts," "forts," and pages 114, 115, and 116, and other pages all have reference to "forts." It occurs to the Chair that when an amendment is offered it should be germane to that part of the bill to which it is offered. The question as to the germaneness of a proposition at any given portion of the bill has not been decided in exact terms. However, many decisions have been made which point in that direction, and while decisions have not been uniform, those most recently made have held that an amendment must be germane to the particular paragraph under consideration, rather than to the general provisions of the bill. However, an amendment germane to the bill as a whole, and hardly germane to any one section, may be offered at an appropriate place. Now, the question is, What is an appropriate place? Evidently that part of the bill at which the particular thing is being considered and dealt with by the amendment offered.

Mr. BONYNGE. Will the Chair pardon me?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BONYNGE. If the Chair will turn to page 109 of the bill he will find a subdivision entitled "National cemeteries," and he will see that there is no such order in the bill as the Chair has referred to. Let me call the Chairman's attention to the fact that under "National cemeteries" provision is made for these various military posts. So that the military posts are provided for under separate paragraphs under the subdivision "National cemeteries." Many of these paragraphs have nothing to do with "national cemeteries;" for instance, the paragraph entitled "Military posts," on page 113, or "Fort Benjamin Harrison" post, in Indiana, at page 115. Consequently, as the committee has not seen fit to make any such order in the bill as the Chair has based his ruling upon, I submit that the ruling ought not to be sustained.

The various paragraphs are presented in this bill promiscuously under the subdivision of "National cemeteries," and the committee itself having selected that manner, I submit that my amendment is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Colorado is mistaken in the statement he has made. Page 109 contains a heading or division of "National cemeteries," and "For national cemeteries" is a subhead, and "For superintendents of national cemeteries;" "Headstones for graves of soldiers," "Repairing roadways to national cemeteries," and so on, on pages 110 and 111 the same subject-matter; page 112 the same subject-matter; page 113 the same subject-matter, down to a new head, "Military posts."

Mr. BONYNGE. Not as a separate subdivision, but a separate paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. It follows continuously for military posts and nothing else.

So that the mere fact that the Committee on Appropriations did not make a new head there does not change the order in the bill. The order preceding military posts was wholly national cemeteries. The order following military posts is wholly military posts. Therefore, the Chair thinks the gentleman's amendment is not germane to this portion of the bill, and sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For clothing for all the Branches, namely: Expenditures for clothing, underclothing, hats caps, boots, shoes, socks, and overalls; also all sums expended for labor, materials, machines, tools, and appliances employed, and for use in the tailor shops, knitting shops, and shoe shops, or other Home shops in which any kind of clothing is made or repaired, $300,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. TAWNEY) there were—ayes 67, noes 50.

So the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WATSON, chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 21260), the sundry civil appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

INTERNATIONAL PRISON CONGRESS.

The Speaker laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which, together with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit for the information of Congress a report by the acting Secretary of State covering papers presented by Mr. Samuel J. Barrows, Commissioner for the United States on the International Prison Commission, setting forth the origin, history, scope, and object of the International Prison Congress and the programme of questions to be discussed at the next meeting of the congress, which, in pursuance of the invitation of the Congress of the United States, will take place at Washington in 1910.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 5, 1908.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 17516. An act to increase the membership of the Philippine Commission by one member, and for other purposes.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 5999. An act to correct the military record of William Keyes—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent leave was granted to Mr. HAWLEY to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Albert W. Kelley (H. R. 18837), Sixtieth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted to—

Mr. MUDD, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

Mr. BYRD, for fifteen days, on account of important business.

FREE ADMISSION OF MANGANIFEROUS IRON ORE.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Speaker, I present herewith a privileged report from the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolution No. 363.

The SPEAKER. It will be referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But, Mr. Speaker, the House is entitled to know whether this is a privileged report. It must know by the statement of what the resolution is.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that the Committee on Ways and Means——

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Committee on Ways and Means has the right to report certain subjects as privileged matter, and not otherwise. No committee has a right to present a report in this way as privileged, unless it comes under the rule.

The SPEAKER. That is correct, and the Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, requested to send to the House of Representatives such reports and documents as will show by what authority of law 207,068 tons of "manganese" ore (or manganiferous iron ore) were admitted free of duty at the ports of entry, New York, Baltimore, Boston, Newark (N. J.), Philadelphia, New Orleans, San Francisco, Chicago, and Cincinnati for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1907.

With the following amendments:

"On line 5, after the word "of," to strike out the words "manganese ore (or manganiferous iron ore)" and insert the words "manganiferous iron ore."

"On line 10, after the word "seven," insert the words "under the designation of manganese ore."

The SPEAKER. The resolution is referred to the House Calendar.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 21261, the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, pending that, I move that the House do take a recess until 11.30 to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York that the House do take a recess until 11.30 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The question was taken.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 74, nays 154, answered "present" 11, not voting 148, as follows:

J. V. V. OLCOTT,
E. L. TAYLOR, Jr.,
J. W. MURPHY,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. FOSTER of Indiana. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress:

Whereas great advantage to the mining industry of the United States and throughout the world can be attained by holding an international mining exposition, wherein all minerals of whatever commercial value, and all processes of metal extraction, and all mining appliances from any part of the world shall be eligible for exhibition; and

Whereas it is proposed to hold an international mining exposition from May 25 to June 20, 1908, at Madison Square Garden, in the city of New York; and

Whereas great progress will be gained for the various mining interests by the interchange of ideas from the different sections of the world: Therefore

The house of representatives (the senate concurring) of the Oklahoma State legislature in session assembled do memorialize the Congress of the United States to take such action as will secure from the Secretary of the Interior, through the Director of the Geological Survey, an exhibit of the United States Government for such international mining exposition;

And we do further memorialize your honorable Congress to request the President to invite the various nations of the earth to participate in such exposition on behalf of their respective countries.

Mr. GORE presented a concurrent resolution of the legislature of Oklahoma, which was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House concurrent resolution 34. [By Frank L. Casteel.]

Whereas the necessities of life for the maintenance and happiness of thousands of people in the arid and semiarid regions of the Southwest would be greatly enhanced by proper utilization of the available waters in our rivers and streams under a proper system of application and irrigation, which water must otherwise go to waste; and

Whereas there are great areas of land in the western portion of our beloved Commonwealth that can be successfully irrigated if the waters in our streams are impounded, preserved, and utilized; and

Whereas Oklahoma has entered the galaxy of that beloved constellation of sister States, the United States of America, and is entitled to all the rights and privileges of a great Commonwealth; and

Whereas Oklahoma has a quota, an interest, a share not yet apportioned to her in the Federal reclamation fund for arid and semiarid lands, by the right use of which thousands of acres of now unproductive land may be easily irrigated and quickly placed in a high state of productivity under a system of irrigation; and

Whereas the results of farming are uncertain in some of the counties of Oklahoma during most years on account of scarcity of rain, though the soil is deep and rich; and

Whereas other States have received great appropriations for the reclamation of the arid and semiarid lands located within their borders, which reclamation work has resulted in a state of prosperity, peace, happiness, safety, and civilization for thousands of families who have settled within those States; and

Whereas Oklahoma is adapted to nearly all varieties of agricultural products that can be grown from Canada to the Gulf of Mexico; and

Whereas this State is possessed of very rich, deep, and fertile soil in the western portion, and the soil in the semiarid region of Oklahoma has proved ideally suited to sugar-beet culture and to the production of cantaloupes, melons, onions, potatoes, and other garden products, as well as corn, small grains, and other valuable products of the soil where irrigation has been practiced by individuals, unassisted by the Government: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring) of the legislature of the State of Oklahoma, That we do hereby pray and memorialize Congress now assembled, and urge the Oklahoma delegation in the Congress of the United States and our Senators now in Washington, to give attention to Oklahoma's just claims, and we do beg the esteemed consideration of the Oklahoma delegation and do memorialize you to secure and provide from our great American Congress our full quota of the reclamation fund due and that may be expended in the interest of the State of Oklahoma by the act of the Federal Congress creating the reclamation fund for use in the several States.

We memorialize individually and collectively each Member of Congress from Oklahoma and our Senators now in Washington that they use their united energy and influence to secure at once our due and proper portion of the expenditure of the Federal reclamation fund for the reasons herein set forth, and to them each we do send a copy of this memorial.

We also memorialize our Chief Executive, Theodore Roosevelt, President of the United States of America, who has done so much for the advancement of the agricultural interests in the arid and semiarid portions of the United States, that he use his influence to bring about such action as will secure the coveted necessity—water for the production of crops in the western portion of our State, where during many years it is so much needed.

Passed house of representatives this April 20, 1908.

C. H. PITTMAN, Chief Clerk.

Passed senate by unanimous vote May 1, 1908.

J. I. HOWARD, Secretary.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I present the conference report on the Army appropriation bill.

I desire to state before sending it to the desk that the bill as passed by the Senate carried $98,840,409.12, and there have been deductions made in conference amounting to $3,463,162.51, so that the bill as reported from the conference stands at $95,382,246.61. It is hoped we may next year have no deficiencies, but I fear there may be a shortage in pay of the Army, notwithstanding we have in conference very considerably reduced the proposed raise of pay for both officers and enlisted men.

Mr. HALE. Is this a final agreement?

Mr. WARREN. It is a complete and final agreement upon the bill.

Mr. HALE. It is all disposed of?

Mr. WARREN. It will be disposed of when acted upon by the Senate and House. I report it here first, as the House requested the conference.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The conference report will be read.

COMMODITY CLAUSE OF INTERSTATE-COMMERCE LAW.

Mr. FORAKER. I offer a Senate resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission be, and it hereby is, directed to inform the Senate whether the railroads engaged in interstate commerce have, since the 1st day of May, 1908, complied with paragraph 5 of section 1 of the act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, as amended, popularly spoken of as the "commodity clause," and if there has not been such compliance with said provision, the Commission is hereby directed to inform the Senate whether such noncompliance is due to any agreement, arrangement, or understanding, of which it has knowledge, between the railroad companies and the authorities charged with the duty of enforcing said provision, that said companies shall have immunity from punishment for such violation of said provision, and if so, to inform the Senate fully with respect to the same. The Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby further directed to report specifically whether the Western Maryland Railroad, now being operated by a receiver, has complied with said provision since it went into effect on the 1st day of May, 1908, and if not, what reason, if any, there is for such noncompliance.

Mr. CULBERSON. Is the present consideration of the resolution requested?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has been read for the information of the Senate. The Senator from Ohio asks for its present consideration. Is there objection?

Mr. CULBERSON. I did not hear the first part of it. I ask that it be read again.

Mr. FORAKER. I have no objection to the resolution going over until to-morrow.

Mr. CULBERSON. I do not object to it, but I want to hear it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will again be read.

The Secretary again read the resolution, and the Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask the Senator from Ohio if he would consent to an addition in the form of an amendment, requesting the Commission to state the reason upon which they recommended the other day an extension of time for two years of this commodity clause?

Mr. FORAKER. I have no objection to that being added, if the Senator desires to add it, and will put it in such form as may suit his idea about it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

Mr. CULBERSON. It is to add:

And said Commission is also further directed to state the facts and reason or reasons upon which it recently recommended, in a letter to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, the passage of Senate joint resolution No. 74.

Mr. FORAKER. I have no objection to that being added.

Mr. ELKINS. There is one clause in the resolution which I do not think the Interstate Commerce Commission could report upon as well as the Department of Justice—that about immunity. They would have nothing to do with any immunity that might be granted the railroads. That does not belong to the Commission at all, and I do not think it is proper to refer that part of it to the Commission.

Mr. FORAKER. My idea about that was this: The Interstate Commerce Commission is charged, under the law, with the general supervision of railroads and with the enforcement of the statutes which Congress has enacted in that behalf. So if any part of any statute is not being complied with the Interstate Commerce Commission ought to be able to tell us, as the supervisory power, of that. All I ask for in the resolution is that they will report what, if any, agreement or understanding has been arrived at as a result of which the railroads are not complying with the law.

I ask for this information, Mr. President, only because it is necessary to an intelligent discussion of Senate joint resolution No. 74, which the Senator from West Virginia has introduced and which he is anxious to take up for discussion.

Mr. BACON. There is so much confusion in the Chamber I am not sure that I correctly understood the Senator from Ohio, and I should like to ask him——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia will suspend until the Senate is in order.

Mr. BACON. I simply desire to inquire of the Senator from Ohio if I understood him correctly to say that there was an arrangement under which the execution of a law is being suspended?

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I have asked in the resolution a report from the Interstate Commerce Commission as to whether or not there is any such understanding or arrangement or agreement; but the resolution does not recite that there is, and I do not state that there is. I have no knowledge whatever. I am simply inquiring for knowledge, and I am making the inquiry because of stories I have heard. I do not know whether there is any truth in them or not. I want to get the truth. Therefore I have asked the authority that I think can give us a true statement about it to furnish us necessary information, so that when the Senator from West Virginia calls up Senate joint resolution 74 for discussion we may debate it intelligently.

Mr. BACON. I made the inquiry because I heard imperfectly, and I was startled by the suggestion even that there was any power in this country outside of the lawmaking power by which the operation of a law could be suspended. I thought that was a matter exclusively within the province of the lawmaking power.

Mr. FORAKER. I am not startled by anything any more. I take things as they come.

Mr. ELKINS. I ask that the resolution be read again.

The Secretary again read the resolution.

Mr. ELKINS. I think that part about the immunity should be stricken out. It asks for the reasons why, and let the Commission reply, so far as it is informed, as to the reasons why. I am like the Senator from Georgia. I do not know who has the right to suspend the operation of a law or agree to immunity. I am sure that the Interstate Commerce Commission has not, but it will be the Department of Justice, if there is anything of that kind. I only object to those words, and I am quite willing to agree to the resolution except so far as those words are concerned.

Mr. FORAKER. The resolution calls for only such information from the Interstate Commerce Commission as that Commission may be able to give us.

Mr. ELKINS. Stop it right there, then.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not know whether they know or not. If they say they do not know, then we can ask the Department of Justice for information.

On that point I have no objection to preparing a resolution directing the Attorney-General also to inform us.

But this is a matter about which I agree with the Senator from West Virginia in his statement that nobody has any authority in this country except only Congress to stop the operation of a law, and I can not believe it possible that anybody has undertaken to stop the operation of a statute duly enacted by the Congress of the United States. I think, in view of what is being bruited about, the Congress of the United States ought to be officially advised as to whether or not there is any foundation for any such stories as are being circulated to that effect.

I think, as I said a while ago, it is necessary to have this information in order that we may intelligently discuss the proposed modification of the commodity clause that the Senator from West Virginia has introduced, and which, I understand, he intends to call up for discussion to-day or to-morrow, or as soon as he can be heard.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas proposes an amendment to the resolution which will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the resolution the following:

And said Commission is also further directed to state the facts and reason or reasons upon which it recently recommended, in a letter to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, the passage of Senate joint resolution No. 74.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio accepts the amendment, the Chair understands.

Mr. FORAKER. I accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas, and upon the suggestion of the Senator from West Virginia I will prepare a similar resolution for the Department of Justice, also.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is upon agreeing to the resolution as modified.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, I propose an amendment. I move to add, at the end of the resolution, "and said Commission is also directed to inform the Senate what railroads have and what railroads have not complied with the law, as aforesaid."

This law, Mr. President, known as the "commodity clause," if I recollect aright, was originally proposed by me and an amendment was added by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS], so that it was decided by the Senate to allow the railroads——

Mr. TELLER. We do not hear the Senator from Virginia at all back here.

Mr. DANIEL. I was about to say, Mr. President, this commodity clause was originally proposed by me and an amendment was added to it, I think, upon the motion of the Senator from West Virginia, to the effect that the railroads should have two years to make arrangements with a view to conforming to the law. This was on account of the fact that according to State charters the railroads were allowed, in so many words, to ship coal and other commodities belonging to or mined by them.

As I have been informed, and as I think it has been stated upon this floor, many of the railroads have been unable to make those changes which are essential to conveniently or without loss execute the law. It may be that when we know these facts the Senate may conclude that it should give them a longer time; but there has been no full and clear statement as to the railroads involved as to the amount of property concerned or with respect to any details of the situation with which we have to deal.

I think, therefore, the resolution offered is an eminently proper one, not only upon the point emphasized, whether or not anybody has undertaken to suspend or vitiate a law enacted by Congress. We do not know at this stage sufficiently the facts to express or vote an intelligent opinion on the subject-matter, and as we are searching for this information it seems to me we should get it as fully as we can from the source applied to.

It might be better to enlarge the inquiry and ascertain what amounts of property, what difficulties there are to the execution of the law, but it is to be supposed that under as broad an inquiry as the resolution would now carry the Interstate Commerce Commission would lay before the Senate a pretty full statement, and it might not be necessary to inquire further.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I propose an amendment which I hope the Senator will accept. It is that the Commission be instructed to report forthwith.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question will be first upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the resolution the following:

And said Commission is also directed to inform the Senate what railroads have and what railroads have not complied with the law, as aforesaid.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The Senator from Mississippi offers an amendment, which will be stated.

Mr. FORAKER. I accept the amendment suggested by the Senator from Mississippi. I understand it is simply that the Commission shall report forthwith.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add after the word "directed" the word "forthwith."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission be, and it hereby is, directed forthwith to inform the Senate whether the railroads engaged in interstate commerce have, since the 1st day of May, 1908, complied with paragraph 5 of section 1 of the act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, as amended, popularly spoken of as the "commodity clause;" and if there has not been such compliance with said provision, the Commission is hereby directed to inform the Senate whether such noncompliance is due to any agreement, arrangement, or understanding, of which it has knowledge, between the railroad companies and the authorities charged with the duty of enforcing said provision, that said companies shall have immunity from punishment for such violation of said provision; and, if so, to inform the Senate fully with respect to the same. The Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby further directed to report specifically whether the Western Maryland Railroad, now being operated by a receiver, has complied with said provision since it went into effect on the 1st day of May, 1908, and if not, what reason, if any, there is for such noncompliance. And said Commission is also further directed to state the facts and reason or reasons upon which it recently recommended, in a letter to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, the passage of Senate joint resolution No. 74; and said Commission is also directed forthwith to inform the Senate what railroads have and what railroads have not complied with the law, as aforesaid.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that immediately on the conclusion of the consideration of the bill making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture I will move to take up and proceed with the consideration of House bill 15372, commonly known as the "omnibus claims bill."

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. NEWLANDS was, on his own motion, excused from further service upon the Committee on the District of Columbia.

On motion of Mr. CULBERSON, and by unanimous consent, Mr. SMITH of Maryland was assigned to the vacancy upon the Committee on the District of Columbia.

EMPLOYMENT OF CHILD LABOR.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed, and the Chair lays before the Senate the bill (S. 4812) to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] has asked me that he might be allowed to conclude his remarks, which he says will occupy about thirty minutes, and, if no other Senator objects, I ask unanimous consent that the special order be laid aside until the Senator from Missouri concludes his remarks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the pending bill be laid aside until the Senator from Missouri concludes his remarks. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMPANIES B, C, AND D, TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, at the outset I desire to thank the Senator from New Hampshire for his courtesy.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays Senate bill 6206 before the Senate. It will be read by its title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 6206) for the relief of former members of the Twenty-fifth Regiment of United States Infantry.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I now come to the microscopic test of the guns of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, made at Springfield Arsenal, by Captain Hawkins, of the United States Army. This test is novel, its accuracy depending upon the assumption that the firing pin of each rifle coming in contact in firing with the primer of the cartridge makes its distinctive mark, which mark, by the aid of a powerful microscope, is distinguishable from all marks made by other firing pins, this although the firing pins are made as nearly alike as it is possible to make them with the most improved machinery.

Thirty-three of the exploded shells placed in evidence before the committee were subject to this microscopic test and were reported by Captain Hawkins to have been fired from five guns of B Company. In making the test Captain Hawkins fired two cartridges from each of the guns of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, and reached the conclusion stated by a comparison of the marks of the firing pins on the heads of each of the thirty-three cartridges with those on the heads of the cartridge shells he had discharged. Eight of the thirty-three exploded shells Captain Hawkins reported had been fired from rifle No. 45683, this rifle being charged on the property book of B Company to Sergt. William Blaney. The Blaney rifle was turned in by him to the quartermaster of B Company at Fort Niobrara on the 8th day of June, 1906, and was then, as Sergeant McCurdy testified, placed in an arm chest, where it remained until after the firing at Brownsville.

It is admitted that the four guns from which Captain Hawkins reported twenty-five of the exploded shells had been fired were in the possession of members of B Company on the night of the shooting, and that the Blaney gun was in B Company barracks on that night; but it is claimed that it was in the arm chest of B Company storeroom, and therefore could not have been used. From this it is contended that the eight exploded shells reported to have been fired from rifle No. 45683 were not fired at Brownsville, but were fired at some other place, presumably Fort Niobrara, where the Blaney gun was last used, and that the raiders or their confederates in some manner got these shells from the box of exploded shells, of which I have spoken, and placed them on the streets of Brownsville for the purpose of fastening the crime upon the soldiers. The 1,500 or 1,600 exploded shells in that box had been fired on the target range at Fort Niobrara from some sixty guns; yet, Mr. President, we are asked to believe that these Brownsville conspirators were so discriminating as to select from the box containing some 1,600 shells fired from 60 guns 33 shells that had been fired from only 5 guns. This is carrying the doctrine of chance to its limit.

The reason for B Company shipping this box of exploded shells from Fort Niobrara to Fort Brown, as given by Sergeant McCurdy, was that about the close of the target practice at Fort Niobrara the instrument with which his company decapped shells became broken and unfit for use, and hence the accumulation of these exploded shells. The target practice at Fort Niobrara continued to the last of June, according to the testimony of Captain Macklin, during which time B Company expended 17,500 cartridges. That on each day of the target practice the exploded shells were gathered up, decapped, washed, and dried preparatory to their shipment to the arsenal. The company received for each 1,000 a certain number of cartridges. During target season B Company shipped to the arsenal from 16,000 to 18,000 exploded shells. From 300 to 500 exploded shells were gathered up each day of the target practice, and therefore the box of 1,500 or 1,600 would have accumulated in four or five days at most; and as the Blaney gun, if the testimony of Sergeant McCurdy is to be believed, from the 8th day of June to the end of the target practice, was in the arm chest, these shells could not have been fired from that gun at Fort Niobrara, for that gun, as I have said, was turned in to the quartermaster on the 8th day of June, and the target practice did not terminate until the last of June.

Again, if the exploded shells were not cleaned soon after they were fired, the inside, from the remains of the powder in the shell, would become corroded, and a glance at such shells would indicate, even to the nonexpert, that they had not been recently fired.

The shells picked up by Captain Macklin at the mouth of the Cowen alley a few hours after the shooting, at least forty-five days after the target practice at Fort Niobrara and sixty-five days after the Blainey gun was turned in, showed no signs of corrosion. They could not have been fired on the target range there. Major Penrose, when he examined these shells, saw that they were clean and having the appearance of being freshly fired. This fact caused him to remark, "Macklin, this looks bad for our men."

The nine shells picked up in front of the Starke house a little after daylight on the morning of the affray, Mr. Starke, an expert in the use of firearms, testified had been freshly fired. They showed no signs of corrosion; they certainly could not have been fired at Fort Niobrara six weeks prior to the night of the shooting.

Mayor Combe, at about 10 a. m., on the morning of the shooting, called on Major Penrose and then informed that officer that there had been picked up on the streets of Brownsville some 75 to 100 exploded shells—used clips, as well as a few cartridges that had been fired. "Some of these," said Major Penrose, in his official report, "I examined and there is no doubt they are those manufactured by our Ordnance Department and issued to the troops." He then adds: "Were it not for the damaging evidence of the empty shells and used clips I should be of the firm belief that none of my men was in any way connected with the crime, but with this fact so plainly before me I am not only convinced it was perpetrated by men of this command, but that it was carefully planned beforehand." If these empty shells exhibited to Major Penrose by Mayor Combe failed to show that they had been freshly fired, certain it is, Mr. President, the skilled eye of Major Penrose would have been quick to have detected signs of their being stale shells, for, if stale shells, instead of being, in the language of Major Penrose, "damaging evidence" against the soldiers, they would have been exculpating evidence in their favor.

The undisputed evidence is that the main shooting on that fatal night of August 13 and 14 was from high-power guns. The cartridge of a high-power gun consists of the shell, the powder, and the bullet; yet the exploded shell of no high-power gun, excepting that of the Springfield rifle with which the colored troops were armed, was found upon the streets of Brownsville. We are asked to believe that the midnight raiders gathered up the exploded shells of the cartridges they fired while they strewed their path of crime with the exploded shells of the Springfield rifle, shells that had been filched from the box on the back porch of B Company. And here again let me remark that there is no known high-power gun from which the bullets extracted from the houses in Brownsville having the mark of four lands, in combination with the cartridges picked up in the street, could have been fired, except the Springfield rifle, and, as far as known, there was not, either at Brownsville or in that vicinity, a Springfield rifle in the hands of anyone excepting the soldiers.

The claim, Mr. President, that citizens of Brownsville did the shooting for the purpose of getting rid of the negro soldiers, either because they did not patronize the saloons and gambling houses or because their presence was distasteful, finds no reasonable support in the testimony. In the thousands of pages of evidence before us no proven or admitted fact considered alone or in connection with any other part of the testimony supports such a theory—a theory at once ingenious and inconceivable—inconceivable unless all of our knowledge relating to human friendships existing in the small towns and villages of our country, and, indeed, to human character the world over, is false. Such a theory requires us to believe that citizens of Brownsville entered into a conspiracy to terrorize, maim, and kill their unsuspecting friends and to accomplish these acts in such a manner that the terrorizing, maiming, and killing would be charged to the soldiers; that in carrying this conspiracy into execution, a handful of men, at the hour of midnight, clad in the khaki uniform of soldiers, armed with high-power guns and ammunition such as the negroes were armed with, met immediately in the rear of the barracks of the soldiers, either inside or outside of the garrison wall, and opened fire, so aiming their guns as not to scar the barracks or endanger the life or limb of the soldiers; that they then proceeded into the town, shooting into the dwelling houses and business places of those, who, like themselves, desired a riddance of the negro soldiers; that, in order that the evidence should point to the guilt of the soldiers, and to their guilt alone, these conspirators gathered up carefully the exploded shells of the ammunition which they had used and strewed their trail with exploded shells of the Springfield rifle, with which the colored battalion was armed, and then, that their crime might be fastened upon the negro soldiers beyond the peradventure of a doubt, this band of raiders marched to the saloon of one of the men who had been loud in demanding the removal of the negro troops and there shot down the barkeeper, Frank Natus, and on their way wounded the lieutenant of police (an officer without an enemy in the city), whose only offense on the fatal night was that, on seeing the raiders shooting into the houses, especially those which had lights, he, realizing that the lives of men, women, and children were imperiled, without counting the danger to himself, rode, amid a shower of bullets, through the street, shouting, "Put out your lights!" "Put out your lights!"

Mr. President, the proponents of this theory have not yet taxed our credulity to its limit. They show us the Yturria House, penetrated by three bullets, whose points of entrance, course, and direction furnish conclusive evidence that they were fired from the second porch of B Company barracks, and they require us to believe that these shots were fired by the conspiring citizens of Brownsville. That these shots were fired on the night of the raid there is no question; that they were fired from the second porch of B Company barracks is by the evidence put equally beyond question; and that these barracks were, at the time of the firing, occupied by negro soldiers, with a sentinel on guard, is also true. Who fired these shots from that point, Mr. President? The soldiers or the conspiring citizens of Brownsville? Did the genius of these conspirators take into consideration, in the arrangement of their plans, the question of marshaling this incriminating evidence, within the barracks and at the very doors of the sleeping soldiers, that the crime to be committed might be charged to the soldiers and to them alone? We marvel, Mr. President, at the deliberation of these conspirators, at their audacity, at their escape, and at their success, if such a plan formed a part of their enterprise.

I pass now, Mr. President, to a consideration of S. 6206, which I introduced on March 19, for the relief of certain former members of the Twenty-fifth Regiment. The bill reads:

Be it enacted, etc., That if at any time within one year after the approval of this act the President shall be satisfied that any former enlisted man of the Twenty-fifth Regiment of United States Infantry who was discharged from the military service as a member of said regiment under the provisions of a Special Order No. 266, and dated at the War Department on the 9th day of November, 1906, had no participation in the affray or guilty knowledge of the persons engaged in said affray that took place at Brownsville, Tex., on the night of August 13–14, 1906, the President may authorize the enlistment of said man; and any man who shall enlist in the military service under authority so given by the President shall be held and considered to have reenlisted immediately after his discharge under the provisions of the special order hereinbefore cited and to be entitled, from the date of his discharge under said special order, to the pay, allowances, and other rights and benefits that he would have been entitled to receive from said date of discharge if he had been honorably discharged under the provisions of said special order and had reenlisted immediately.

The conclusion which I have indicated to-day, together with those set forth in the report of the Committee on Military Affairs, will, I take it, indicate clearly the theory underlying this bill.

Permit me to add, Mr. President, that I offer this bill with my mind free from doubt that the assault upon Brownsville was preconcerted, deliberately planned, and executed by soldiers of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, and that soldiers other than those who actually participated in the raid must have known what was taking place, and hence were aiders and abettors thereof either before or after the fact.

Entertaining these views upon the facts, I am clearly of the opinion that the public interest demanded the termination of the contracts of enlistment of the men composing the Twenty-fifth Infantry present at Fort Brown on the night of the affray, and that the action of the President in discharging those soldiers, if I may be permitted to change the verbiage, as this in no sense changes the meaning of the resolution submitted by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] on the 21st day of January, 1907, and adopted by the Senate, was legal and just.

The President, at the time of promulgating the order discharging these men, had before him, as shown by his message of December 19, 1906, substantially the evidence which is now before the Senate for its consideration. Charged by the Constitution with the execution of the laws of the land, it became his solemn and sworn duty as Commander in Chief of the United States Army, when informed that an assault had been committed upon the homes and people of Brownsville, charged to United States soldiers stationed at Fort Brown, to investigate the connection of those soldiers with that assault. Did the President discharge this duty? We will search the records in vain, Mr. President, for an instance showing the evasion of the discharge of a public duty by the present President of the United States. Did he discharge it in an orderly way? Fifty-seven days were consumed in investigating the facts. Official letters, telegrams, reports, orders, and so forth, copies of all of which have been laid before the Senate, will speak the fact as to the thoroughness with which that investigation was made, and will disclose the earnest endeavor which the President made to obtain every fact material to a complete understanding of the situation.

With the evidence before him, with the case made, the further discharge of his duty required that he pass upon the question of the guilt or innocence of the soldiers. This he did, finding the fact to be that the assault was committed by unidentified soldiers of the Twenty-fifth United States Infantry, and that soldiers other than those who actually participated in the raid were accessories either before or after the fact.

The President's report of his finding is to be found in his message to the Senate of date December 19, 1906, in which he said:

In short, the evidence proves conclusively that a number of the soldiers engaged in a deliberate and concerted attack as cold-blooded as it was cowardly, the purpose being to terrorize the community and to kill or injure men, women, and children in their homes and beds or on the streets, and this at an hour of the night when concerted or effective resistance or defense was out of the question and when detection by identification of the criminals in the United States uniform was well-nigh impossible. So much for the original crime. A blacker never stained the annals of our Army. It has been supplemented by another, only less black, in the shape of a successful conspiracy of silence for the purpose of shielding those who took part in the original conspiracy of murder.

The President having made this finding, what action was he to take upon it, Mr. President? Was he to sit supinely and express to his countrymen a regret that the evidence was insufficient to identify the individual soldiers who actually participated in the assault and the other soldiers who shielded these and decline to take action of any character because the evidence did not identify the guilty individuals, and because of the further fact that there were still other soldiers in the regiment wholly innocent, notwithstanding his mind was free from doubt that the assault had been committed by soldiers of the regiment? Would such a policy satisfy the conscience of any man who would hold up his hand before God and the American people and swear that he would execute the laws of our land? What are the considerations, Mr. President, which should influence the judgment of any man whose official duty would require him to act upon such a situation? Would he not reflect upon the consequences of his action to our Government, to our Army in respect to its discipline and morale, and to the rights of the individual soldiers whose interests were at stake? And I take it to be fundamental that the rights of the individual soldiers must, if necessary, give way before general policies affecting the maintenance of the Government and the effectiveness of the Army. Such, I take it, were the considerations which moved the President to make the order which he made in this case, for in his annual report for the year 1906, a report which reflects the great ability of its author, the Secretary of War, in discussing this point, says:

Instead of giving to their officers, or to the military inspectors who were directed to make the examination, the benefit of anything which they knew tending to lead to a conviction of the guilty persons, there was a conspiracy of silence on the part of the many who must have known something of importance in this regard. Thus the murderers were taken back into the battalion and protected entirely from punishment.

Under these circumstances the question arises, Is the Government helpless? Must it continue in its service a battalion many of the members of which show their willingness to condone a crime of a capital character committed by from ten to twenty of its members, and put on a front of silence and ignorance which enables the criminals to escape just punishment? These enlisted men took the oath of allegiance to the Government, and were to be used under the law to maintain its supremacy. Can the Government properly therefore keep in its employ for the purpose of maintaining law and order any longer a body of men, from 5 to 10 per cent of whom can plan and commit murder, and rely upon the silence of a number of their companions to escape detection?

It may be that in the battalion are a number of men wholly innocent, who know neither who the guilty men are, nor any circumstances which will aid in their detection, though this can not be true of many. Because there may be innocent men in the battalion, must the Government continue to use it to guard communities of men, women, and children when it contains so dangerous an element impossible of detection? Certainly not. When a man enlists in the Army he knows that, for the very purpose of protecting itself, the Government reserves to itself the absolute right of discharge, not as a punishment, but for the public safety or interest. In such a case as this, the inconvenience and hardship to those innocent of participation or knowledge, arising from arbitrarily terminating the contract of enlistment in accordance with the right which the Government by statute reserves, must be borne by them in the public interest.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Senator from Missouri has spoken of the conspiracy of silence in a very effective manner and is making a very strong argument on that point.

Mr. WARNER. If the Senator will pardon me, I am still reading from the report of the Secretary of War.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Would the Senator object to a question?

Mr. WARNER. If the Senator will pardon me until I finish the reading of this quotation, I shall be pleased to answer him. The Secretary of War continues:

It goes without saying that if the guilty could be ascertained they should and would be punished, but the guilty can not be ascertained, and the very impossibility of determining who are the guilty makes the whole battalion useless to the Government as an instrument for maintaining law and order. The only means of ridding the military service of a band of would-be murderers of women and children, and actual murderers of one man, is the discharge of the entire battalion.

Might not any community into which the War Department should send this battalion, in which it is known that there are from nine to twenty murderers, justly complain that the battalion is not a proper instrument for maintaining the supremacy of the law? Could we properly send such a battalion to the Philippines or Cuba to maintain peace or furnish an example of orderly conduct? If a similar outbreak were there to occur, could we relieve ourselves from responsibility for it on the theory that we could not detect the particular ten or twenty who were guilty of the first murder?

Suppose a dozen men of the battalion stationed at Fort Brown in time of a war with Mexico carried plans and ammunition to the enemy on the other side of the Rio Grande River, and then returned under circumstances which made it clear that a large number of men in the battalion must have known who they were, but that every man in the battalion denied all knowledge of it, and thus all means of detecting the guilty were lacking. Would a competent general for one moment hesitate, in the interest of the public, to disband the entire battalion and discharge it from the service in order to avoid a repetition of the danger?

Can a real and logical distinction be made between the crime of treason, under the circumstances supposed, and the crime of murder in this case? Both are capital offenses, one perhaps more heinous that the other, and more dangerous to the Government itself, but in both cases it seems to me clear that the Government must protect itself and the community to which it is responsible from a recurrence of such offenses, not by punishing guilty and innocent alike, but by separating both the guilty and innocent from the service, so as to deprive the guilty of a second opportunity for such a crime, even though this may result in inconvenience and perhaps hardship to the innocent.

Now, I will say to the Senator from Michigan that I will yield to him, although I am speaking in borrowed time this morning.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I will not take much time; but the Senator's reference to the conspiracy of silence has interested me. I think it has been referred to before; and I want to ask the Senator if the conspiracy of silence, so denominated, may not be as consistent with the theory of innocence as of guilt? What would a man say if he were innocent? Nothing; absolutely nothing, except to protest his innocence; and if his life record is clear, his service in the Army without flaw, why should he not be believed, especially when no direct evidence connects him with crime?

Mr. WARNER. I wish to yield only to questions, because, as I say, I am speaking in borrowed time; but I think I catch the drift of the Senator's question, and I will try to answer him. If the men were innocent, then they could have had nothing to tell of the commission of the crime. If there were men in that command, eight, ten, or more, who were guilty, then there did exist a conspiracy of silence from the circumstance that not one of them disclosed a fact in relation to it. But whether their attitude of silence is as consistent with innocence as it is with guilt, I leave to the Senator under the evidence.

Mr. President, moved by these considerations and guided by the only rule which would prevent the Government from becoming helpless in its control of the Army, the President discharged "without honor" the soldiers of the Twenty-fifth Infantry present at Fort Brown on the night of the affray, and he has taken this action in pursuance to the authority of law vesting in him a discretion to annul enlistment contracts whenever, in his opinion, that course is dictated by the public interest, and it is pleasing to reflect that the legality and justice of his action in this case is unquestioned by the resolution submitted by the Senator from Ohio on the 21st day of January, 1907, and adopted by the Senate.

That the purpose of the order discharging these men was not to punish them is put beyond doubt by the policy which caused its promulgation. The Secretary of War says in his report for the year 1906:

> It is a mistake to suppose that this order is in itself a punishment either of the innocent or of the guilty. A discharge would be an utterly inadequate punishment for those who are guilty, whether of committing the murder or of withholding or suppressing evidence which would disclose the perpetrators of such a crime.

And the President in his message of December 19, 1906, says:

> People have spoken as if this discharge from the service was a punishment. I deny emphatically that such is the case, because as punishment it is utterly inadequate. The punishment meet for mutineers and murderers such as those guilty of the Brownsville assault is death, and a punishment only less severe ought to be meted out to those who have aided and abetted mutiny and murder and treason by refusing to help in their detection. I would that it were possible for me to have punished the guilty men. I regret most keenly that I have not been able to do so.

No, Mr. President, the President's course was dictated by the clearest public interest. He discharged these men not as a punishment, but for the "good of the service."

It has been charged, too, that the President's language which I have quoted in this connection was harsh and undeserved by the men to whose actions it was applied. But I submit that such criticism must fail of conviction unless an instinctive feeling of horror and indignation should not be aroused in the breast of every good man by the midnight assault which had death for its object and terror for its plaything, for let it not be forgotten that his language to which exception is taken in every instance characterizes the actions of the guilty, and the guilty only. Idiomatic English, however strong, can never slander the crime of murder, the man who committed it, nor the man who hides the murderer from the law.

From these considerations, Mr. President, it follows that S. 6206, which I introduced for the relief of certain former members of the Twenty-fifth Regiment, is not founded upon the theory that the President's action in discharging these soldiers "without honor" was either illegal or unjust, for I believe no such thing. I believe that their discharge was orderly and proper and legal and called for by the soundest public policy. But that there are men who came within this order who were neither principals nor accessories before or after the fact I have not the slightest doubt, and I am anxious for Congress to restore them to the Army and give them such other relief as may be proper. Hence the introduction of this bill.

From these suggestions it is apparent, Mr. President, that the theory upon which this bill is founded is fundamentally different from that upon which S. 5729, the bill introduced by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], is drawn. The latter proceeds upon the theory that the men of the Twenty-fifth Infantry were innocent, and that they were unjustly discharged, and hence that they come to Congress demanding as of right their complete and full restoration to the Army. I was under the impression that the divergence of theory upon which these bills were drawn gave rise to the objections which the distinguished Senator found to the bill which I introduced when he declared that its provisions conferring upon the President the authority to authorize the enlistment of any former enlisted man of the regiment, upon being satisfied that such man had no participation in the affray, reverses the rule of evidence that obtains in every civilized country by requiring a man to prove his innocence, until I had examined with greater care the Senator's bill. I am now convinced that I have not outraged justice in this respect and that I am not entitled to the honor of having offered a bill founded upon a rule of evidence which, in the language of the Senator, is "without a precedent in all the history of the liberty-loving, English-speaking nations of the earth," for my examination of the bill introduced by the Senator discloses the following situation:

Before giving eligibility to a noncommissioned officer or enlisted man belonging to Company B, C, or D to reenlist, this bill provides that such noncommissioned officer or enlisted man shall make oath before a duly authorized enlisting officer of the United States Army or Navy—

1. That he did not participate in the affray.

2. That he does not know of any soldier belonging to any of the companies who did participate in the affray.

3. That he had not at any time heretofore, and does not now, withhold any knowledge with respect to that occurrence which, if made public, would or might lead to the identification of any participator in said shooting affray or any accessory thereto, either before or after the fact.

4. That he has answered fully to the best of his knowledge and ability all questions that have been lawfully put to him by his officers or others in connection therewith.

Why, Mr. President, if these men are innocent, and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] says he believes they are, and he states that he has offered his bill upon this theory, why, I ask, should the Senator make their eligibility depend upon their making oath that they did not participate in the affray? Why should the Senator require them, if they are innocent, to make the further statement that they do not know of any soldier belonging to any of the companies who did participate in the same?

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, if the Senator does not object to my interrupting him, I will tell him why.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. WARNER. Yes.

Mr. FORAKER. I myself think they are absolutely innocent. There are others who think that although some of them may have been guilty of participation in the shooting or in the conspiracy of silence, yet a great many of them are absolutely innocent; and the putting in of that clause requiring them to again purge themselves was to satisfy some people who did not believe in their innocence to the full, unqualified extent that I do.

Mr. WARNER. The explanation of the Senator, of course, must be accepted; but certain it is, in the presentation of his bill to the Senate and the grounds upon which it was founded, I heard no intimation as to any doubt as to the innocence of these men——

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, there is none whatever on my part.

Mr. WARNER. And none has been given up to this time.

Mr. FORAKER. But if the Senator will be better satisfied with my bill, or the Senate will be better satisfied with it, I will be glad to strike that requirement out. If everybody believed about it as I do, it would certainly be quite illogical and out of place.

Mr. WARNER. But I think there was a purpose in it, if the Senator will pardon me—not a covert purpose, but simply a purpose as to its legal effect, I will say, for why should the Senator require them, if they are innocent, to purge themselves?

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator may know more about my purpose than I do, but I had no purpose except the one I have explained.

Mr. WARNER. I refer to the legal effect.

This is not the usual and ordinary test of eligibility applied to an applicant for enlistment or reenlistment in the Army; or why should the Senator require them to make the further statement that they have not at any time heretofore and do not now withhold any knowledge with respect to that occurrence which, if made public, would or might lead to the identification of any participator in said shooting affray or any accessory thereto either before or after the fact, or the still further statement that they have answered fully to the best of their knowledge and ability all questions that have been lawfully put to them by their officers or others in connection therewith?

In short, Mr. President, if these men are innocent and are basing their claims for relief upon their innocence, and hence upon the injustice of their discharge, why should the bill introduced by the Senator provide that their eligibility to reenlist shall depend upon their purging themselves by making any oath in denial of their guilt or guilty knowledge in respect to the affray? Why, Mr. President, should it impose upon them the burden of introducing evidence of any character touching their connection with that affray?

In requiring these men to purge themselves of the guilt of participants in the affray or of guilty knowledge touching it, the Senator recognizes that the rule of presumption of eligibility to enlistment obtaining in ordinary cases is in this case correctly and justly inapplicable.

To the suggestion that the eligibility of these men to reenlist in the Army should not be referred to the President, I reply that my examination of the records and testimony upon which the order of discharge was based has satisfied me that the President has exercised the discretion vested in him wisely for the nation and for the Army and with proper and legal regard for the discharged soldiers. I find no fault with the President, and, convinced as I am that his action in this case has been inspired by the highest motives of patriotism, I am all the stronger of the opinion that the Congress should remit to him the matter of doing justice to the individual soldiers of the colored battalion who may apply for reenlistment. Moreover, Mr. President, any legislation that implies a want of confidence in the President will not receive the approval of the American people.

I thank the Senate for the kind indulgence it has shown me and also the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] for yielding to me to proceed and conclude this morning.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, before my friend takes his seat I should like to get his personal views on the subject of the restoration of these men to the Army. I understand his bill provides that the question of the guilt or innocence of these parties, which is the crucial question upon which their right of restoration must turn, if I rightly understand the bill, is referred to the pleasure of the President.

Mr. WARNER. It is referred to the President.

Mr. STEWART. Now, I want my friend's views as a lawyer upon the proposition that such a question as that should be referred to one who has already prejudged the case, who has said in terms that are unmistakable, if I read his messages aright, that there can be no doubt of the guilt of these men. What is my friend's view as a lawyer, and an eminent lawyer, on that proposition?

Mr. WARNER. I thank the distinguished Senator for the compliment. I am one of those who believe that the President of the United States has a clear vision of the rights of the individual citizen; that he is intellectually honest and has the courage to act upon his convictions of right at all times and in all places, and I should regret to think that the day ever would come, or has now come, in my country when the Chief Magistrate of the nation, the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, could not be trusted to pass upon the question of the restoration of these men to the Army.

Mr. STEWART. I ask my friend if the same reasoning would not apply with just as much force to a judge of the Supreme Court of the United States? The Senator would have the same confidence in the intelligence and integrity of the court, but as a lawyer——

Mr. WARNER. I should have entire confidence in the Chief Justice or a justice of the Supreme Court, even though he had decided the question, if other facts could be brought to his attention to get a just ruling and decision. If I could not, I think the court certainly——

Mr. STEWART. My friend is aware that the first question put to a venire man in selecting a jury in the trial of a case is, "Have you formed or expressed an opinion on this matter?"

Mr. WARNER. We will not differ on that point; but that is not this case; but the Senator will pardon me now, as I desire to yield the floor.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I know the Senator from Missouri is feeling poorly. I was going to ask him his views on a certain phase of the case, but I understand he does not desire to speak further now, and therefore I shall not press the inquiry.

Mr. FORAKER obtained the floor.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was about to ask that the bill which was laid aside be placed before the Senate, but if the Senator from Ohio desires to speak briefly, I will yield to him.

Mr. FORAKER. I will be brief. If some one were to bring in a bill here providing that the question of the guilt or innocence of these men should be submitted to me, I would think it very absurd; and I would refuse to act under any such a bill, because I have expressed an opinion; I have a clear conviction about it; and I have stated it openly and publicly repeatedly. I would be an unfit judge. I do not think any different rule should be applied to anyone else who is suggested to act as judge where the question of guilt is involved; and therefore it was that when I made some remarks to the Senate the other day I took exception to that portion of the bill of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] which provides that these men shall establish their innocence to the satisfaction of the President. I pointed out how repeatedly the President had expressed himself as of the opinion that many, if not all, of these men are guilty, either of participation in the affray or of the conspiracy of silence in refusing to tell about participation and not helping to identify those who did participate.

I said in those remarks that I had no evidence that the President had changed his mind from what it was when he expressed himself as I quoted from his different messages. Since then I have read in a newspaper, the Times-Star, of Cincinnati, Ohio, what purports to be a dispatch from Washington to the effect that the President has written a letter to a member of this body, and—although it is a delicate subject to discuss in public or even to allude to in public—I think, in view of the fact that the fitness of the President, notwithstanding that former state of mind, is urged upon us, that we should have a right to show that the President's unfit state of mind continues. I do not say it in disparagement of him as a man. No one knows better than I do what great intellectual power he has. No one will ascribe to him more cordially than I will the possession of many attributes that we must all admire. But, Mr. President, this is a serious matter, affecting the rights of men with respect to the question of a crime, and I protest against their case being judged by one who has already prejudged it in hostility to them.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator objects to the President on the ground that he is prejudiced for or against. He admits that he himself would not ask to pass upon it.

Mr. FORAKER. I would not.

Mr. WARREN. Does not the bill which the Senator has presented and which represents his views pass judgment, so far as he is concerned, upon the matter?

Mr. FORAKER. No; Mr. President. My bill expresses my opinion as to what Congress should do, and my bill provides that when these men are permitted to reenlist and shall have reenlisted they shall be subject to trial by court-martial or otherwise for any crime which any man may be able to establish against them by testimony.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President——

Mr. FORAKER. Before I pass from that, if the Senator from Tennessee will pardon me for a moment, I want to finish the reference to the newspaper article.

Mr. FRAZIER. I wish to ask the Senator one question before he presents the newspaper article.

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. FRAZIER. The Senator objects to the President passing upon the question of the guilt or innocence of these men. I will ask the Senator if his bill does not leave the question to be passed upon by the men themselves?

Mr. FORAKER. I think not. More than eighteen months have passed since this affray occurred, and down to this moment, although, as the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BULKELEY] well said, all the machinery and influence and power of the Government which could be utilized for that purpose have been brought to bear to show their guilt, not one iota of testimony has been produced to identify any man as guilty. The statement was made by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], when interrogated in this Chamber yesterday, that, in his opinion, thirty of these men knew all about the affray.

The idea that thirty such men or thirty men of any class or kind could conceal all evidence of guilt during all this time, when everyone has been under surveillance, is a preposterous absurdity and an utter impossibility, to my mind. Therefore, I say, looking at this as a practical man, wanting to do what is right and just, I prepared a bill which allows these men to purge themselves. I put in that provision out of respect to those who agree with me that there should be legislation, but who do not go as far as I believe, that these men are absolutely innocent—every one of them; just as innocent as the President of the United States is innocent of this crime.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the Senator from Ohio yield to me for a moment?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes.

Mr. SCOTT. I should like the Senator to refer to the evidence of General Burt, who commanded this regiment for eleven years, and indirectly for sixteen years, and what he says in regard to their truth and veracity and honor.

Mr. FORAKER. General Burt said, in terms of the highest compliment, that they were a truthful, reliable set of men, and that he would believe their statements in a court-martial proceeding where they were themselves the defendants.

Mr. WARREN. May I ask the Senator a question? How long is it since General Burt commanded that regiment?

Mr. FORAKER. General Burt spoke of the older men of the regiment, whom he knew in person and to whom his attention was directed, and that is what he said of them.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator know how many years it is since he commanded that regiment?

Mr. FORAKER. No; but I do know that the President of the United States, in his communication to this body, has told us that in his opinion the guiltiest of these men are the old men, and especially the noncommissioned officers who were a long time in the service.

Mr. WARREN. I desire to say——

Mr. FORAKER. General Burt commanded it until he retired. I can not tell the year.

Mr. WARREN. General Burt did not, I think, command the regiment until the day he retired, because he was made a general officer soon after the Spanish-American war, and could not have commanded that regiment as colonel after his promotion to brigadier-general.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the Senator allow me to call his attention to General Burt's testimony, in which he referred to one sergeant in the Spanish-American war who was taken to Chattanooga and objected to being put in separate cars? He must have commanded the regiment until after the Spanish war, if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. WARREN. The record will show whether he was a colonel and commanded the regiment. He was made, as I say, a brigadier-general, but I am not quite certain of the date. General Burt has been on the retired list for from five to eight years.

Mr. SCOTT. They were under him.

Mr. WARREN. It is possible the regiment might have been under him in a brigade. Notwithstanding the handful of men still in the regiment who were in it when he was a colonel some years ago, he could hardly speak for the entire enlistment of the later date, because the majority of the men in the regiment would be those who enlisted after he relinquished command.

Mr. SCOTT. He did.

Mr. WARREN. General Burt is an excellent officer and entitled to great respect and confidence.

Mr. FORAKER. All that is quite true, and I will not say when he ceased to command the regiment. I thought he commanded until he retired. Of course the Senator from Wyoming may be more familiar with his record than I am. I do not claim to be familiar with it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator from New Hampshire bear with me for a moment? I would have been through before this if I had not been interrupted.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will, if the Senator proceeds without interruption.

Mr. FORAKER. I am much obliged to the Senator from New Hampshire.

I started to say that I hold in my hand what purports to be a telegraphic communication from Washington to the Times-Star of Cincinnati. I will not stop to read it, although I was intending to do so. It states that the President of the United States, since I spoke in this Chamber expressing doubt about his fitness to act as judge, has written a letter to a member of this body, the junior Senator from Michigan, Mr. WILLIAM ALDEN SMITH. I beg his pardon for mentioning his name. I would not do it or refer to this matter if my sense of duty and justice to these men did not require me to do it. In that letter, according to this newspaper article, he is reported as still continuing to entertain the opinion with respect to the guilt of these men that he expressed in the messages which I quoted. Inasmuch as those messages were a year or more ago and this is a very recent communication, if it be true that there is such a communication expressing his opinion on that subject, I take the liberty of asking the Senator from Michigan if he is at liberty to tell us whether or not such a letter has been received by him from the President of the United States; and if so, whether or not he is at liberty to put it into the RECORD, so that we may know, with respect to this matter, what I think we ought to know?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, the source of the Senator's information is given as the Cincinnati Times-Star. During the fourteen years of my public service I have frequently been in correspondence with the Chief Executive at various times and have taken the liberty from time to time of asking for information from him. But during all that time, Mr. President, never to my knowledge have I given public utterance to his expressions to me, whether it be the present occupant of the White House or any of his predecessors; and the information upon which the article referred to by the Senator from Ohio is based did not come from me. I have had no communication or intercourse with any representative of any newspaper regarding this matter, and I do not feel at liberty to make public the communication of the President. If its publicity is desired, it seems to me it may come with greater propriety from him than from me.

The inquiry which I made of the Executive was perfectly proper to make and referred to a publication which had come to my notice. But I do not feel at liberty to give the substance of or to publish the letter from the President. I am, however, perfecly willing that it should come from him; but so far as any attempt is made by others to quote it they must rely on their own information. I would not consider it proper to publish any correspondence with the President containing his views upon any public question.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from Michigan has answered in a very manly way, as everyone of course expected he would answer, knowing him as all of us do. He did not give this letter to the press. I did not know whether he had or not. There are only two parties to a letter ordinarily—the writer and the person to whom it is addressed. If the Senator has not given this out to the press and has not communicated with anybody in regard to its contents, I suppose it has come from the White House.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. FORAKER. That is only a surmise.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It will not be inappropriate for me to say that the communication is not marked "private" or "personal." The reason why I would not care to give out the letter is the one which I have adopted all through my public life—never to attempt to quote the Executive upon any written or oral relation that I may have with him.

Mr. WARREN. May I ask one question?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. Is the Senator from Ohio prepared to believe and to substantiate a statement that the letter to which he has referred is correctly quoted in the publication?

Mr. FORAKER. I have only this newspaper article.

Mr. WARREN. I did not know but that the Senator had other information.

Mr. FORAKER. The article does not purport to quote the letter in full, and I hesitate whether I should read what is here, which may be more or less garbled, or await developments. It may be, now that this matter has been brought to the attention of the Senate and the public, that the President will favor us with a copy of this correspondence. I think I will withhold quoting this until there is opportunity for him to do so, only stopping to say—as I have already in effect said—that the letter, if it be of the character this article describes it to be, shows what I contended for in the remarks I made here, that the mind of the President is made up on this matter, and to talk about submitting it to him as a judge is the utmost nonsense, just as much nonsense as it would be to submit it to me or any other man who has expressed his opinion over and over again and who has implicit confidence in the correctness of that opinion.

I have not any doubt that the President is of this opinion. I am not arraigning him for having that opinion. But that is another matter. I have undertaken to combat these ideas in my argument here. I am only seeking in this connection to put this into the RECORD—and I want it to follow immediately after what the Senator from Missouri said about the reasonableness of his bill—as a reason why the bill should not be passed, at least not until amended by the substitution of some other judge.

I think I shall suspend here and await developments.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask the Chair to lay before the body Senate bill 4812.

Mr. FULTON. I wish the Senator from New Hampshire would allow me to say a word.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will yield for a question.

Mr. FULTON. It is not exactly a question. It is a statement I wish to make.

Mr. GALLINGER. I prefer to go on with the bill.

Mr. FULTON. Of course I can make the statement during the consideration of the bill, and, if necessary, I will do so.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In pursuance of the unanimous-consent agreement——

Mr. GALLINGER. Just at this point I want to remind the Senator from Oregon of the fact that this bill was laid aside with the distinct understanding that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] should be given thirty minutes. It has been an hour and fifteen minutes now, but of course if the Senator from Oregon wants to occupy the floor for a few minutes——

Mr. FULTON. For just a few minutes.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will allow him to proceed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire yields to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I want to make a suggestion at this time, because it is in connection with what the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] has said and in connection with the question I asked the Senator from Missouri [Mr. WARNER], which was for the purpose of developing a thought I have in my mind.

While I have reached the conclusion, and the investigation I have given the subject has been a very careful one, that some few of these men were participants in the shooting, indeed were the ones that did the shooting, yet I have also reached the conclusion, as I think everyone must have who has carefully investigated the subject, that a very large proportion were absolutely innocent of any participation whatever in the shooting. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] has provided in his bill that upon taking an oath purging themselves of all participation in or knowledge of the shooting, the soldiers shall be entitled to reenlist, whereas the Senator from Missouri proposes that all these men shall have the burden upon them of establishing absolutely to the satisfaction of the President their innocence of any participation.

The Senator from Ohio says that one reason why he objects to the provisions of the bill of the Senator from Missouri is that the President has already committed himself on the subject. I do not put my objection to the bill of the Senator from Missouri on that ground. I put it upon the broader ground, which it seems to me must appeal to every man who loves justice and would protect liberty, and that is that the burden of proving his innocence ought not to be imposed on any man.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator was not here when I made the remarks to which I refer. If he had been he would have learned from listening to me that I had the same objection.

Mr. FULTON. I understand that.

Mr. FORAKER. This is only another objection I am urging.

Mr. FULTON. I understand that.

Now, I wish to say that I do not believe there were thirty persons engaged in that shooting. There may have been a dozen engaged in actually doing the shooting. There may have been a half dozen more who knew something about it. Beyond that I do not believe that these troops had anything to do with that shooting. Now, here is a great body of men who are unquestionably innocent, and simply because there are a few who probably were guilty, and because no one can point out or identify the parties guilty, it is proposed to impose on the innocent, as well, the burden of proving their innocence. How can they prove it? What are they to do to establish it? The Senator from Ohio proposes that they shall all take an oath purging themselves of any participation in it. What more can you do than put them on oath, make them liable for perjury, if guilty and if hereafter the facts establishing that shall come to light? This gives the innocent men an opportunity to purge themselves and then to be restored.

Otherwise, I ask the Senator from Missouri what he proposes to do? How are these men going to prove their innocence? What evidence are they to bring to show that they are innocent? How can a man prove a negative? How can he prove his innocence? If a specific act be charged against him, he can meet the proof offered in support of it, but how can he take up the burden of establishing his innocence?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. I desire to ask the Senator from Oregon a question. The Senator from Oregon explains that he believes that certain of these colored soldiers are guilty of having participated in the raid and shooting up of the town. Have not all of those soldiers already taken an oath that they were not concerned in the raid, and if they committed perjury in making that oath in that regard, would they not do it again just as freely when they reenlisted as they did before?

Mr. FULTON. Quite likely. A man who would be guilty of the crime of shooting up a town would be equally liable to commit perjury, and no doubt would willingly do so. But because men are willing to commit crime, are we going to subject all men to injustice? I suppose there are men in this town who have committed burglary. Are we, therefore, to put every innocent man under the ban? Are we going to impose injustice on him in order that he may impose some penalty on the unknown guilty? By what reason or analogy, upon what principle, I ask, do you propose to impose on the great number of these men who are admittedly innocent the onerous duty, the difficult one, of proving to the satisfaction of some official their innocence? I say it is in violation of every principle of law which we have believed heretofore to be necessary for the protection of individual rights and individual liberty.

Mr. WARREN. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator believes, and he admits he does, that certain of these soldiers are guilty, and that they will commit perjury when they take the proposed or prescribed oath. Then, why put them to that extra crime? Why have them take the oath at all? Why not let them go into the Army without an oath? Why put before them the necessity of again taking the oath and a certain number of them again perjuring themselves?

Mr. FULTON. The Senator knows very well while it may not be an effective remedy, one which will entirely prevent guilty ones from coming in, nevertheless it may operate in some degree as a bar to exclude them, because a man having a knowledge of his guilt will be a little slow to come up and take that oath and put himself under the control of those who will be constantly watching him, constantly seeking to discover some evidence of his guilt, and who will have him in a position where they can immediately arrest him if they do secure evidence of his guilt.

Mr. FORAKER. And not only amenable to prosecution for perjury, but to court-martial proceedings.

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Does the Senator from Oregon think that Congress should adopt a law that will restore perjurers and murderers to the United States Army?

Mr. FULTON. I ask the Senator if he knows of any individual who has committed perjury or murder?

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I understood the Senator to say that he believed that they had done both.

Mr. FULTON. I believe, not that they—no, Mr. President——

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I refer to members of the battalion which was discharged by the President.

Mr. FULTON. I say I believe some few of them are guilty. But does the Senator know what ones? Does anyone know what ones? The Senator knows that many of them were not guilty; he must know it. Does he propose to punish the innocent simply because he can not discover the guilty? Have we ever in our history adopted that character of rule in our jurisprudence, or in our legislation, the rule that simply because we are unable to discover the guilty we will punish the innocent?

EMPLOYMENT OF CHILD LABOR.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the bill (S. 4812) to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will proceed to read the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. NELSON. Is the bill being read for amendments?

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill first be read in full.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is being read in its entirety.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, while I introduced the pending bill, it having come from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia with their indorsement, I thought the bill properly belonged to the Committee on Education and Labor rather than the Committee on the District of Columbia, and I moved that reference. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER], the chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor, made the report, and I am very happy to pass the bill over to him for management.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, before I begin the statement which I desire to make in respect to the terms and provisions of the bill, I desire to make a brief statement in reference to the general situation of proposed labor legislation in Congress on the subject of the employment of children.

A bill was introduced by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE], undertaking to deal in a national way with the evils of child labor. That bill also is pending. Having been referred to the Committee on Education and Labor it is pending before that committee. The present session has been one of unusual labor for the Committee on Education and Labor; hearings have occupied a good many days of their time; members of the committee have been engrossed with other occupations incident to their service on other committees; and I regret to state to the Senate that the committee has had practically no opportunity to take up or hear or come to an opinion in respect to the bill introduced by my honored friend from Indiana.

Grave questions are involved in that bill, questions of constitutional interpretation and practical questions arising out of the nature of the subject. A good many people have advanced the opinion that it is of doubtful constitutionality for Congress to undertake to deal with domestic questions arising in the various States of the Union, and that the power granted to Congress to regulate interstate commerce will have to be strained, if not entirely overstepped, should we undertake to deal with that subject in that way.

Others of the committee maintain that this question is essentially a question for each State. They assert that thirty-five or thirty-six States of the Union have already dealt with it more or less effectively, and they doubt the wisdom of transferring to the arena of national legislation a question which appears to be peculiarly suitable to the legislative discretion vested in the lawmaking power of the several States.

I do not at this time state my own views, because they have not altogether ripened into mature opinions in respect to these matters, but I will state to the Senate, and especially to my friend from Indiana, that it is the purpose of the Committee on Education and Labor, as soon as possible, certainly within the earlier days of the next session of Congress, to take up the questions involved in his bill and endeavor, if possible, to reach a conclusion and place that conclusion in the form of a report upon the Calendar of the Senate. I therefore have indulged the hope that we might now deal with the questions about which we have undoubted jurisdiction and in respect to which we are the sole legislative authority.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I rise at this point, at the conclusion of that part of the Senator's remarks which were made after conferences with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] as chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor, which has the national child-labor bill in charge, and also with various Senators, to say that, in view of the Senator's assurance that the Committee on Education and Labor will soon take up the bill to which the Senator has referred, looking to an early report of the bill, so that the matter may be considered on the floor of the Senate at an early day next session, I shall not at this time offer that bill or any part of it as an amendment to the pending bill.

I had thought possibly that I might do that, but in view of the understanding that the bill will soon be reported and that surely next session we shall consider it, and also with that understanding, in deference to the desires of a good many Senators on both sides of the Chamber who have spoken to me personally about it, who do not desire at this juncture and in this connection to consider the matter in the form of a vote at this time, I defer offering any amendment to the bill now. I do that, as I said, in deference to the desire of Senators and upon the assurance which the Senator from Iowa has just given.

I want to say, if the Senator will pardon me just a moment more, that I shall expect a reasonably early report upon the bill, and I have been assured by practically all of the members of the committee on both sides, the senior Democratic Senator on that committee, the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER], and practically all of them, that that would be the disposition of every member upon both sides. I shall therefore expect a reasonably early report, and that not later than at some early time at the following session we shall consider the bill and vote upon it. The Senator from Maryland can bear me out in that statement.

Mr. RAYNER. As far as I am able—of course I am only a single member of the committee—I accede to that. I am opposed to the bill, but I certainly think it is deserving of discussion. I think it is one of the most important bills we have ever had before us, and I will agree to fixing any day for its consideration.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Now, just one word more and I am through, if the Senator from Iowa will bear with me.

I wish to say, further, so that it may go on record, that the bill was before the committee for all of the last session, which was three months. It has been before the committee again for all of this session, which is five months. I make no complaint whatever of the committee for not earlier acting; but now that the subject is up and this agreement has been reached, perhaps a further suggestion might be made, and it is drawn out by the statement about the legislation in various States.

As I showed last year upon sworn testimony, this is an evil which is of a peculiarly shameful nature. All the time that we have been waiting and delaying this bill hundreds of thousands of American children are being permanently ruined every year, and not less than 10,000 are being killed every year by this thing.

Now, as to the constitutionality of the bill, there has been an argument presented to the Senate last year showing its entire constitutionality, which the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] the other day referred to in too partial words, which I appreciate and for which I thank him, and that argument no man has answered or tried to answer. I was prepared to-day, except for this understanding, to go on with it. This agreement is the only reason I do not go on with it now. I merely call attention at this time to the fact that in the more than a hundred years of the existence of the Supreme Court it has never yet in one single instance failed to sustain any law brought before it prohibiting any article from interstate commerce, and to the further fact that there are now on our statute books about a score of laws prohibiting various articles from interstate commerce, some of them absolutely harmless in themselves and some of them involving manufacture. Now, that is all I desire to say. The statement of the Senator is satisfactory. Accordingly, I shall expect an early report of the bill, and at the beginning of the next session a consideration of it and a final disposition of the bill early in the session.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, I do not intend to detain the Senate very many minutes. This bill was rather thoroughly debated at a former session of Congress. It comes before the Senate to-day, I think, in a form materially improved as compared with its previous form, and I express the hope that it may be found upon examination to be satisfactory to those interested in the question.

I have been derided somewhat in the newspapers for having emphasized the importance of this bill and of legislation kindred to it applicable to the same subject. I have no apologies to make for the interest I have taken in child-labor legislation. I confess that I have been influenced largely by the opinions of educated and high-minded women all over the United States, who have, in the nature of the case, not only a peculiar interest in the subject, but a peculiar ability to understand it and a peculiar right to press their opinions upon the attention of Congress. They do not come to Congress very often with their views or their opinions; they are absent as an element in the opinions which we are forced to consider in respect to practically all of the economic questions with which the Government has to deal; but here is a question relating to the fireside and the home life of the American people, and there could be no better tribunal before which to submit such a question than the trained and skilled opinion of the women of the United States.

I therefore make no apology for the importance which I have attached to this legislation. I have been led to give it an additional importance in my own mind from the fact that we are in the District of Columbia behind nearly every well-ordered American community in respect to the provisions of our law covering questions of child labor. Nearly every great American State has seen and recognized the importance of legislation of this character. The District of Columbia almost alone among our American communities has apparently given no attention to it; its conditions have received no attention from the only lawmaking authority which exercises jurisdiction over it. I hold that that is to the discredit, in a certain sense, of the Congress of the United States, because we have here a great city, one of the great cities of the United States, and in the future, in my humble opinion, a city that will rank in population and in wealth with the great centers of population in our country.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. R. 74) suspending the commodity clause of the present interstate commerce law.

Mr. KEAN. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey asks that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered. The Senator from Iowa will proceed.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I have therefore been impressed with the importance of Congress giving attention at this session to the child-labor question in the District of Columbia, not only by reason of the demand for it arising from the nature of our situation here, but owing to the additional fact that other States are finding their way, slowly, it is true, to a solution of their child-labor problems, and it can not be without a high moral influence in these communities now engaged in the study of these questions that the District of Columbia has taken this forward step and has done it along the lines of the best models of legislation which have been afforded by the study of other communities.

I am not one of those inclined to speak harshly of those sections of our country which have omitted legislation of this character. We come of a hard-working race of men. We come, most of us, out of households where the labor of children was not only encouraged, but insisted upon, and there are some of us who are hereditarily old fashioned in our opinions as to what ought to be done in respect to the labor of children.

There are many occupations in which child labor is not only harmless but helpful in the highest degree. I will confess for one that if I had to choose between the idleness of children and their employment in some useful occupation, it would require a very strong argument to draw me toward legislation giving them an enforced condition of idleness.

But modern industrial and commercial conditions in the United States have practically made obsolete all our old views in respect to the work children ought to do. Those of us who have worked on a farm in our boyhood do not have the point of view which modern society requires us to take in respect to the rights of the children of this day and of this age. In the factories, in the mines, even in the saloons and theaters and places of evil resort in this District and all over the United States, indeed, children are employed; and the question is not only one of their occupation, but one of their moral character and their preparation for the business and for the duties of American citizenship.

So this legislation has arisen in these later years, not only in our own country, but in the great industrial countries of the world, not for the purpose of producing idleness among the children of the community, but for the purpose of giving them an opportunity for that intellectual culture and training without which their position in our life must necessarily be small and meager.

We have in the District of Columbia a great system of public education. It is compulsory in character, and we expend upon it annually the vast sum of $4,000,000. And yet we have year after year permitted hundreds—I may even say thousands—of children in this community to walk right past the doors of the schoolhouses, and through truancy or through the avarice of parents or guardians neglect the business of education that they may make a few paltry dollars for their own support and for the support of their families.

My position is that modern society owes to its children that leisure and that freedom from pressing occupation which, at least, is required to complete the education which the law gives freely to every boy and every girl in the United States. It is from that standpoint that a statute such as is proposed here makes especially its appeal to me.

Besides that, in the District of Columbia, from my own personal observation, from the testimony of intelligent men upon the police force, and from consultation with those who have, with a philanthropic interest, devoted some of their attention to the welfare of others and especially to the welfare of these little ones, I have reached a conclusion, and I think it is fully warranted by the facts, that hundreds of our children in this District have been allowed to drift into occupations which not only take away from them the privileges of education, but lay the foundation for that corruption of their character which no subsequent experience of their life can completely correct.

Therefore, in my judgment, it becomes a moral duty of significant influence and of tremendous pressure upon our consciences to put this District at least abreast of those communities which have successfully dealt with this question. This bill does that. I am aware that it is without any claim to being perfect, and I will consider very fully and ask the Senate to consider every suggestion that is made from either side of the Chamber toward correcting its imperfections—that is, making it more applicable and efficient for the business in hand. But when we get through with it, I want to be able to say on behalf of the Senate and of this Congress that we have done within our unquestioned jurisdiction a little, at least, to take these children out of dangerous and unnecessary employments and get them in the daytime in the public schools of the District and into their little beds at night. And with that I desire to add nothing further.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have three or four amendments that I should like to offer to the bill. In line 6, page 1, after the word "restaurant" I move to insert the word "saloon."

Mr. NELSON. Does the Senator intend to offer his amendments now?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; the bill has been read and it is now open to amendment.

Mr. NELSON. Before you go into that I should like to say a few words on the general subject.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. NELSON. If that will be agreeable to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. It will be very agreeable indeed. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I do not intend to enter into any extended discussion of this measure. I want to say in the first instance that I regard this bill with all its imperfections as a great improvement on former bills, and especially am I glad of the fact that it has given a species of immunity to newspaper boys.

I think in this matter of child labor there is a tendency to run to extremes. There is a tendency in our modern system of education to educate children away from work. I think one of the most essential parts of the education of a child is to bring that child up to work and to know how to work. It is just as important to accustom the child to labor to earn his living by the sweat of his brow and the toil of his hands as it is for the child to have a limited amount of book learning. I can not conceive of any greater calamity that can befall young boys than when there is no school where they can attend, when the school is not in session, when there is a vacation, to commit those children to absolute idleness.

In the country we know the boys and girls always find something to do on the farm. We know, as a rule, that when the children of farmers grow up they come to be the very best citizens in all this country. In fact, Mr. President, the intellectual and moral life in the large cities of the country would deteriorate in the course of a few generations were it not for the steady stream of fresh blood, fresh brains, and fresh vitality that is poured into them from the country.

Now, what does the bill propose to do in some of its features? It practically proposes to exclude all boys under 14 years of age from all possible employments in the District of Columbia. The range of employment in a town of this kind is more limited than it is in other localities or in rural communities. The bill proposes that no child under 14 years of age shall be permitted or suffered to work in the District of Columbia in any mercantile establishment, any store, any business office, any telegraph office, any hotel or apartment house, or in the distribution or transmission of merchandise or messages.

If we applied this legislation to our own body here, we would have to turn out most of the pages here. I called up one of these little boys a moment ago and asked him, "How old are you?" "I am 11 years old," he said. I called up another, and he said "I am 12 years old;" I venture to say that most of the bright boys that we have here in service every day are under 14 years of age.

Now, is it not an act of injustice and cruelty for you to commit these boys to a life of idleness when there is no school in session? Is it not as much a part of their education to teach those boys how to work and to earn their own living while they are growing up as it is to send them to school to learn a bit of grammar and a bit of geography and arithmetic?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am interested in what the Senator is saying about the lads not only employed here, but in the House of Representatives. I think it is the best school they can possibly find. It is interesting to state the fact that these boys are not neglecting their studies by any means. They have their schoolbooks here and many of them go to night schools. I will say to the Senator that I had been intending, unless he offers it, to submit an amendment to the bill exempting these boys from the provisions of the proposed law.

Mr. NELSON. That would be very kind. But why do you discriminate against the other boys? There are only a few who can get these favored places here in the two bodies of Congress.

Mr. GALLINGER. The other boys, of course, would include all other boys, and if we did that we would not have any law.

Mr. DOLLIVER. If the Senator from Minnesota will permit me, I would say that I shall offer no objection to his amendment exempting from the operation of this statute the children who are employed as pages and attendants in the Chamber of the Senate and of the House of Representatives. The two things that I have in mind—the moral and mental training of children—are not disturbed, I think, by their presence in the Senate; at least, I will not be one to admit that it is so.

Mr. NELSON. There are people outside of this Chamber who may differ with the Senator on that point.

I speak from my own experience, Mr. President. From the time I was 11 years old I was obliged to work for my living. When I was 12 years old I walked behind a plow and yoke of cattle and held the plow, and I want to say to Senators it was the proudest moment of my life when I was able to guide that plow and drive those oxen. I have always felt that whatever success I have had in life is owing to the fact that from the time I was a little boy I was obliged to work for my living; and I have always felt that the best part of my education was the education that taught me how to work and labor and earn my own living in my younger days.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator's experience in working as a boy, which many others on this floor have shared, was in the open air, as I understand it.

Mr. NELSON. Sometimes.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. At all events——

Mr. NELSON. I worked in a store.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. But at all events——

Mr. NELSON. I worked in a blacksmith shop. I worked in a paint shop. In other words, I boxed the compass when I was a boy in the way of employment.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. But the Senator's youth was not spent in cotton mills, sweatshops, nor coal mines, I take it.

Mr. NELSON. That is not involved in this bill. It is involved in the Senator's bill.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; that is the very point I was making. I agree very heartily with most of what the Senator is saying. The early employment of children in the open air at labor not beyond their strength undoubtedly helps to an upbuilding not only of their physical constitution, but to the formation of a self-reliant and independent character. I think that no human being who has studied this question seriously would object to that kind of employment. I am aware that the question that I asked is not covered by this bill.

But I want right at that point to emphasize a fact that I know the Senator from Minnesota heartily agrees with me upon, that such labor as he described, and which all of us agree to be useful—and all who have studied the question must so agree—is not the criminal, ruinous, and murderous employment of children in the mills, mines, and sweat shops of the country, which is the great evil which we must soon attack. It was merely for that purpose that I arose. I am much obliged to the Senator for yielding to me.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, the observations of the Senator from Indiana not being germane to this bill, of course, the Senator will excuse me for not replying to them at this time.

I desire to add that I think some of these reformers, while their intentions are good, are utterly mistaken. Their theory is that up to a certain age the child should be kept away practically from all kinds of work and kept in school when there is school; and when there is no school, kept in a state of idleness. They seem to believe that the whole education and development of a child consists in his attending school. I know of what I speak from my own experience—and I will give a little more of it—and I think experience is the best school. I attended one college for some three years, and after that I went into another college. I then enlisted as a private soldier in the United States Army in the civil war and served as a private and noncommissioned officer for over three years in that Army; I carried a knapsack and a gun; and I want to say to Senators that—of all the education and of all the training—the best training I ever had in my life was my three years and two months' experience in the Army of the United States. I learned lessons there that I never could have learned in any school. It not only improved me intellectually, but it improved me physically. I was trained to love and venerate this country and the flag of this country as I could not have been under any other circumstances and conditions.

While I am in favor of giving children a reasonable amount of education—that is, a reasonable amount of book learning—I do not want that part of their education which is essential to their development and well-being, to wit, that part of their education which involves their ability to earn a livelihood, to be repressed and checked. To my mind, it is as essential for a young boy growing up to learn how to work and to earn his own living as it is to go to school and learn what is laid down in the books.

Mr. President, I have often thought that in recent times in this matter of education we are running to excess. I mean by that not that every boy and girl ought not to have a good, fair education, but I think we are overdoing it to this extent: We are seeking to overeducate our people, and to educate them away from work. To my mind a boy or a girl, I repeat, ought to have a fair education, yet they never ought to be educated in such a manner that when they grow up to manhood or womanhood they feel above good, honest, hard work. We never know until we come to the end of our life's journey what may befall us, and that boy who is able to turn his hand to any kind of work and that girl who is able to turn her hand to any kind of proper work will be more successful and get through the journey of life more happily and comfortably than those who are brought up in idleness. The most helpless beings under the sun are some of the overeducated boys and girls who leave our colleges and go outside and hang around waiting for some genteel, kid-gloved employment; and if that is not at hand, they gravitate to a life of absolute idleness. Give me a boy or a girl who is not only ready to learn what is in the books at school, but is also ready to take up the tasks of life with all of life's burdens, whether they be manual labor or some lighter and more genteel work.

Now, take the bill which is under consideration. It proposes to absolutely commit every boy in this District, when there is no school in session, to a life of absolute idleness if he is under 14 years of age. What other employments than those named in the bill can a boy find in this District to engage in? He is excluded from the factory and the workshop, and it is all right to exclude him from them; but he is also excluded from mercantile establishments, stores, business offices, telegraph offices, restaurants, hotels, apartment houses, theaters, bowling alleys, and the distribution or transmission of merchandise or messages. Why, he can not even carry a package from a store to a Senator's house. If the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] were to go down and buy a silk hat at one of the stores here and would not want to carry it home, a boy, unless he was 14 years of age, would not have the right to take that hat up to his house.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I do not know whether the Senator from Minnesota is aware of it, but he has touched one of the most offensive features of child employment in the District of Columbia. Last night a lieutenant of police told me that, raining as it was, there were dozens of little fellows scurrying about this town, often in its lowest and least desirable sections, amid the haunts of vice and crime, carrying messages and packages. He also told me that nearly all the juvenile crime in the District of Columbia arose from the fact that scores of children are spoiling their moral character by this association with thieves and evil-minded persons in the lowest sections of this city, acting as messengers for merchants, for telegraph companies, and for others.

Mr. NELSON. But that is not all of the city of Washington. There is a good deal of the city of Washington that is respectable, where it is perfectly safe for boys to go. If this bill limited the boys to serving the respectable classes and in the respectable sections of the city, I think it would be all right.

Mr. DOLLIVER. That is not a practicable division of the city. You can not expect a telegraph company to discriminate——

Mr. NELSON. I want to remind the Senator from Iowa, in this connection, that there are adults who do not always keep away from those sections of the city.

Mr. DOLLIVER. That is true; but they are already spoiled.

Mr. NELSON. Unless the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] offers such an amendment, I shall move, in line 3, page 1, to strike out the word "fourteen" and to insert the word "twelve;" in lines 5 and 6 to strike out the words "mercantile establishment, store, business office, telegraph office;" in the same line, after the word "restaurant," to strike out "hotel, apartment house;" and in line 7 to strike out "or in the distribution or transmission of merchandise or messages." If the Senator from Iowa wants a limitation on that paragraph as to where these boys can deliver messages or carry merchandise in the city, I have no objection.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I have no dogmatic views about it; but I should like to see the District of Columbia at least present as fair an appearance to the world as does the State of Minnesota. Why should the Senator from Minnesota desire twelve years to be the minimum here, when his own State makes the minimum fourteen years?

Mr. NELSON. That is as to factories and shops. It does not include everything that this bill does.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I intend to examine it with a little more care; but I should like the District to be at least on a par with the great State of Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. It is on a par. We do not limit the employment as it is limited in this bill. The State law of Minnesota relates to shops, mines, and factories. But I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa or the other friends of the bill to point out, after you exclude boys from all the kinds of work named in the bill, what other kind they would find to do here in the District of Columbia? Would they not have to lead a life of idleness?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Not at all.

Mr. NELSON. What could they do?

Mr. DOLLIVER. There are always household occupations; there is gardening; and, following the example of my honored friend, they might retire to the rural districts occasionally to some good farm.

Mr. NELSON. That is, the Senator thinks these boys are like Senators, and when there is no school in the city they can retire to the country.

Mr. DOLLIVER. That is the way I did; and that is the argument the Senator has made very respectable.

Mr. NELSON. I think the Senator would find that most of the boys in the city would want means to go out to the country to get employment there, and that they would be actually committed to a life of idleness.

As I have said—and I do not want to delay the passage of this bill—I am in favor of reasonable regulation, but I think it is a mistaken idea to put the limit which has been put into this bill. I think that boys, such as the messenger boys whom I see before me here, when there is no school to attend during vacation—and there have been times in the past here in this city when the schools could not accommodate all the pupils—I think during those times they ought to have an opportunity to engage in proper light employment, such employment as they could find in the city of Washington.

Most of the boys and girls are the children of poor parents, who need their help. If they are idle they are a burden to their families. Oftentimes these young boys can be of great assistance in helping their fathers and mothers to eke out a scanty living, and while they are doing that they are educating themselves and developing themselves for the harsher and rougher duties of life that they will have to meet in the future. To leave them utterly unacquainted with labor, to bring them up to a life of idleness, and to give them simply a book education, is, to my mind, a grave mistake, and it is an injustice to the boys.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I do not care to take the time of the Senate in the discussion of the general features of this bill. If I had drafted it, I should have drafted it somewhat differently from what I find it, but, on the whole, it is a very good bill, and I am going to vote for it after I have succeeded, as I trust I may, in inserting a few and possibly inconsequential amendments in the body of the bill.

I move to insert after the word "restaurant," in line 6, on page 1, the word "saloon."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. In line 7, before the word "theater," I move to insert the word "pool room."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. In line 7, after the word "theater," I move to insert the word "or."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. In line 7, after the word "alley," I move to strike out the word "or," and insert the words "nor during school hours."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 7, after the word "alley," it is proposed to strike out the word "or" and insert the words "nor during school hours."

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him whether the amendment, if it be adopted, would make the restrictions in lines 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8 simply applicable to the hours after school closed?

Mr. GALLINGER. It would not. It applies to the words that follow, and I propose to add some words after that. It would read "nor during school hours in the distribution or transmission of merchandise or messages."

Mr. CLAY. In other words, a child under 14 years of age would not be permitted to work at all in any of the places designated, nor during school hours in the distribution or transmission of merchandise or messages?

Mr. GALLINGER. They would not.

Mr. CLAY. That is not objectionable.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I should like to inquire of the Senator from New Hampshire whether that would not allow employment outside of school hours of a child in the transmission of messages without any age limit at all, so that we might have children of tender years carrying telegrams and messages all over the city?

Mr. GALLINGER. I think not. I think the 14 years applies to that.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The fourteen years' age limit governs the whole section.

Mr. GALLINGER. Fourteen years governs the whole of the first section without a doubt. I think if the Senator examines it he will see that is so.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I have very great confidence in the judgment of the Senator from New Hampshire, but facts brought to my attention by those who have given very much more attention to the subject than either of us have convinced me that one of the most flagrant evils of child employment in cities like this is in the business of delivering messages and packages in a promiscuous way. I do not see how it will be possible to divide this District into that part of it which is reputable and that part of it which is disreputable. I should exceedingly regret to have this bill left in such a shape that a child under 14 years of age should be found anywhere about the city in the night delivering messages.

Mr. GALLINGER. I agree with the Senator on that point, and would not urge this if I believed that it did allow children under 14 years of age to do this. I think, if the Senator will read the section carefully, he will discover that the exceptions I propose by the amendment, as well as the positive inhibitions, apply to children under 14 years of age. I think when children are not in school, if there is a holiday or before the hour of 9 o'clock in the morning or after the hour of half past 3 in the afternoon, they might well be employed in this light work earning a dollar to help support the family or to take care of themselves.

Mr. BURKETT. Even under 14?

Mr. GALLINGER. No; no child under 14 years of age——

Mr. BURKETT. Or under?

Mr. GALLINGER. No; not under.

Mr. BURKETT. If the Senator puts in "nor during school hours," that clause opens up to a child under 14 years of age the distribution or transmission of merchandise or messages.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let me see. The bill reads:

That no child under 14 years of age—

That is, a child of 14——

Mr. BURKETT. Or under?

Mr. GALLINGER. No.

Mr. BURKETT. "No child under 14 years of age shall be employed, permitted, or suffered to work in the District of Columbia" in any of the ways which the bill mentions.

Mr. GALLINGER. Exactly. "Nor during school hours in distribution"—no child under 14 years of age.

Mr. BURKETT. "Nor during school hours shall distribute and transmit merchandise." So that outside of school hours a child under 14 years of age will be permitted to do those two things.

Mr. GALLINGER. I confess I can not read it in that way; but possibly the Senator is right. It seems to me it is a mere exception.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If the Secretary has the amendment, I suggest that he read that portion of the bill as it will read if amended, and we will see.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

That no child under 14 years of age shall be employed, permitted, or suffered to work in the District of Columbia in any factory, workshop, mercantile establishment, store, business office, telegraph office, restaurant, saloon, hotel, apartment house, pool room, theater, or bowling alley, nor during school hours in the distribution or transmission of merchandise or messages.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. So that it would read, with reference to this particular subject under discussion, that no child under 14 years of age shall be employed during school hours in the transmission of messages.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is the way I read it.

Mr. BURKETT. "Shall be employed during school hours." Therefore they can be employed in the transmission of messages in other hours.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the matter that I have suggested might go into the bill now, and Senators can examine it when it is reported to the Senate. I will agree to any modification, but I think I am right in my interpretation of it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The intent of all Senators is the same, and the language can easily be arranged.

Mr. CLAY. The Senator from New Hampshire clearly intends by his amendment to allow children under 14 years of age to be employed in the distribution or transmission of merchandise or messages when they are not in school—after school hours, I presume?

Mr. GALLINGER. My purpose is to allow any child 14 years of age to do that. I think my amendment does it; but perhaps it does not. I know how difficult it is to frame bills when we are discussing them.

Mr. CLAY. This bill simply applies to children under 14 years of age.

Mr. GALLINGER. It inhibits them.

Mr. CLAY. Those children, though, can be employed under the provisions of the amendment offered by the Senator in the distribution of merchandise or messages. Does the Senator understand it in that way?

Mr. GALLINGER. No; that is not my purpose, I will frankly say.

Mr. CLAY. Nor in the distribution or transmission of merchandise or messages after school hours?

Mr. GALLINGER. Or during school hours.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will yield to any Senator who will give me light on this subject. I want to have this just right.

Mr. TELLER. I do not know that I can give any light, but it seems to me that this bill deals only with children under 14 years of age, and, of course, under this amendment any child, whatever his age may be, after school hours would have the right to transmit messages. That is the way it seems to me, but I do not know whether that is so or not.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, my interpretation of it is that——

Mr. TELLER. It seems to me it is better to leave it as it is; but I do not know.

Mr. GALLINGER. Very well, Mr. President; I will withdraw the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. GALLINGER. But I will move to add, after the word "messages," in line 8, the words "or selling newspapers."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 8, after the word "messages," it is proposed to strike out the period and insert a comma and the words "or selling newspapers."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. NELSON. I object to that amendment. I do not want newsboys to be cut off.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, it will be seen that a subsequent part of that section gives to these children the right to sell newspapers outside of school hours and in the daytime. I believe that is as far as we ought to go. I myself doubt the wisdom of preventing children from selling newspapers outside of school hours within the hours of daylight.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that during the winter the hours of daylight close about the time the evening editions of the newspapers are issued. I merely call the Senator's attention to that, so that he can guard any amendment that is put in upon that point; otherwise it would not be possible to distribute newspapers in the winter.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator if he thinks that the concluding sentence of that section permits children to sell newspapers and transmit messages?

Mr. DOLLIVER. No; the sending and transmission of messages is prohibited in a former portion of the section. The remaining part of it, after their employment is previously mentioned specifically, is as to the hours when the District schools are in session and the hours of daylight. My notion was that the selling of newspapers would be included in that, and the limitation of the right to sell would be that they should not leave school to sell newspapers and that they should not be found in the nighttime on the street.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, accepting that interpretation, because the Senator from Iowa knows more about this than I do, I withdraw the proposed amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire withdraws his amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have one other amendment to offer. After the word "evening," in line 13, I move to insert the amendment I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 13, after the word "evening," it is proposed to strike out the period and insert a semicolon and the following words:

Provided, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to children employed in the service of the Senate and the House of Representatives.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from Iowa objects to the amendment I am about to propose, I will not urge it; but I have a communication from the board of education asking me to propose an amendment at the close of the bill. Section 11 reads:

That the juvenile court of the District of Columbia is hereby given jurisdiction in all cases arising under this act.

They ask me to have inserted these additional words—

And in all cases arising under an act providing for compulsory education in the District of Columbia, approved June 8, 1906.

The compulsory education law is one that is akin to the bill we are now considering. The juvenile court is doing such excellent work with the children of the District of Columbia that the board of education would like very much to have the cases arising under that act placed under the jurisdiction of the juvenile court.

Mr. NELSON. I ask whether this is an amendment to section 1?

Mr. GALLINGER. No; it is to come in at the close of the bill.

Mr. NELSON. Before we pass section 1, if the Senator from New Hampshire is through, I have some amendments to offer to that section.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator object to the amendment I have suggested? It simply gives to the juvenile court jurisdiction of children under the compulsory education act, as it is given jurisdiction under the provisions of the pending bill.

Mr. NELSON. That ought to come in at the end of the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. It comes in at the end of the bill. The Senator can recur to section 1.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. NELSON. I object to the consideration of that amendment, Mr. President, until we get through with other portions of the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, then, Mr. President, I will withhold the amendment. I think it is immaterial. The Senator is technical.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. NELSON. I do not intend to be technical at all; but I want to perfect section 1, and I move to strike out the word "fourteen"——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will recognize the Senator after the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] is passed upon.

Mr. NELSON. I was not aware that the Senator from Idaho had proposed an amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Yes. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After section 2——

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Minnesota desires first to perfect section 1.

Mr. HEYBURN. This amendment applies to section 1.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After section 2 it is proposed to add the following:

Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to the employment or work required of any child in and about the home or place of business of the parent, guardian, or custodian of such child having the duty of clothing and providing food and lodging for such child.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, upon a very careful consideration of sections 1 and 2, it seems to me that, in the absence of a provision of this kind, the child will become a very dominant factor in the household and might refuse perhaps to do chores before 6 a. m. or after 7 p. m. or to perform any labor. This bill includes restaurants and boarding houses. There are in this city quite a large number of such institutions that are conducted by women, widows oftentimes, and sometimes by the parents of children who require the assistance of the children in the minor duties of conducting these boarding houses and restaurants. If we undertake to place the child in a position where it could refuse before 7 o'clock in the morning or after 7 o'clock in the evening to assist in the performance of the ordinary duties in connection with the earning of a livelihood, we would make the child the master of the parent and we would deprive the parent of the assistance which it is only natural and proper that the child should render. Therefore, in order that there may be no doubt but that this class of service is excepted from the restrictions of this bill, I have prepared this amendment. It would hardly be becoming that a child, say 13 years of age or near 14, a big strong boy perhaps, or a girl, as you may choose, should be in a position to decline to take part or assist in the service of a house that was, for instance, a boarding house or a lodging house, where there are duties to be performed at all hours in order to make the business profitable; it would hardly be becoming that a child who is sustained and clothed and fed and housed by the parents should be in a position to say, "It is after 7 o'clock, and I will not help clean up this table or wash these dishes or make these beds or bring coal from the cellar. I will not do it, because the law says I shall not do it."

We ought not to enact a law of that kind, and it seems to me it is going a long ways toward taking the ordinary and proper custody of a child from the parent who is responsible for feeding and clothing and providing a home for the child. What would happen if the law should do what is proposed to be done by this bill—say that the child shall not contribute at all, even by the performance of these minor duties, toward the household, toward keeping the house—and the parent should say, "If the public is going to deprive me of the assistance of my family in making a living for them, I decline to clothe them or furnish a house for them?" What would you do? Do you think it would be competent for Congress to enact a law saying that the parents should provide a home and clothe and feed these large, grown children when they decline to contribute the ordinary share of labor toward keeping the household of the poor? This proposed law might work very well if everyone was rich or if people could live without regard to the making of a daily income. But it seems to me we should be very careful not to take away from the parent the right to those services at the hands of the child that are natural and proper because the child is a part of the household. If it is a properly constituted and organized child, it has an interest not only in maintaining itself, but in assisting to maintain its parents where they are feeble or there are other younger children.

Very often one or two children in a household perform absolutely essential duties toward the maintenance of other younger children and infirm and aged or crippled parents. For that reason an amendment of this kind, I think, is necessary.

Mr. BURKETT. I should like to ask the Senator from Idaho a question, since he has looked up that point. I understood the chairman of the committee to say that this bill was modeled very largely after the laws in the thirty-six States that have similar laws. Has it come under the Senator's observation that the leaving out of that clause has caused any trouble in any of the States?

Mr. HEYBURN. It is not my observation that such provisions have been omitted from the legislation.

Mr. BURKETT. The chairman said——

Mr. HEYBURN. This bill is a composite of all the bills. It contains, therefore, all the most drastic measures. Senators will find upon examination that it is not true that all of the various States having laws have gone so far as this bill goes. We have perhaps as good and efficient a child-labor law in the State of Idaho as has any State in the Union. I am thoroughly in sympathy with this class of legislation, and I have taken an active interest in educational matters all of my life. I have been more or less associated with them. So I am not without experience in the education of children. I claim that you can not take the custody of a child entirely away from the parent and then require the parent still to maintain the child. You can not do it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Just a word.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator is right about his statement with reference to State laws, and he might have gone still further. There is no State in the Union that has a law going as far as this.

Mr. HEYBURN. No; not one.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Not one.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, there is nothing in this proposed law that interferes, or possibly could interfere, with a child working in its own home. It says—

No such child shall be employed in any work performed for wages.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator has omitted the words "permitted or suffered" to work, in line 4, on page 1.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Yes; but there is nobody in his own home conducting "any factory, workshop, mercantile establishment, store, business office, telegraph office, restaurant, hotel"——

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; "restaurant, hotel, apartment house." All of them are conducted in homes in this city, and are conducted largely in connection with the homes.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I think the intention of this bill is to apply only to work that is performed for others for wages, excepting these dangerous occupations where one ought not to be permitted to employ his own children.

Mr. HEYBURN. Is there any objection to the proviso?

Mr. DOLLIVER. I do not think it is necessary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. I move, in line 3, on page 1, to strike out the word "fourteen" and insert "twelve," so that the bill will read:

That no child under 12 years of age shall be employed, etc.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, I call attention to the fact that practically every State in the Union has made the limit 14, including the State of Minnesota, and while it is true that the statute of the State of Minnesota applies only to factories or workshops or mines, yet it distinctly says that he shall not be employed in any mercantile establishment or in the service of telegraph, telephone, or messenger companies, except during the vacation of the public schools.

I should regard the reduction of this minimum limitation of age as placing the District of Columbia in a position distinctly inferior to that assumed by nearly every State in the Union.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. NELSON. I move, in line 5, page 1, to strike out the words "mercantile establishment, store, business office." The object of the amendment is to permit boys to work in mercantile establishments and stores and business offices.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, I again call the attention of the Senate to the fact that that distinctly places the District of Columbia in a position morally inferior to the State of Minnesota. The statute of Minnesota provides that no child under 14 years of age shall be employed in a factory or workshop; and yet my friend the Senator from Minnesota proposes to strike out "workshop."

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No.

Mr. NELSON. No; I leave in "workshop." I have merely moved to strike out the words "mercantile establishment, store, business office." That is all. They are not excluded under the laws of the State of Minnesota, except during school hours.

Mr. DOLLIVER. My own observation is that there are few abuses in the employment of children equal to the abuses in the department stores of the United States, and especially at those seasons of the year when the store is crowded with people. I should regret exceedingly to have the District of Columbia statute leave it open to these employers to impress into their service children of tender years.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the Senator from Iowa permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. SCOTT. Provided this is not stricken out, could you employ your own son in your own law office, if you were in the District of Columbia?

Mr. DOLLIVER. I would not want to do it prior to his attaining the age of 14 years.

Mr. SCOTT. Did the Senator ever do any work prior to the age of 14?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Yes, sir; some.

Mr. SCOTT. I have not any doubt that the Senator——

Mr. DOLLIVER. I got out of as much of it as I could, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. SCOTT. I myself know a little of the Senator's history, and I am sure he was like a good many of the rest of us. He had to rustle in order to get something to eat. I am sure he would not want to prevent a boy who has nothing to depend upon but his own labor from earning a sufficient amount at least to provide himself with some few clothes and a place to sleep. He would not compel him to go to the poorhouse.

Mr. DOLLIVER. No; I would not. If I had my way about it, I would have these boys out in the open air, under the sky.

Mr. SCOTT. I am sure the Senator would, and if I had my way, I would have all of them educated sufficiently. But we can not all have what we would like in this world. There is theory and there is a practical condition. I have been an employer of labor for thirty-eight years, perhaps longer—at least from the close of the civil war.

I have in mind one man who is a stockholder in the company of which I am president. He is to-day a stockholder and a director in this large company. He was left a poor boy. If he had not been allowed to learn a trade and to earn a living, no doubt to-day he would have been like many others, a burden upon the community in which he lives. But by permission to work before he was 14 years of age, or when he was 14 years of age, he made his start, his habits were formed, and he accumulated a sufficient amount of money to enable him to raise a family respectably and to educate them.

Now, as I said a moment ago, there is theory and there is practice. I will not disguise the fact that I was left a poor boy. I had to start to earn my own living at 9 years of age. Suppose I had been deprived of that privilege. What would be my condition to-day as compared with what it is? I have, as the superintendent of the factory belonging to the company of which I am president, a man who came to me as a boy very little over 12 years of age one snowy morning and announced to me that his mother had been buried the day before, and that he had been left the sole support of three little sisters and a brother; one sister older than he and the others younger. A very charitably disposed woman sent this boy to me and said that she knew I would give him something to do. I did, and I gave his older sister employment in wrapping glass with paper in the warehouse. Those two children worked for me, and I sent the boy to night school. To-day he is worth probably $50,000, the superintendent of the factory of which I am president, with from four to eight hundred people in its employ at different times; an honorable, respectable citizen. If he had been deprived, under a law similar to this, of the opportunity of earning his own living and a living for his sisters and little brother, they would all have become charges upon that community and possibly would have become mendicants or paupers.

Now, gentlemen, these are facts. This statement can not be controverted truthfully; and if you are going to deprive a boy of doing any manual labor to earn a living until he reaches the age of 16, you will make an undesirable citizen of him, because he will never, in my judgment, learn to do manual labor or take to it after he is 16 years of age. He must be taught industry; he must be taught hardships and what life means before he reaches the age of 16, or he will never make a citizen willing to do manual labor.

Then if you educate them—and you are going to educate them all—who will do the manual labor of this country? Shall we import labor from foreign countries or shall we have our own labor? I hope Senators will look at this question from a practical as well as a theoretical standpoint.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, there has probably never been stated in a more persuasive form the argument against the interference of law with the employment of children than the statements which have been made here to-day by my honored friend, the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT], and by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], and I confess that it has appealed very strongly to my conservative view of things whenever my attention has been directed to the history of such exceptional careers as these men have had. The argument drawn from the statement which the Senator from West Virginia has made has always had a great deal of influence; it has operated to influence legislation in all industrial countries, but not altogether to stop the progress of child-labor reform; and for this reason: Men perceive that the present-day occupations of children are not such occupations as gave strength and vigor and hope and success to the careers of the Senator from Minnesota and the Senator from West Virginia.

Men perceive also that modern industrial conditions have eliminated that kindly, fatherly attitude of employers toward employees that enabled the Senator from West Virginia to take orphaned children by the hand and look carefully to their welfare, guarding their bodies against overwork, guarding their minds against the corruption that surrounds life, and bringing them up practically as a father would bring up his children, in kindliness and constant supervision of their welfare. If all the employments of American labor had been such employments as gave credit to the early youth and manhood of the Senator from Minnesota, the question of child labor would never have arisen in this world at all; and if the employers of labor throughout the United States and throughout the world had had the broad, generous, manly, fatherly heart that has always governed the Senator from West Virginia as an employer of labor, such a question as this would never have vexed the Parliament of England or the legislature of Massachusetts or the legislatures of the thirty-six other States in the Union, coming at length even to the attention of the Congress of the United States.

While I admit the force and persuasive eloquence with which my friend the Senator from West Virginia has touched in meager detail the outlines of the great career which has been given to him in this world in the good providence of God, I should dislike to have such an experience and such an example influential in the defeat of legislation intended to help as a whole the great body of children in the United States who are under the despotism of the child-labor customs which prevail in a great many sections of our country.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I should like to move an amendment. In line 4, page 1, I move to strike out the words "or suffered."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending amendment is the one proposed by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], which will again be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 5, it is proposed to strike out the words "mercantile establishment, store, business office."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. A division, Mr. President.

Mr. SCOTT. I hope we will have a division on the amendment. I am sure the Senator from Minnesota and I and others here want to give a good bill to the District of Columbia, but those five words could come out without doing this bill any injustice whatever, and they certainly would give a little leeway for a poor boy in order to earn his bread.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota, on which a division is demanded.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. KEAN. Let the amendment be again stated.

Mr. BACON. I ask that the amendment may be again read.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 5, it is proposed to strike out the words "mercantile establishment, store, business office."

Mr. SCOTT. Five words.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], who is necessarily absent from the Senate. I transfer the pair to the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. LONG] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. FRAZIER (when his name was called). I again announce a standing pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KITTREDGE]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN]. I do not see that he is present, but I will let my vote stand and transfer the pair to the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRIGGS].

Mr. DANIEL. I am paired with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. BACON. I have been requested to announce that the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. MILTON] is paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT].

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 30, as follows:

YEAS—32.

So Mr. NELSON's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PAYNTER. I propose an amendment, to be inserted on page 4, line 24.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

Mr. NELSON. I have another amendment to offer to section 1.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Kentucky, and will recognize the Senator from Minnesota after the amendment now submitted is disposed of. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, line 24, after the word "superintendent," insert the following proviso:

Provided, That in exceptional cases the superintendent of public schools or the person authorized to act for him may, in writing, waive the necessity of the schooling certificate provided for in this act, and in such cases the age certificate shall entitle the holder to be employed without a violation of this act.

Mr. PAYNTER. Mr. President, I will state my purpose in proposing the amendment. In section 5 it is provided:

And that (he or she) has regularly attended the public schools, or a school equivalent thereto, for not less than one hundred and thirty days during the school year previous to arriving at the age of 14 years, or during the year previous to applying for such school record, and has received during such period instruction in reading, spelling, writing, English grammar, and geography, and is familiar with the fundamental operations of arithmetic, to and including fractions.

A child of proper age may be brought into this District a month, for instance, or a week before the application is made for the privilege of work; or, in another case that I have in mind, a child might be sick during the one hundred and thirty days he has been required by the act to attend school; and another case might be where a child has had no opportunity to acquire an education as is required by the act. It seems to me that under such circumstances the superintendent of public schools ought to be permitted to waive the necessity of this schooling certificate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. PAYNTER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. I offer an amendment, to come in at the end of line 11, on page 1. It is to insert after the words "session" the words "and he or she is permitted to attend the same," so as to read:

During the hours when the public schools of the District of Columbia are in session and he or she is permitted to attend the same.

There are times here, there have been in the past, and there may be in the future, when the schools are in session and all the children can not attend. There is not room for them. That has been the case in the past, and it may be in the future. So to perfect the law, I think, the words should be inserted, "and he or she is permitted to attend the same;" that is, not only must the school be open, but it must be open so that the child in question can attend the same.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, page 1, line 11, after the word "session," insert the words:

And he or she is permitted to attend the same.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I may be in error, but I think the situation in the contemplation of the Senator from Minnesota would be fully covered by the amendment that has just been adopted, the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky. I inquire of the Senator from Kentucky if it would not be included in the scope of his amendment?

Mr. PAYNTER. I do not quite understand the scope of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota. I was not giving it attention.

Mr. DOLLIVER. It is an amendment adding words which will exempt the child from the necessity of attendance at school when there is not room in the schoolhouse to receive such child.

Mr. PAYNTER. My opinion is that that would be an exceptional case provided for.

Mr. DOLLIVER. It would be covered by your amendment.

Mr. PAYNTER. I think so.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I should judge so.

Mr. NELSON. But that relates to another part of the bill, and I think it ought to go in here to make the bill clear.

Mr. BURKETT. If I understand the amendment, it certainly ought not to go in. In the first place, it is not a practical thing. The illustration that has been used by the Senator from Minnesota does not apply in the slightest. There are a few schools in the first, second, and third grades in which children from 5 to 7 years old have not had school room enough for more than half a day. But they could get this same certificate if they attend those. There are enough schools to take care of all the children as the law requires for half a day; but that applies only to the first three grades, which would take them up to 7 years of age. Certainly the Senator is not arguing for anything here that is going to look to the employment of children prevented by the bill previous to 7 years of age. So his amendment is of no consequence.

If you put that amendment in, however, it simply destroys the whole section, in my opinion. I call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to the language of the section. It reads:

No such child shall be employed in any work performed for wages or other compensation, to whomsoever payable, during the hours when the public schools of the District of Columbia are in session.

Now, the Senator proposes to add, "if he or she is permitted to attend the same." Permitted by whom? Permitted how? There may be a good many things to prevent a child from attending school aside from not being supplied with school room. But it is not a practical matter, because there are schoolhouses enough here, and there is not any danger now. We are probably in a worse condition now in reference to schoolhouses than we will ever be again, brought about by the necessity of abandoning some schoolhouses on account of lack of fire escapes, but those we provided for in the appropriation bill the other day. So it is not a practical matter.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I think in addition to what the Senator from Nebraska has said the matter is fully covered by the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky already adopted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. NEWLANDS. In line 8, page 1, after the word "messages," I move to insert:

That no child under 14 years of age shall be employed in any mercantile establishment, store, or business office without the approval of the juvenile court of the District of Columbia.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. NELSON. That would utterly destroy the effect of the amendment that was agreed to a short time ago.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I voted a few moments ago for the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota excluding from the provisions of this section the words "mercantile establishment, store, and business office." I voted for that amendment because I thought there might be many cases in which it would be advisable that children under 14 years of age should have light employment of this order, and I was moved to that view by the earnest appeal made by the Senator from Minnesota that you could commit no greater cruelty than to consign a child to idleness.

I can understand that there are many cases where the strength, the health, and the conditions surrounding a child under 14 years of age might make it very advisable that the child should have the advantage of employment of this kind, but it seems to me that wherever that employment is to be given, it should have the approval of some board or organization charged with the duty of protecting children and particularly weak children. The bill provides for the jurisdiction of the juvenile court of the District of Columbia in all cases arising under this act, and I assume that that court is a court controlled by the highest considerations of humanity, and it could not be induced, except where the conditions absolutely warrant it, to give its approval to the employment of a child under 14 years of age, even where the employment may be of so light a character as is required in mercantile establishments, stores, and business offices.

I therefore urge that this amendment would be entirely appropriate, and that it is wholly consistent with the humane spirit of the act.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS.]

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I suggest an amendment, probably omitted by oversight, which I suppose the chairman will accept. On page 5, after the word "shall," at the end of line 4, the words "be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and" should be inserted.

Mr. DOLLIVER. That is a very proper insertion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana.

The SECRETARY. In section 6, on page 5, after the word "shall," at the end of line 4, insert the words "be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and."

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the comma after "shall" come out.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. In section 6, on page 5, lines 1 and 2, I move to strike out the words "under 16 years of age, and." That is utterly inconsistent with the first section of the bill. It reads now:

That whoever employs a child under 16 years of age * * * shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and for such offense be fined not more than $50.

In the first section the limitation is 14 years of age. The two provisions are utterly inconsistent. While under the first section it is lawful to employ a child over 14 years of age, in this section you make it a penal offense to employ any one under 16 years of age. The words "under 16 years of age" should be stricken out.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I think the Senator from Minnesota is in error. The first section to which he refers is applicable to all children and the occupations named, and this limitation of 16 years is applicable to children who ought to be in school. It refers to the employment of children during school hours.

Mr. NELSON. It is general. It reads—

That whoever employs a child under 16 years of age——

Mr. DOLLIVER. Yes.

Mr. NELSON. Shall "be fined not more than $50." It is unconditional.

Mr. DOLLIVER. It is unconditional; but if the Senator will read the whole section, he will see that it is made dependent upon the school certificate and the duty of the child to be in school.

Mr. FULTON. I wish to ask the Senator from Iowa a question. Section 6 reads:

That whoever employs a child under 16 years of age, and whoever, having under his control a child under such age, permits such child to be employed in violation of sections 1, 2, 8, or 9 of this act.

Why does not that refer to the exact matter that is prohibited in section 1? It refers to section 1.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Section 1 is a prohibition under 14 years of age applicable to certain employments that are named, and the last half of it is applicable to all employments during the hours that the school is in session.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to call the attention of the Senator who has this bill in charge to section 2, which provides:

That no child under 16 years of age shall be employed, permitted, or suffered to work in the District of Columbia in any of the establishments named in section 1—

Why in section 1 is the age 14 years and in section 2 16? The same employment exactly is described in the same places.

Mr. DOLLIVER. The object of section 1 is to prohibit in the named occupations the employment of children under 14 and the object of section 2 is to prohibit the employment of children under 16 in the same employment when the schools are in session.

Mr. TELLER. In section 6, on the fifth page, you have the same provision again as to children under 16.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Yes; that relates to the employment of children under 16 "after being notified by an inspector authorized by this act or a truant officer of the District of Columbia," the idea being to make an absolute prohibition in certain occupations of children under 14 and a limited prohibition within school hours of children under 16.

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator from Iowa will allow me to make a suggestion, you can make the bill perfectly clear in that particular by striking out, after the word "child," in line 1, on page 5, down to and including the word "age" in line 3, and inserting the word "or," so as to read:

That whoever employs a child, or permits such child to be employed, in violation of sections 1, 2, 8, or 9 of this act—

And so forth. There is no doubt at all but that would make it perfectly clear. I suggest that to the Senator.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It does not even need the specification of the sections, but it should read "whoever employs a child in violation of this act." The language as it stands now is not harmonious. The sections 1 and 2, as I undertand the intent, are perfectly clear and all right, but this language is certainly inharmonious with those sections. It ought to be remodeled. I think the suggestion of the Senator from Minnesota clears up the whole thing, and even the reference to the sections might be left out, so as to read, "whoever employs a child in violation of this act."

Mr. DOLLIVER. If these amendments are offered and on inspection they appear to accomplish that result, I shall offer no objection to them. The bill, however, has been carefully drawn and carefully inspected by the Senator who introduced it, and this language, it seems to me, appears to be suited to the case. It may be a little complex, but it is a complex situation.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I can not understand the bill. The two provisions are absolutely incongruous. We should either limit the years to 14 or to 16, one or the other. If you want "16" to stand, you should strike out "14." I do not like to move to strike out, but I certainly do not know what the bill means.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Section 5 is an effort to enforce the provisions in relation to the age of schooling certificates.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair would suggest that the pending question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota and that it should be first considered.

Mr. FULTON. I wish to ask the Senator from Iowa what the purpose of section 6 is? He has explained section 5, but what is the purpose of section 6?

Mr. DOLLIVER. The purpose of section 6 will be discovered by reading section 4, which provides:

That an age and schooling certificate shall not be approved unless satisfactory evidence is furnished by duly attested transcript of the certificate of birth or baptism of such child.

Then the certificate is provided for and the form of it is given in section 5. Then section 6 proceeds:

That whoever employs a child under 16 years of age, and whoever, having under his control a child under such age, permits such child to be employed in violation of sections 1, 2, 8, or 9 of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and for such offense be fined not more than $50; and whoever continues to employ any child in violation of any of said sections of this act, after being notified by an inspector authorized by this act or a truant officer of the District of Columbia, shall for every day thereafter that such employment continues be fined not less than $5 nor more than $20.

Mr. FULTON. I ask the Senator to explain to me, if he kindly will, as doubtless he can, how you could employ a child of 15 years of age in violation of section 1.

Mr. BURKETT. If he could not he could not be fined, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Of course section 1 confines the minimum limitation to 14 years.

Mr. FULTON. Section 6 says: "Whoever employs a child under 16 years of age in violation of section 1." How can you employ one under 15 years of age in violation of section 1?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. It seems to me the difficulty is fully met and remedied by the suggestion of the Senator from Minnesota, and that is that you strike it out, so that it will read:

That whoever employs a child or permits such child to be employed in violation of sections 1, 2, 8, or 9—shall be punished, and so forth. There can be no question about that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 6, page 5, lines 1, 2, and 3, strike out the words "under 16 years of age, and whoever, having under his control a child under such age," and insert the word "or," so that if amended it will read:

That whoever employs a child or permits such child to be employed in violation of sections 1, 2, 8, or 9 of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and for such offense be fined, etc.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I move to strike out, on page 1, line 4, the words "or suffered" and to insert the word "or" at the end of line 3, so that it will read:

That no child under 14 years of age shall be employed or permitted to work in the District of Columbia, etc.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 4, strike out, after the word "permitted," the comma and the words "or suffered," and before the word "permitted," in the same line, insert the word "or," so that if amended it will read:

That no child under 14 years of age shall be employed or permitted to work in the District of Columbia in any factory, etc.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I move, on line 7, after the words "bowling alley," to insert the words "billiard room."

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That has already been put in.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The words "pool room" were put in, but not the words "billiard room." I move to insert the words "billiard room" where I have stated.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. On page 1, line 12, I move to change the word "or" to the word "nor"—the third word from the end of the line.

Mr. DOLLIVER. In what section is that?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Section 1, line 12, where it reads:

Nor before the hour of 6 o'clock in the morning or after the hour of 7 o'clock in the evening.

It should read:

Nor after the hour of 7 o'clock in the evening.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, page 1, line 12, after the word "morning," it is proposed to strike out the word "or" and insert "nor," so as to read:

Nor before the hour of 6 o'clock in the morning nor after the hour of 7 o'clock in the evening.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. In section 2, page 2, line 2, I move, after the word "permitted," to strike out the words "or suffered," and to insert the word "or" after the word "employed," so as to make it read in conformity with section 1 as amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 2, page 2, line 2, after the word "permitted," it is proposed to strike out the comma and the words "or suffered;" and before the word "permitted," in the same line, to insert the word "or," so as to read:

SEC. 2. That no child under 16 years of age shall be employed or permitted to work in the District of Columbia, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. In section 4, page 2, line 16, after the word "that," I move to strike out the word "an" and to insert the word "no;" and in the same line, after the word "shall," to strike out "not," so that it will read:

SEC. 4. That no age and schooling certificate shall be approved unless satisfactory evidence is furnished—

And so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. In section 4, page 2, line 18, after the word "baptism," I move to insert "or other religious record," so as to read:

Attested transcript of the certificate of birth or baptism or other religious record of such child.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator will observe that in line 19 those words are used. He will want to move to strike those out.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I want to move to strike out those. This transfers them to a different place.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 4, page 2, line 19, after the word "child," it is proposed to strike out "or other religious record" and the comma.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] if the last word in line 20, on page 2, the article "a," should not be changed to the word "such," so that it will read "of such child." That is, to make it relate to the children provided for in this bill and not to a child of any age.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I think that would improve the phraseology.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 4, page 2, at the end of line 20, it is proposed to strike out the article "a" and to insert "such," so as to read:

Custodian of such child.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. In section 6, page 5, line 7, the bill reads: "After being notified by an inspector." I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa if there should not be inserted after the word "notified" the words "of such violation," so that the bill may state what the inspector was to notify the party of?

Mr. DOLLIVER. That would be satisfactory.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 6, page 5, line 7, after the word "notified," it is proposed to insert the words "of such violation," so as to read:

After being notified of such violation by an inspector—

And so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. In section 6, page 5, line 13, where the bill speaks of the "age or schooling certificates," I think the word "or" should be changed to the word "and," which is the term used all through the remainder of the bill. I suggest that amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 6, page 5, line 13, after the word "age," it is proposed to strike out "or" and to insert "and," so as to read:

Any age and schooling certificate—

And so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. In section 8, page 6, line 11, I think the words "or suffered" should be stricken out and the word "or" inserted after the word "employed," in the same line, and that the comma after the word "employed" should be stricken out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 8, page 6, line 11, after the word "permitted," it is proposed to strike out the comma and the words "or suffered:" and before the word "permitted," in the same line, to insert the word "or" and to strike out the comma after the word "employed," so as to read:

That no minor under 16 years of age shall be employed or permitted to work in any of the establishments—

And so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. In section 9, line 18, the previous section, section 8, having spoken of minors under 16 years of age, line 18 speaks of "such persons." This should refer to the minors in the previous section. I ask the Senator from Iowa as to that.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I judge so.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Then I move to strike out the word "persons," where I have indicated, and to insert the word "minors" in lieu thereof.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 9, page 6, line 18, it is proposed to strike out the word "persons" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "minors," so as to read:

SEC. 9. That every employer shall post in a conspicuous place in every room where such minors are employed—

And so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. In section 9, page 6, line 25, I move to strike out the word "person," and to insert in lieu thereof the word "minor," so as to read:

The employment of any such minor for a longer time in any day than that so stated shall be deemed a violation of this section.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President, in section 1, page 1, line 13 of the bill, I propose the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of section 1, on page 1, line 13, it is proposed to insert:

Provided further, That any judge of the supreme court of said District may issue a permit for the employment of any child between the ages of 12 and 14 years at any occupation or employment not in his judgment dangerous or injurious to the health or morals of such child, upon evidence satisfactory to him that the labor of such child is necessary for its support, or for the assistance of a disabled, ill, or invalid father or mother, or for the support in whole or in part of a younger brother or sister or a widowed mother. Such permits shall be issued for a definite time, but they shall be revocable at the discretion of the judge by whom they are issued or by his successor in office. Hearings for granting and revoking permits shall be held upon such notice and under such rules and regulations as the judges of said court shall prescribe.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President, I proposed a similar amendment to this bill when it was up for consideration in the Senate at the last session, I think it was. I did that because a number of States in the Union have laws similar to that which is proposed by this amendment and, furthermore, because I believe that the occasion may arise where it may become necessary for a child to perform temporary work in order to support his mother or his disabled father or himself. I think the child should have that right where it can be shown to the satisfaction of the judge, who shall reserve the power to revoke the permit at any time he sees fit, that the child may be employed in a place which will not be injurious to his health or detrimental to his morals. In other words, I believe that if a young boy wishes to take care temporarily of a widowed mother or of a disabled father or provide for himself, he should have the right to do so, if a judge of the court, who presides over the property rights, the lives, and liberties of the people, says, in his judgment, that the employment in which a child may be employed will not be detrimental to his morals or his health. For that reason I have proposed this amendment. Such a law exists in the State of Washington and in many of the other States of the Union.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. PILES. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. With my present light, I shall vote against the Senator's amendment; but I rose to suggest to him that, if it is to be adopted, I think the judge of the juvenile court should be the judge to act in this case.

Mr. PILES. I will consent to that.

Mr. GALLINGER. That would be very much better than one of the judges of the supreme court.

Mr. PILES. I have no objection to any judge acting.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the Senator's amendment be modified to read "the judge of the juvenile court."

Mr. PILES. I accept the modification.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington as modified.

Mr. TELLER. I do not believe anybody here knows, or, at least, very few know, what the Senator's amendment is. I know I do not.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be again stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, after the amendment adopted at the end of line 13, it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided further, That any judge of the juvenile court of the said District——

Mr. GALLINGER. No; it should read "the judge." There is only one judge of the juvenile court.

Mr. TELLER. Yes; it should read "the judge."

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided further, That the judge of the juvenile court of said District may issue a permit for the employment of any child between the ages of 12 and 14 years at any occupation or employment not in his judgment dangerous or injurious to the health or morals of such child, upon evidence satisfactory to him that the labor of such child is necessary for its support, or for the assistance of a disabled, ill, or invalid father or mother, or for the support in whole or in part of a younger brother or sister or a widowed mother. Such permits shall be issued for a definite time, but they shall be revocable at the discretion of the judge by whom they are issued or by his successor in office. Hearings for granting and revoking permits shall be held upon such notice and under such rules and regulations as the judge of said court shall prescribe.

Mr. LODGE obtained the floor.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. TELLER. I want to take the floor for only a moment.

Mr. LODGE. I have the floor, but I am perfectly willing to yield it to the Senator.

Mr. TELLER. No; let the Senator go on and I will follow after he concludes.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, it seems to me from hearing the amendment read that the Senator from Washington can achieve his purpose more simply by voting against the bill. In the first place, it would convert the judge into an executive officer. I think it would put a duty on the court that distinctly does not belong to a court. In the second place, instead of giving the child rights, you take his rights from him, because anyone who wishes to employ his labor can go into court, make out a case, and the child would be perfectly helpless. It appears to me that it would be a very destructive amendment to the bill.

I come from a State where there are many industrial centers, where we have stringent laws to prevent child labor. With such laws I have always been in the most complete sympathy, and I think no one can realize fully the misery of child labor unless he is familiar with industrial centers and great cities where child labor is seen in its worst form.

We have a body of inspectors in the State to enforce the law, but even then, with stringent laws and the best inspection we can get, the greed of parents or guardians or persons who have control of helpless children leads to their employment in all sorts of work in which they ought never to be employed—work which stunts them physically, destroys them morally, and prevents their ever getting a suitable education.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. I ask the Senator if he thinks that the conditions which he describes are likely to obtain in the territory covered by this bill. I can understand that the conditions the Senator describes would require a much more stringent law than would be necessary for the District of Columbia or the Territories?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, here in the District there are a few factories, but it is not an industrial center. We have, I am sorry to say, stricken out the words "mercantile establishment, store, business office," and I hope that when the bill reaches the Senate a move will be made to restore the word "store" at least.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say that I had in view to ask for another vote on that amendment when the bill reaches the Senate. I shall ask that that amendment be reserved at the proper time.

Mr. LODGE. Moreover, Mr. President, it must be remembered that while the bill itself only covers the city of Washington and the District of Columbia, the national law adopted for this District will have an effect throughout the country and will be looked upon as a standard. I think this bill, in the condition in which it now is, is a very mild measure indeed. I think it amounts to about as little as it can and do anything for the protection of children.

One of the subjects, Mr. President, which, it seems to me, is most important at the present time is to try to guard and protect the children and to see that they are educated. The children that this bill seeks to protect are not those of intelligent parents, who are anxious to educate and care for their children. The children we are trying to protect are those who either have no proper guardians or whose parents are willing to work them for the sake of the money they can get in that way. The bill goes but a very short distance, it seems to me, and I sincerely hope that no such door as this will be opened to enable the employment of children in work which can not but be detrimental to them, which would keep them from school, and which would be injurious to their health and morals.

It is impossible that any one man sitting in a court in this town can judge about these cases of children; they would come before him by the score, and it would be utterly out of the question for him to render judgment that would be of any value. He would have to go on the affidavits of people who wanted to make money out of the child, and it is a great deal better to leave the law as it is and try to keep the child at school and protect it.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, this is a very important bill. The friends or the enemies of this measure, I do not know which, have found a great many errors in it, and so there have been a large number of amendments made. This is another amendment of great importance, and in some respects I should think it might be of value to the bill, and in others it might not.

There is one thing in it which strikes me, and that is, while it might relieve the conditions created by this bill, it seems to me the question of who is going to make this application to the court has not been as carefully considered as it should be. The application should be made, if made at all, it seems to me, by the parent of the child, if he has a parent, or by his guardian. I should not think it would be wise to let the school authorities do that, and I certainly should not think it would be wise to let anybody do that who might be interested in relieving this bill of what may be its severity in some particulars.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] thinks this bill is not a severe bill. I think as it came into the Senate it was a pretty severe bill. The Senator from Massachusetts speaks about a national bill.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator misunderstood me. I did not say anything about a national bill.

Mr. TELLER. I understood the Senator to refer to a national bill.

Mr. LODGE. I said this is national legslation for the District of Columbia, and will be looked to as an example by the country. I said nothing at all about a national bill.

Mr. TELLER. I am glad I made the mistake. I hope the Senator will not present anything of that kind; but the colloquy that took place between the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] and the Senator who has this bill in charge [Mr. DOLLIVER] indicated very certainly that this is to be followed by a national bill. I have seen in the newspapers that this is to be the model which we are to follow in the national bill, which is sure to come to us at the next session, and a copy of which I suppose I have on my table now.

Mr. President, in my judgment if there is anything settled in this country at all, it is that the police power of the States can not be invaded by the United States. While we have unquestioned power to legislate for the District of Columbia, and while I approve this legislation in the main and expect to vote for it, yet I should not find myself able at any time to vote for a national law containing these provisions. I believe a majority of the States have already laws of this character. I do not know that any State where it is necessary has neglected to enact such a law. We did not have any such laws in my youth, and I do not suppose we then needed them, because I never heard then of children being huddled in a factory. The boys would work in stores occasionally, but I never heard of any necessity for a law of this kind. As the country grows older, however, the population more numerous, and the manufacturing interests of the country larger, they draft a large number of children. I agree with the Senator from Massachusetts that the employment of children in mills and factories is very injurious, very hurtful, and, as he states, that there is a class to whom our hearts ought to go out and whom we ought to protect and take care of.

The average American home will find its protector there. The American farmer and the American mechanic, as a rule, will take care of his own children and will send them to school if school is open. I understand that in this city we have a compulsory school law; I do not remember when it was passed or how it was passed; I know nothing about the conditions of it; but I should judge from what we have learned that it has not been enforced in this city with any degree of severity. It seems to me that if we open the schools and keep the children in the schools, we have done part of what is necessary to prevent the children from being overworked in factories.

I will not now discuss the national phases of the question, but when it comes up, I presume I shall be here if I live until next winter, I may be possibly persuaded by the eloquence and logic of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] to vote for it; but, if I do, I shall have to reverse all my ideas of the relations between the States and the General Government, which I think just now is the most important thing for the American citizen to think of.

I think there has been no time in our history, not even at the close of the great war, when the relations between the States and the General Government have been so critical and so dangerous to the States as they are to-day. My reading of history leads me to believe that encroachments of power have always come insidiously. They have rarely come openly. There may a time come in the course of history in the affairs of nations when an open movement on the part of some tyrant, as in the case of Napoleon III in France—a sudden stroke, a coup d'état—may change the whole form of government; but such a move is always secretly prepared beforehand. Napoleon prepared for that revolution in France with great skill and ability. He perhaps showed more ability in that than in anything else in his life. He purposely secured the disfranchisement of a very large part of the French people and then he became the defender of them. He insisted that the disfranchisement act must be repealed, and when they did not do that, he said to the French people, "These men are not giving you justice; I will take the reins of government into my own hands, and I will give you justice." Then he became a dictator, as everybody knows, not in name simply, but in fact.

There is not any danger of anybody in this country rising up and at once destroying the relations between the States and the General Government; but there is danger, Mr. President, that step by step we shall disregard those relations, and that we shall minimize, not the power of the General Government, for there is no danger of that, but that we shall by and by minimize the State's powers and the State's rights. Every little while somebody says, "Here is a statute that enables Congress to do this and to do that"—a statute passed through this Senate, just as this bill will pass, without proper consideration and without proper thought, and sometimes without the knowledge of this body or of the other in the confusion that occurs in the legislative bodies of this country. So matters will go on, and then some man who has the power—and if it is ever done the man who leads the movement will be the man the people are looking to as their savior and their protector—will make another move. You may keep your State lines; you may have a distinction between the sections of the country that you now call Pennsylvania, or New Jersey, or New York, but when you disregard the rights of those States and commence to legislate for them, you will not be a very great way from a disruption of this Republic and the breaking of it into several republics, or something worse.

I am a believer in the doctrine that the family is the very foundation of a good government in any country, and in no country more than in ours. I do not myself believe that we have the right to invade the family and interfere with the power of the father and the mother, even in an extreme case. I do not deny that we may say to the manufacturer, "You must not employ a boy or a girl under a certain age." I am in favor of that, but when you do anything else with them, when there is an application made, as this amendment suggests, which the court is to pass upon, that application should come from the father or mother or some guardian. I do not object particularly to that principle.

It may be somewhat difficult to carry it out. You may impose upon a judge not judicial duties, but executive duties, and, so far as I know, in every section of the country where you have a juvenile court of this character they have had imposed upon them not judicial duties, but practically executive duties. They become practically executive officers and not judicial officers.

Within my own section of the country these authorities have powers conferred by the State and not by the General Government, and we have had no trouble there. Colorado has such a law. I do not know whether it is as good as the law of Massachusetts, but I have not the slightest doubt that it was made after the Massachusetts law was made, and probably followed it. I have never heard any complaint, but of course we do not have any great factories like they have in Massachusetts. But we in that section of the country are all in favor not only of a child-labor law, but of a compulsory school law. We have juvenile courts to take charge of girls and boys and put them in training, so, if possible, to make good citizens out of them.

I am willing to vote for anything that is fair for the District of Columbia, even if it should be considered somewhat strenuous, but I wanted to give notice to my distinguished friend, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE], that I probably would not be quite able, much as I should like to please him, to vote for a national child-labor law.

Mr. PILES. I may say to the Senator from Colorado that I have no objection at all to further amending the amendment so as to allow the permit upon the application of the father, mother, guardian, or next friend. I drafted the amendment hurriedly from the law of the State of Washington on the subject.

Mr. TELLER. I presume that might be done if there was a little delay, but we are in great haste about this bill. There is another bill coming up. This is a good deal more important than the pending appropriation bill, because it involves more than dollars and cents; but it will be difficult for us, I think, to get time to make the amendment. I would not venture to make an amendment of the Senator's amendment, but I wish he would make a slight amendment, so as to leave it to the parent or some one.

Mr. PILES. I move, after the word "may," in line 12 of the amendment, to insert the words "upon the application of the parent, guardian, or next friend."

Mr. HOPKINS. How would the amendment read then?

Mr. PILES. The amendment would read:

Provided, That the judge of the juvenile court of said District may, upon the application of the parent, guardian, or next friend, issue a permit for the employment of any child between the ages of 12 and 14 years.

Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is no more in favor of a law which will prohibit the factories of this country from working children than I am. I believe if there is any one crime committed against the children of this country it is their indiscriminate employment in the factories and sweatshops of the country. While I believe that, and while I would protect him as far as I possibly can against those who have designs upon his labor and who would destroy his mental and physical capacity, I would nevertheless protect him, sir, in that sturdy manhood which has made the great men of this country.

There are many boys 13 years of age, strong physically and mentally, whose father and mother are so circumstanced as to be compelled to rely upon the labor of their boy for a time. One of the parents may suddenly become disabled, so that it is impossible for them to get along without the labor of this child, past 13 years of age, and yet under the terms of this bill it is impossible for him to aid his parents or himself. I should say that if that boy could find employment in a store or in a mercantile establishment or in a shop where the judge found, after a full hearing, that it would not be of injury to him—would not degrade him morally or injure him physically or mentally—the judge should have the power to say to that boy: "You may protect your father or your mother from the poorhouse," and any other doctrine, to my mind, Mr. President, is un-American and can find no response in the hearts of the people of this country.

The Senator from Massachusetts says if I would destroy the child himself I would put this amendment in the bill. The Senator from Massachusetts has destroyed the child himself if he does not permit this amendment to go into the bill.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator does not mean to misquote me?

Mr. PILES. Not at all.

Mr. LODGE. I did not say anything about destroying the child himself. I said if the Senator meant to carry out the purpose of his amendment he could do it most easily by defeating the bill.

Mr. PILES. I misunderstood the Senator's statement, but upon either theory, he said, I remember quite distinctly, that I was limiting or overcoming the rights of the child, or words to that effect. I was sitting far over in a corner, and it was difficult to hear.

The defeat of this bill had better follow, strongly as I favor it, than to say to the fathers and mothers of this country and to the children themselves that they may not go into a store or into an office in vacation time, or at any time when the labor of the child is necessary to temporarily provide for the father or the mother who is ill or disabled.

Mr. President, the greater portion of my life has been spent upon the plains and in the mountains, where men have had to fight their way in the world. The best manhood of our country has been developed through man's own efforts to better his condition, and I would take from no boy the opportunities so many others have enjoyed, except in so far as may be necessary to prevent his employment in places injurious to his moral, mental, or physical well-being.

All I am asking is that a boy between the ages of 12 and 14 years may have the right to work for himself or the persons named in the amendment for such length of time as the judge thinks proper whenever a necessity is shown therefor, and when the work may be performed in a moral and healthful place.

I voted against striking out the provision in this bill prohibiting children from working in mercantile establishments, stores, and so forth, upon the theory that this amendment would be adopted. It would be unlawful under the provisions of this bill for a boy to work in the store of his father's best friend during the summer vacation, or to work in a shop where he could gain much useful knowledge—the same knowledge he would gain in a manual-training school—however necessary it might be for him to earn something to help him obtain a college education, or to provide for his own pressing necessities, even though the employment would be beneficial to the boy's mental, moral, and physical development.

I am not willing to deprive him absolutely of such opportunities. I prefer to let a judge pass upon the facts as they may be presented, and if the necessities of the case demand relief, let the court provide it in the manner set forth in the amendment.

The Senator from Massachusetts says, "How can the judge know anything about this?" Mr. President, let us not forget that this is the capital of our country wherein we are legislating. This is not a manufacturing city, where there are factories and workshops, and where children are being ground to death as they are in great commercial and manufacturing cities having millions of people. There is nothing of that here. This is a modern home city, without great factories, mines, or workshops.

Does anyone doubt that if a man should appear before the court, after such notice as the rules of the court shall prescribe, and file a petition in behalf of a child asking for the privilege of working at some light work in a factory, store, or shop, and the labor of the child was to be used for the benefit of a worthless father, for instance, the court would ascertain that fact and deny the petition, or if it did not that the people of the community in which the child lived would bring the facts before the court and secure a revocation of the permit?

The court has the right, under the terms of the amendment, to revoke the permit at any time.

It seems to me while we should legislate to protect the children of our country, we ought not so to legislate as to prevent the development of those manly qualities of independence and self-reliance which have made the best men of our country. They should not be denied the right to protect those who have protected them when such protection may be given without injury to the child.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, the delay in considering the child-labor problem in the District of Columbia has not been altogether without some advantage. These laws throughout the world, including the various States of the Union, have been in the nature of a growth and a development. It has been my pleasant opportunity to investigate the debates on child-labor legislation from the beginning, and I am interested in noting that this widow, this father, these helpless children have been efficient in every English-speaking country to postpone an effective child-labor code.

They are the same people who put the reform off nearly a quarter of a century in Great Britain. They are the same people who held it up for nearly a generation in Massachusetts, after farsighted philanthropists had had their hearts touched by the miseries of the situation there. It is an interesting study in the problem of the evolution of a great statute that they are still on hand here in the performance of a duty now nearly a half a century old in English-speaking countries.

In fact these helpless parents put this provision which my friend the Senator from Washington has offered here as an amendment into every original child-labor statute that was adopted in the United States practically without exception, and the experience of past generations, drawn from the operation of these laws, has removed that amendment out of every statute except in the case, I think, of South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, and the State of Washington. It will require only fifteen or twenty years in Washington to determine as a practical question that when you put the statute into the hands of a judge instead of upon your statute books you have done a thing that entirely destroys the efficiency of the law.

I, for one, am gradually growing more and more opposed to having the duties of American citizens defined by an order from a court or a report from some commission or other. I believe it to be the duty of Congress to define what the legislative authority has the right to define—what the conduct of men shall be under certain circumstances. I heard a speech here yesterday, which, while I did not indorse all of it, had in it one element which struck me as profoundly true, and that is that what we think ought to be done should be set down in the statute books, so that a man's duty may be defined by law and not by the discretion of a judge or the report of some commission or other.

But from a practical point of view, in all kindness to my honored friend, the Senator from Washington, I will say to him that this provision has been found, by the experience of nearly every State that first adopted it and then abandoned it, destructive of the efficiency of the statute, and I sincerely hope it will not find its way into this proposed act.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington [Mr. PILES] talks about the rights of the boy as if the boy would be kept from his rights by this proposed legislation. The boy or the girl, for it applies to both, is a minor, recognized as such by the law, under the control of parents or guardians. The Senator from Washington in his amendment proposes that the next friend should come in and get a permit from the court—to enable the child to work for himself? No. For the next friend.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. I have seen some of these next friends. I have seen them coming over the gang plank from immigration steamers. I was on a committee that investigated the atrocities of the padrone system. The padrones were next friends. We have people coming to this country all the time who have not American traditions and American beliefs, people who come from countries where children are worked from their earliest childhood and their money taken from them for the support of adults; where education is not valued. Those people bring these helpless children here and work them even in the States where there are stringent laws and good inspection.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. LODGE. I do.

Mr. PILES. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts what he proposes to do with the boy who has no father or mother?

Mr. LODGE. I propose to put this law on the statute book and have the law administered by the proper authorities and not have a judge making it from day to day.

Mr. PILES. That is not answering my question. What do you propose to do with that boy? Do you propose to put him in an institution?

Mr. LODGE. I propose, as we do in Massachusetts and other States, to have him taken care of by the proper institutions which exist in large numbers for just that work.

Mr. PILES. Then I understand the Senator from Massachusetts to say that if a boy is mentally and physically able to take care of himself and wants to take care of himself, and the judge says he may take care of himself, in a moral, healthful place, he will not let him do it?

Mr. LODGE. No; what I say is that I will not let somebody else put the boy to work. It is not the boy putting himself to work. It is somebody else doing it. He can not go himself.

Mr. PILES. If you will not let him work——

Mr. LODGE. Let him work? There is no trouble about letting him work. The boy has plenty of time to work under this bill.

Mr. PILES. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. LODGE. He can work at proper times.

Mr. PILES. The bill provides that he shall not work.

Mr. LODGE. It provides that he shall not work at certain injurious trades, but opens to him all the nonschool time to work as much as he likes in healthful employment. It is all in the first section. There is plenty of opportunity for the boy to work, if he wants to work. The object of the bill is to prevent his being abused and his work sold for the benefit of other people.

Mr. President, if we had nothing but the plains and the forests and the farms to deal with we should not need legislation like this, but we have great congested centers in this country. The capital city of my State has got pushed together in a few square miles a larger population than that of the entire State of Washington. That is a great State, magnificent in its possibilities, with an opening for everybody, but with a sparse population in comparison with its area. On the other hand, take the crowded communities where we have large bodies of recent immigrants to this country—people who are in the habit of exploiting their children and wringing all they can from them. We want to turn those children of the immigrants into good American citizens.

We want to compel them to be sent to school. You can not do it if they are to be allowed to go into the factory and the workshop and the department store; and, as the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] has so well said, making a judge an administrator and applying the statute here and there as he pleases has been tried, and has failed wherever it has been tried. It has been shown to be destructive of the principle of the bill.

Mr. President, the object of this bill is not to destroy the sturdy manhood of the boy. It is to protect the boy in those rights which are greater than the right to work, and more important—the right to have an education, the right to have an opportunity in life, and the right to grow up with a healthy body and a healthy mind, so that he can have a fair chance in the great struggle of life, and not take it from him for the benefit of people—and there are plenty of such people in the world—who want to wring from him the few dollars that he can earn.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] did not answer the question I put to him. I asked him what he was going to do with the boy who had neither father nor mother.

Mr. LODGE. I am going to put him into one of the institutions that are maintained for just such boys, where he will get an education and get an opportunity. This city is full of them, and so is every other city in the country.

Mr. PILES. What institutions do you mean?

Mr. LODGE. I mean the St. John's Orphanage for one, where they have eighty-five such children at this moment.

Mr. PILES. Suppose the boy says, "I will not go there. I want to work my way in the world."

Mr. LODGE. When was a child under 14 ever, in the eye of the law, anything but a minor?

Mr. PILES. I am not contending that he ever was.

Mr. LODGE. It is not the child to whom you give the right. You give it to his next friend.

Mr. PILES. I give the next friend no right, Mr. President.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] said that somebody ought to be named who should make the application for the child, and I said I was perfectly willing to agree to an amendment providing that it might be made on the application of the parent, guardian, or his next friend. Now, if the child has no parent, if he has no guardian, then he must appear in court by his next friend. That is all there is to that. The next friend gets no benefit from the child. The next friend stands there as the guardian of the child in the court.

Mr. LODGE. How does the Senator know that the next friend does not get anything out of the child?

Mr. PILES. I am assuming it would be a gentleman who would make the petition to the court——

Mr. LODGE. That is a pretty large assumption with some of the people who would work children to death.

Mr. PILES. It may be in some sections of the country, but it is not in mine.

Mr. LODGE. There are several sections of the country.

Mr. PILES. I assume that a man who goes into court representing a child is a man of character, especially in the District of Columbia, and that if he is not a man of character the court will discover that fact. The court is not to sit there blindly in determining a question of this nature.

The court will investigate in the community in which the child resides, and it will look into the character and standing of the man who makes the petition on behalf of the child. I am asking nothing for the next friend, except that the child may have the right to go and choose any man as his next friend, to speak for him in court and give him a standing in court, because, as a minor, he can not get there without the aid of parent, guardian, or next friend.

It does seem to me that a boy who does not want to go into an orphanage, but who desires to make his own way, should, under certain conditions, have the right, through some friend, to present his case to the court, and if the court says, "This boy is perfectly competent, physically and mentally, to engage in the employment designated in the petition, that the employment is moral, and will aid instead of injure the boy," he should have the right to engage in it for such length of time as the court thinks proper under all the circumstances surrounding the case.

Mr. LODGE. I thought, if the Senator will allow me, that the main object of this was to give the boy a chance to support the widow and the crippled parent who have been opposing this legislation for the last fifty years, as the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] pointed out.

Mr. PILES. My amendment goes further than that. My amendment is, first, to permit the boy to work for himself, to sustain himself. It is, second, to permit the boy to work for his father or his mother or his brother or his sister, who may have been temporarily injured and it becomes necessary for the boy to help one of his parents or one of his brothers or sisters with his labor, if the judge finds it necessary for him to do it, and that it will not be hurtful for him to do it. That is all my amendment goes to.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is mistaken when he says that a child may work in vacation at any employment he sees fit except certain obnoxious employments. He may not work in a shop, even in vacation. He may not work in a mercantile establishment or in a store, if those words be reinstated, even in vacation, and I can see no harm that would result from a boy working in places of that character if the court itself, after thoroughly investigating the subject, shall determine in favor of the boy's right.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I think the most monstrous proposition that this discussion has developed is that a boy under 14 years of age, without father and mother, shall not be allowed to work, but shall go to an asylum of some sort provided by the public, where every vestige of independence, that which makes for good American citizenship, shall be stunted if not forever destroyed.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. Does the bill apply to both boys and girls?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It does. The Senator was speaking of the boy.

Mr. LODGE. I spoke of the boy because it was brought forward, but I mentioned the girls, and I think it is well to remember——

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I am speaking of the boy, and I should like to have the hands shown in the Senate this afternoon——

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I was going to finish the sentence, but I will yield.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Congress is called upon every year to maintain institutions in the city of Washington to take care of friendless and orphan children. Do I understand the Senator to say that we are doing those children this infamous wrong and taking their manhood and prospects of good citizenship out of them, or is his remark due merely to his enthusiasm? If it is true that we are doing this infinite wrong to the manhood of those children, I should like to ask——

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I yielded for a question, not for an argument.

I want to say, Mr. President, if there is a boy or girl who wants to take advantage of those institutions, all right, and God bless the institution, but if there is a boy with American fiber in him 14 years of age or 13 years of age, cast homeless on the world, who wants to make his own way in the world, for God's sake do not make him dependent on public charity.

I should like to have a show of hands in the Senate and in the other House as to whether boys 14 or 13 years of age imbued with true American spirit to carve out their destiny that has been found among the greatest lawmakers on the face of the earth should be committed to a charitable institution. I say on that question but few hands would go up in this Chamber and in the other in favor of the proposition.

I shall vote for this amendment because I believe in giving the American boy the advantage of his enthusiastic entrance into life with a desire to support himself and a desire to bring his Americanism to the front. Who will favor the idea that a boy of that character, filled to the marrow with a spirit of work and energy and determination, shall become a public charity, and that what little independence of spirit he may have shall perhaps be throttled for all time?

[Mr. FULTON addressed the Senate. See Appendix.]

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, as I am, I suppose, the unfortunate author of what the Senator from Wyoming politely calls a monstrous proposition, I should like to say a word in regard to it. Senators talk as if this bill prevented boys from doing any work, as if, should the bill become a law, no boy could get employment at all.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator please point out what work the boy can engage in if the bill passes? What work can boys do here in the District of Columbia? You cut them off from that.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will wait a moment I will tell him. They can engage in every form of employment not specifically mentioned in the bill when it is not in school hours.

Mr. NELSON. What is the employment that they can engage in outside of that in the District? Can the Senator specify anything particularly?

Mr. LODGE. They are excluded from factories and workshops, from telegraph offices, restaurants, hotels, apartments, theaters, bowling alleys, and billiard halls.

Mr. FULTON. All the time?

Mr. LODGE. All the time. Those are the employments which are thought to be bad for them.

Mr. FULTON. Of course, I will say to the Senator I would exclude them all from pool rooms and bowling alleys, and no judge of the juvenile court would permit them to be taken there.

Mr. LODGE. How does the Senator know that?

Mr. FULTON. Because I have that much confidence in the institutions of our country and in the courts of the land.

Mr. LODGE. Confidence in everybody except the people who manage charities.

Mr. FULTON. The Senator is willing to submit to the courts of the country the most important interests he has. Why? Because he has confidence in the courts.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator asked me, in the first place, if a boy can sell newspapers. That is one very obvious thing that he can do. He can be a messenger boy. He can engage in any out of door pursuit.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Of course the Senator is aware that in the first section of the bill there is a prohibition against employment "in the distribution or transmission of merchandise or messages."

Mr. LODGE. The Senator is right; but he can sell newspapers; he can engage in any household employment; he can engage in any out of door employment, either in farm or garden or about a stable, or anything of that sort at any time when school is not being kept. He has plenty of employment. All the out of door employments are open to him. But this is not to allow a judge to put him into a factory or a mine on the demand of a next friend.

Moreover, the bill protects the girls. I suppose it is for the advantage of the community to give little girls the opportunity, as it is said, to earn their living and exercise no protection over them!

Mr. President, this legislation and all the legislation like it is not intended for the small minority of boys nearly 14 years of age who want to get work for themselves. It is intended to protect those unhappy children, of whom there are many, who are in the hands of parents or guardians or next friends, who are willing to make money out of their misery and weakness.

Mr. President, I have some confidence in the heads of the great charities. I think it is better to be cared for and educated in an orphanage than to be struggling in the streets, especially if it is a girl.

I have seen much more stringent laws than this in operation, and I have not seen them affect materially the manhood or the prosperity of the community in which those laws have been in effect. I think that this ideal boy who is being shut out from occupations, when there are abundance of them here under the bill, appears most frequently when there is an effort to protect the unfortunate children other people want to make money out of.

Mr. GALLINGER. Two years ago, Mr. President, I was somewhat instrumental in securing a compulsory-education law for the District of Columbia. Turning to that law, I find that the first section reads as follows:

That every parent, guardian, or other person residing in the District of Columbia having charge and control of a child between the ages of 8 and 14 years shall cause such child to be regularly instructed in the elementary branches of knowledge, including reading, writing, English grammar, geography, and arithmetic, and pursuant to this end every such parent, guardian, or other person aforesaid shall cause any child under the charge and control of such person to attend some public, private, or parochial school during the period of each year the public schools in the District are in session, on the customary days and during the customary hours of the school term.

Mr. President, that law, which is on the statute book and which is working satisfactorily, as I am told, absolutely compels children up to the age of 14 years to attend school, and we have truant officers who are charged with the privilege of entering all establishments where children under that age are employed and seeing that they do attend the public schools.

It seems to me that the proposed amendment comes pretty near doing away with that provision in the compulsory education law where we give into the hands of a judge the right to say the child need not go to school; that there are conditions under which that child is better off out of school than in school, and hence not only is the beneficent purpose of the bill under consideration largely emasculated, but the compulsory education law is likewise in a sense destroyed.

Mr. President, I am not going to occupy any time. I have refrained from doing that because of my great anxiety to have the bill voted on. I am not in the habit of alluding to myself or my early struggles, but it would have been a blessing to me, Mr. President, if I had been kept in school until the age of 14 years. All through my life I have felt and realized that fact. I do think the best disposition we can make of children until they are 14 years of age is to keep them in school, and that is precisely what the compulsory education law and what this law contemplate.

The judge of the juvenile court is a most estimable gentleman. He is doing good work, but he is a very busy man. I suggested to the Senator from Washington [Mr. PILES] that this matter, if it is to go in the bill at all, ought to be in his hands rather than in the hands of the judges of the higher courts, who are overburdened, and who in the very nature of things would not pay much attention to these trivial matters. But the judge of the juvenile court is a very busy man likewise.

I think when we stop to consider the population of the city of Washington, 350,000 people in this little territory of 70 square miles, and consider the fact that it is a population different from that of any other city in the United States, we ought to be careful not to give a certain class of parents or guardians this right upon such representations as they might make to a court—false representations, very likely, in many instances—which the judge in the nature of things could not ascertain definitely. I think we ought to hesitate before we put into the hands of the judge of a court already overburdened with work the right to nullify to any extent the legislation of 1906, called the "compulsory education law," or the provisions of the bill now under consideration.

I trust that the Senator's amendment, offered of course in good faith and in the full belief that it will be a valuable addition to this bill, may not be agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington [Mr. PILES.]

Mr. CULBERSON. Let the amendment be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, and following amendment already agreed to, after the word "evening," in line 13, insert the following additional proviso:

And provided further, That the judge of the juvenile court of said District may, upon the application of the parent, guardian, or next friend of said child, issue a permit for the employment of any child between the ages of 12 and 14 years at any occupation or employment not, in his judgment, dangerous or injurious to the health or morals of such child, upon evidence satisfactory to him that the labor of such child is necessary for its support, or for the assistance of a disabled, ill, or invalid father or mother, or for the support, in whole or in part, of a younger brother or sister or a widowed mother. Such permits shall be issued for a definite time, but they shall be revocable at the discretion of the judge by whom they are issued or by his successor in office. Hearings for granting and revoking permits shall be held upon such notice and under such rules and regulations as the judge of said court shall prescribe.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GALLINGER. In view of the fact that I am going to offer an amendment that is included in the letter I hold in my hand, I will ask that the full letter be read, as it is brief and of great importance, I think.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

BOARD OF EDUCATION OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
FRANKLIN SCHOOL BUILDING,
Washington, D. C., February 17, 1908.

Hon. JACOB H. GALLINGER, United States Senator,
Chairman Committee on District of Columbia,
United States Senate.

SIR: On behalf of the board of education of the District of Columbia, I have the honor to place before your committee a request for an amendment to Senate bill No. 4812, to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia. It is the earnest desire of the board of education that section 11, on page 7, and line 9, of the bill be amended by the addition of the following words:

"And in all cases arising under an act providing for compulsory education in the District of Columbia, approved June 8, 1906."

The compulsory education law is one that directly affects the welfare of the children and is closely allied to the child-labor law. In the opinion of the board of education it is for the best interests of the work that both these laws should be administered by the juvenile court.

I earnestly trust that this request of the board of education may reach you in time to have it properly incorporated. Our knowledge of your interest in this matter is sufficient to assure us that it will be most carefully considered; and should you be able to regard it favorably your action will be greatly appreciated. I have the honor to remain,

Very respectfully,
HARRY O. HINE,
Secretary Board of Education.

Mr. GALLINGER. The compulsory education law was approved nearly two years ago and the control of these children was placed in the police court. It needs no argument on my part to persuade Senators that they are much safer under the juvenile court, where they are kept away from the associations that necessarily are found about a police court. This is simply an amendment placing the children in that law under the jurisdiction of the juvenile court, as they are in the bill we have under consideration. I ask the Secretary to read the proposed amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of section 11 the following words:

And in all cases arising under an act providing for compulsory education in the District of Columbia, approved June 8, 1906.

So that if amended the section will read:

That the juvenile court of the District of Columbia is hereby given jurisdiction in all cases arising under this act, and in all cases arising under an act providing for compulsory education in the District of Columbia, approved June 8, 1906.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I wish to ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question for information. I know in a general way about the compulsory school act and I ask the Senator what penalties are prescribed in that act and upon whom are they visited?

Mr. GALLINGER. I have not examined the act recently and I will have to look at it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I suppose that they are like other acts of the sort, and that the penalty is visited not upon the child, but upon the parent or guardian.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes. Section 7 of the act provides—

That any parent or other person who makes a false statement concerning the age or school attendance of a child between the ages of 8 and 14, who is under his control, such false statement being made with intent to deceive under this act, shall upon conviction thereof be punished by a fine not to exceed $20.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It occurs to me that the child does not in any way come in contact with the police court, and that this being a violation of the law by an adult, it would be punished not in the juvenile court, but in the court provided for the punishment of crimes and misdemeanors. I submit to the Senator whether that is not a more reasonable view of the situation.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the Senator is right in saying that the child does not come in direct contact with the police court, and I was incorrect in making that statement.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It is simply a question of the violation of the law by an adult.

Mr. GALLINGER. But in the law we are now considering we have a penalty, and the juvenile court passes upon it. It has been thought by the board of education that it is better that these two laws be both administered in that regard in the juvenile court. I care nothing about it, and, if there is any controversy over it, I shall not urge the amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I am not going to make any controversy over it. I only want to call the attention of the Senator to the question as to whether the juvenile court has any jurisdiction to punish misdemeanors under the general law—whether it would not make the law absolutely void so far as these penalties are concerned?

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from Wyoming feels that way about it, as I have not time to look it up now, I will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It is simply a question in my mind.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I am compelled shortly to leave the Chamber, and I desire to say one or two very brief words about the bill in general, because I want to express my very emphatic approval of this measure and my earnest pleasure that we are about to see it passed—this, Mr. President, not because it will effect anything of great consequence, but because it is a step, however short, in the right direction, and because also it is a sort of first fruits of the agitation that has now been going on for a year and a half or two years to remedy the real and critical evil that exists in this country.

Whether the bill be considered merely as an affirmative, though limited, act of the National Legislature, expressing its disapproval of this evil, or whether it be considered as an example upon which further legislation may be based, nevertheless it ought to—and I am glad to say that it does—enlist the hearty support and enthusiastic approval of everybody, regardless of party.

I said a moment ago, Mr. President, that my very earnest gratification at the passage of this bill is not because I think it will greatly remedy anything. As has been pointed out by several Senators, this is not a great industrial center. Perhaps here less than in any city of similar size in the Republic does the evil of child labor exist. There are no factories here; there are no mines here; there are no sweat shops here. This is the capital of the nation; and in a peculiar sense—not true of any other city—it is a residence city, a city given over to official life and to those occupations which minister to those who are thus brought here. Therefore, the affirmative benefits of this bill will not and can not be great.

Neither do I think it will be particularly effective as an example, because, as has already been so clearly stated by the chairman of the committee [Mr. DOLLIVER], examples already exist, not in thirty-six States, but perhaps in as many as seven States. So, if merely moral example were sufficient to induce the legislatures of all the States to pass adequate and wise legislation, it would have long since been upon the statute books.

Those who profit by child labor are not to be influenced by any moral example. I said "child labor;" but I do not mean child labor; I mean child slavery—that is what has aroused the nation. The occupation of children such as the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] approves, I also very heartily approve. Nothing better can occur to a child than to be usefully employed in the open air, provided it is within the safe limits of its strength. Such occupation is not only excellent for the child in every possible way, physically, mentally, and morally, but it is also a form of recreation if it is not above the child's strength.

But the child labor that everybody refers to when he uses that phrase now is that species of child destruction which existed in England up to twenty-five years ago, which undermined the manhood of the British people, and which exists in this country to perhaps the extent of at least 1,000,000 children.

Nevertheless this bill is a step, a brief one, a short one, in the right direction. It is at least an affirmative moral action upon the part of the National Legislature. Yet let no person deceive himself. This bill, applicable to the District of Columbia, where the evil does not really exist, will not assuage the wrath of the American people against what is the real infamy that has awakened the conscience of the nation; nor will it in the remotest degree quiet that conscience.

The truth about it Mr. President, is that Senators are now familiar, and the country for some years has been more familiar than we have been, with the extent and the revolting nature of this evil. It is not on the farms; it is not in the stores; no; but it is in the mills, the factories, the sweat shops, and on the breakers of coal mines, where little children, boys and girls as young in many instances as 5 years of age, are at work day and night, not for eight hours, not for ten hours, but, in some instances, for twelve hours. Those are not sporadic examples; there are not hundreds of cases, nor thousands of cases, nor tens of thousands of cases; but there are hundreds of thousands of cases; and those children are being ruined in body and in mind.

Mr. President, there is a good deal of excitement if an occasional wild fanatic, called an "anarchist," lands upon our shores; yet we ourselves have in our country at the present time a system which is creating the material of anarchists; which is producing every year, by the lowest estimate I have been able to find, certainly as many as 250,000 degenerates who have malformed bodies and beclouded minds and hate-filled hearts. That, Mr. President, is the reason that this bill can not greatly touch the real evil, and yet, so earnestly am I in favor of this affirmative act that we are about to obtain that I am willing—in addition to the reason given by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], and which I have heretofore referred to, that a report of the national bill will soon be had and a consideration of and vote upon it be obtained in the Senate early next session—to waive the presentation of any other question that might now complicate this one, and also out of regard to the desires of several Senators.

Now, just one word more. The question of the constitutionality of national child-labor legislation has been raised. That, of course, is something that we are going to consider hereafter. It is conceded on all hands to be a grave and a far-reaching question, and yet attention is called to the fact—and it is a matter that will be debated extensively, as it should be, by those who believe on both sides of that question hereafter when the bill is out of the committee and up at an early time next session for consideration—attention is called to the fact that every law that prohibited any article from interstate commerce—of which there have been more, I find, than twenty passed—that has been carried to the Supreme Court of the United States has been upheld by that tribunal without one single exception, and so far as I can find every law that has been presented to an inferior Federal tribunal has been upheld without one single exception.

More than that, I said a moment ago that we have something more than a score of such laws on the statute books. When the time comes to argue the question I shall show that not a single one of them was resisted, excepting only where some great financial interests were profiting by the evil proposed to be suppressed, and we have now on the statute books not only more than a score of laws prohibiting articles from interstate commerce, but some prohibiting articles absolutely harmless in themselves, and which affect the manufactures of various States.

Mr. President, I think that we are to be congratulated upon the fact that we are consummating at last, in answer to a great moral agitation, such as has occurred in this country before when critical evils faced the Republic, a beginning of affirmative legislation. Of course it is nothing more than a beginning, and a very little beginning; but it is something. However little it may accomplish, it at least registers the moral condemnation of every man in this Chamber, which I concede all equally feel against this monstrous abuse; and, further, that we are to be congratulated on the fact that we shall discuss and have an opportunity to discuss in a full and free manner in the Senate, and vote upon it, the larger question of the uprooting of the real evil that is not only injuring the bodies, but, in many cases, killing them and forever ruining the souls of myriads of American children.

I say this with the permission of the Senator from Iowa, because I am compelled to leave the Chamber, and I did want to say some hearty words of my very earnest approval of this measure, for which I shall vote, of course, with the keenest possible enthusiasm; and although as the first fruits of this agitation it may be very small and very limited, it is something.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, on page 7, line 7, I move to strike out the word "juvenile" and insert the word "police."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, line 7, before the word "court," it is proposed to strike out "juvenile" and insert "police."

Mr. HEYBURN. I will, Mr. President, say a word in explanation of the amendment. The juvenile court is not invested with the power by the act creating it to hear and determine the class of cases that will arise under this bill. It would not have jurisdiction to determine any case in which the parties were over 17 years of age. In the very juvenile-court act it is provided that violations of the laws there mentioned by persons over 17 years of age must be determined in the police court. That is the limitation placed upon the jurisdiction of the juvenile court by the act creating it. Therefore in this bill it will be necessary to substitute the "police court" for the "juvenile court," it being provided in section 11 of the bill—

That the juvenile court of the District of Columbia is hereby given jurisdiction in all cases arising under this act.

You can not give the court jurisdiction in that offhand way, inasmuch as the court was created for the very purpose, the limited purpose, of dealing with people under 17 years of age, and the act itself recognized that fact, I repeat, in its own provisions by providing that where they were over 17 years of age they must be sent to the police court for the enforcement of the provisions of the law.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. PILES. I desire to renew my amendment in the Senate, and ask for a vote on it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That will be in order later. Are there any amendments to be reserved?

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to reserve the amendment made on motion of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], striking out the words "mercantile establishment, store, and business office."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That amendment will be reserved.

Mr. PILES. I have an amendment pending, I think. Have I not?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the other amendments made as in Committee of the Whole will be concurred in. The question now is on concurring in the amendment, made as in Committee of the Whole, proposed by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON].

Mr. NELSON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. TELLER. Let the amendment be stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, on page 1, lines 5 and 6, it is proposed to strike out the words "mercantile establishment, store, business office."

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] to the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRIGGS] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. DANIEL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I again announce the transfer of my general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] to the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. LONG] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. TALIAFERRO (when Mr. MILTON'S name was called). I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. MILTON], who is unavoidably absent, is paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY], but observing that on the previous vote on this same amendment he voted on the same side of the question that I did, I will take the liberty of voting. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I should like the RECORD to show that my colleague [Mr. ALLISON] is paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER].

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 27, as follows:

YEAS—29.

Ankeny	Foraker	Overman	Stewart

So Mr. NELSON'S amendment was concurred in.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move after the words just stricken out to insert the words "department store," so as to read:

Factory, workshop, department store.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire proposes an amendment which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "workshop," in line 5, on page 1, it is proposed to insert the words "department store."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLLIVER. In line 3, on page 5, I desire to substitute the word "a" for the word "such," so that it will read "permits a child."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PILES. I renew the amendment in the Senate which I offered in Committee of the Whole.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, after the amendment inserted on page 1, at the end of line 13, the following:

And provided further, That the judge of the juvenile court of said District may, upon the application of the parent, guardian, or next friend of said child, issue a permit for the employment of any child between the ages of 12 and 14 years at any occupation or employment not in his judgment dangerous or injurious to the health or morals of such child, upon evidence satisfactory to him that the labor of such child is necessary for its support, or for the assistance of a disabled, ill, or invalid father or mother, or for the support in whole or in part of a younger brother or sister or a widowed mother. Such permits shall be issued for a definite time, but they shall be revocable at the discretion of the judge by whom they are issued or by his successor in office. Hearings for granting and revoking permits shall be held upon such notice and under such rules and regulations as the judge of said court shall prescribe.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington.

Mr. PILES. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I announce, not only on this vote, but on any other vote that may come upon this bill, the transfer of my pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] to the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. LONG], and I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. TALIAFERRO (when Mr. MILTON'S name was called). I again announce the fact that my colleague [Mr. MILTON] is paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). Under the circumstances I have already announced regarding my regular pair, I will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 37, nays 19, as follows:

YEAS—37.

Ankeny	Dick	Nelson	Stephenson
Bacon	Dillingham	Newlands	Stewart
Borah	du Pont	Overman	Stone

Burrows	Hansbrough	Milton	Taylor
Clarke, Ark.	Hemenway	Money	Tillman
Culberson	Kittredge	Nixon	Wetmore

So Mr. PILES'S amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 6826. An act to correct the military record of Albert S. Austin; and

S. 6358. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Masonic Mutual Relief Association of the District of Columbia."

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 17288) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909.

REORGANIZATION OF CONSULAR SERVICE.

Mr. COUSINS rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. COUSINS. To move the adoption of a conference report on the bill (S. 4112) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the reorganization of the consular service of the United States," approved March 5, 1906.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report and also the statement.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 4112) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the reorganization of the consular service of the United States," approved April 5, 1906, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert "Gibraltar" on page 4, line 8, after "Erfurt."

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert "Limoges" on page 4, line 10, after "Leeds."

R. G. COUSINS,
C. B. LANDIS,
WM. M. HOWARD,
Managers on the part of the House.

H. C. LODGE,
S. M. CULLOM,
A. O. BACON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (S. 4112) to amend "An act to provide for the reorganization of the consular service of the United States," submit the following detailed statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the conference report:

The act as it passed the Senate placed the salary of the consul at Melbourne at $5,000, at Limoges at $3,500, and at Gibraltar at $3,000. The House reduced these salaries as follows: Melbourne, to $3,000; Limoges, to $2,000, and Gibraltar, to $2,000. By the action of the conferees, Melbourne remains at $3,000 and Limoges and Gibraltar are each increased to $2,500, resulting in no increase in the amount of salaries for the consular service appropriated by the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill as it passed the House last week.

The increases were recommended by the Secretary of State, who submitted reports from the consular inspectors showing the increases to be justified.

ROBERT G. COUSINS,
CHAS. B. LANDIS,
WM. M. HOWARD,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri rose.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question or two of the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. COUSINS. For a question; yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is this the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill?

Mr. COUSINS. No; this is the amendment to the readjustment of the consular service, passed a month and a half ago.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the consular report.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. COUSINS. Oh, for a question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But, Mr. Speaker, I would like a little time to discuss this report.

Mr. COUSINS. Mr. Speaker, there is really no difference here. If there is a question the gentleman desires to ask, I would be glad to yield to that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman yields to a question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, but I have not asked a question, Mr. Speaker. I wish to be recognized in my own right. The gentleman knows the rules, and so does the Speaker, and when the Chair puts the question it is tantamount to yielding the floor on the part of the gentleman in charge of the bill.

The SPEAKER. And so does the gentleman from New York know the rules——

Mr. COUSINS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. And the gentleman from Iowa, holding the floor, moves the previous question. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 148, nays 115, answered "present" 11, not voting 113, as follows:

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am proceeding to state the case to the Chair and what I desire to call up.

Mr. TAWNEY. The regular order is the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds that that is correct, and unless the gentleman has arisen to a parliamentary inquiry——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do——

The CHAIRMAN (continuing). Or to make a motion——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire to call up the item that was passed by unanimous consent yesterday, and is pending. The RECORD states that it was passed subject to be called up. Now I have the RECORD here before me, and if there is any doubt I will read it to the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that there is a point of order pending upon that proposition.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But it is subject to be considered. It was passed until called up, and I want it disposed of now.

Mr. TAWNEY. The subject referred to by the gentleman from Alabama was passed until the conclusion of the bill, with the understanding that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri should be pending, subject to the point of order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, the statement of the gentleman from Minnesota is not correct, according to the RECORD, I undertake to say; and if the Chair would like to hear the RECORD, I will read it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman may read the RECORD.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will read:

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, before the Clerk proceeds to read I should like to ask unanimous consent to return to the section in relation to the investigation of mining disasters.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I understand the objection to the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHANEY] making an appropriation of $50,000 has been withdrawn, and, adopting the language of that amendment, I should like to reoffer it, and I ask unanimous consent for that purpose.

Mr. HACKNEY. I think the gentleman is mistaken as to the objection being withdrawn. Until the other gentlemen who are interested in that matter are here I shall have to object. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] if certain other gentlemen come in, I will try to confer with them. At this time I will have to object myself.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I submit to the gentleman that the objector has withdrawn his objection.

It is not a fact; because I had not withdrawn the objection.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asked unanimous consent to return to this paragraph. The Chair put the question, and no objection was heard. The question now is upon the amendment which the gentleman from Missouri offered, and which the Clerk will report.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHANEY]. I adopt that language, and ask that it be reported.

Mr. HACKNEY. I make the point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri makes the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. HACKNEY. I will state to the gentleman that if he will wait until the other parties interested in this matter are upon the floor, we might be able to make an agreement.

Mr. TAWNEY. Unanimous consent having been given to return to the paragraph to offer the amendment, I suggest that we read, and we will recur to the paragraph hereafter.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless objection is heard, the amendment will be considered as pending, subject to the point of order.

Now I say it is pending; it is subject to be called up, and I want it disposed of, and therefore——

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman from Alabama is not in charge of this bill, and we will go on reading the bill, unless the committee orders otherwise.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I make the point of order that this amendment is pending now, and is subject to be called up, especially when the gentleman who did make the objection to it originally and who did not withdraw that objection is here, and demands that it be disposed of. I ask the Chair to rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that there is no rule on the proposition, and therefore no precedent for disposing of it. But the Chair thinks that it is probably the better practice——

Mr. TAWNEY. I submit it is not within the power of the gentleman from Alabama to control the disposition or movement of the bill now under consideration. This proposition went over to be called up hereafter, and of course the time when it will be called up is within the discretion of those who are in charge of the bill. That it will be called up, I will assure the gentleman from Alabama, there will be no question whatever.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There is a point of order pending.

Mr. TAWNEY. And we will proceed to read the bill, and it will be called up at the conclusion.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There is a point of order pending. We have got the right to demand a disposition of the point of order under the rules of the House in this committee.

Mr. TAWNEY. Until the committee agrees to recur to that paragraph and the amendments, or unless the bill is read through, and then it will be the gentleman's right, as well as the right of any other Member, to demand recurrence.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand that there is no precedent in reference to this matter. It is a new question for the Chair to decide; but I wish to call the Chair's attention to the language used here. I objected to the consideration of the proposition. A gentleman on the floor of the House stated that that objection was withdrawn. I did not withdraw the objection. I do not know on what authority he stated that it was withdrawn, but the language clearly shows that the purpose of passing this matter was until I could return to the floor.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. When I stated on the floor that the objection had been withdrawn——

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. A parliamentary inquiry. A great many of us do not know what provision it is that is referred to.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I hope the gentleman will not take me off the floor. I am making an explanation. When I stated on the floor yesterday that the objection had been withdrawn, I did not refer to the gentleman from Alabama, but I referred to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have no complaint to make of the gentleman from Missouri. I knew that he had made some mistake if he did refer to me; but I did not withdraw my objection.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I referred to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GAINES].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the question presented is one of orderly procedure of the business of the House, and especially the orderly reading of the bill. Recurring to the language already referred to by the gentleman from Alabama, the gentleman from Minnesota said:

Unanimous consent having been given to return to the paragraph to offer an amendment, I suggest that we read, and will recur to the paragraph hereafter—

No specific time having been fixed.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless objection is made, the amendment will be considered as pending, subject to the point of order.

The regular order this morning, since we have gone into the Committee of the Whole, is the reading of the bill, and it occurs to the Chair that the orderly procedure would be to return to this amendment after the completion of the bill, and not at this time, and that it is not in the power of the gentleman from Alabama or the gentleman from Minnesota, or any other single Member, to destroy or interfere with that order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then, I understand the Chairman to rule that it can not be taken up by anybody until the bill is finished?

The CHAIRMAN. Not by any one person.

Mr. TAWNEY. By unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; the committee could——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course anything can be done by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. But it is not in the power of any one person to take it out of its order, and the present is not its order.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I move that we now recur to that pending amendment and dispose of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Ohio that that would have to be done by unanimous consent, and not by a majority vote, by motion.

Mr. DOUGLAS. A parliamentary inquiry. Why so?

The CHAIRMAN. Well, because it is one of the rules of the House. Here is a fixed order.

Mr. TAWNEY. I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is the reading of the bill, and that can only be interfered with by unanimous consent.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Another parliamentary inquiry: Why is it any more the regular order to proceed with the reading of the bill than to dispose of that amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Because the regular order is the reading of the bill after we go into Committee of the Whole. The House is in Committee of the Whole, and the regular order is the reading of the bill. The Clerk will resume the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, $4,493,800.

Mr. TIRRELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 24, page 137, add the following:

"Provided, That no part of the foregoing appropriation shall be expended for any purpose in any Branch of a National Home for Disabled Volunteers that maintains or permits to be maintained on its premises a bar, canteen, or other place where beer, wine, or other intoxicating liquors are sold."

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that amendment.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, this is a matter that a great many Members of the House are interested in, and unless there is some limit fixed for the debate on the proposition it will consume a great deal more time than is necessary for an intelligent disposition of the question. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto close in one hour and a half.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Is it the understanding that the time is to be equally divided?

Mr. TAWNEY. The time is to be equally divided between those in favor and those opposed.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. To be controlled by the Chair, or the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. KEIFER. Is it to be under the five-minute rule?

Mr. TAWNEY. To be under the five-minute rule.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The time to be controlled by the Chair and recognitions to be made alternately.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph be closed in one hour and thirty minutes, the time to be equally divided between the two sides, under the five-minute rule, and to be controlled by the Chair.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Does this arrangement, if agreed to, dispose of the point of order raised?

The CHAIRMAN. Not at all.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is reserved.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri has not made the point of order, but reserved it.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I suggest that the gentleman from Minnesota make it two hours instead of an hour and a half.

Mr. TAWNEY. There is great difference of opinion, and I do not suppose if we debated the proposition for a week that it would change the vote of any man, even though it might change his opinion. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. I suggest to the gentleman from Minnesota that if he desires to limit the debate to one hour and a half, that would permit nine speeches on each side of five minutes each, and if the gentleman from Minnesota does not do it, in order to protect those who shall speak, I give notice that I shall object to every extension of time under the five-minute rule on this question. Members must make their speeches in five minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. I shall object unless with the request there is coupled the provision that no Member shall speak longer than five minutes.

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not think it is possible for me to couple that with my request, or I should have done so.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I want to suggest to the Committee on Appropriations that this point of order, if it is going to be made, ought to be disposed of before we conclude this debate, for two reasons: In the first place, there is no use in debating it for an hour and a half if the point of order is going to be sustained, and in the next place, the request says that all debate on this paragraph shall conclude in an hour and a half.

Mr. TAWNEY. On the paragraph and pending amendments.

Mr. NORRIS. If at the end the point of order is sustained, no other amendment made to avoid the point of order could be debated.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will state to the gentleman from Nebraska that this identical question has been ruled upon twice, and I do not think there is any doubt as to whether the proposition is in order or not.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of calling for the regular order.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I suppose the regular order would be to pass on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri has reserved the point of order.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I now make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri desire to be heard?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will withhold my request until the point of order is disposed of.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I am well aware that the same point of order was made two years ago and was not sustained, but this is a new Congress, and consequently I desire a ruling on the part of the Chair as to whether this amendment is in order or not. In my view, Mr. Chairman, it is clearly new legislation on an appropriation bill. It comes here, it is true, in the garb of a limitation, but there can be no two opinions on the fact that it really is new legislation. It imposes on the managers of the Soldiers' Homes a new law, by which they are to be governed in the administration of their duties.

Hence I claim that it is clearly new legislation, and I am sure that at heart every Member on this floor is satisfied that this is new legislation, merely clothed in the garb of a limitation. In other words, a subterfuge is resorted to for the purpose of making this new legislation seemingly in order. But it is new legislation, and I therefore make the point of order.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I desire only to say in opposition to the claim that this is subject to a point of order; that this is a limitation of the kind recognized within the rule. It prohibits the use of the money unless the provisions of the amendment are carried out. It is a limitation and it is always in order.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Suppose under the construction which the gentleman cites, namely, that it is a limitation and always in order, that the House should decide that all of these Soldiers' Homes should be closed. That would be a limitation. Would not that be new legislation, I ask the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, are we not dealing with the question of closing, but with the question of an appropriation, and we wish to prevent the money appropriated from being used in a certain way, and that is a limitation.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I would simply request the Chair to examine the precedents of the House on the exact, identical language and the precise proposition ruled upon by the gentleman who now occupies the Chair. With that we will be entirely satisfied.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair in the Fifty-ninth Congress, in the first session and at the second session, had this precise question presented, and in the first session delivered a very long and elaborate opinion as to the proposition and ruled that the amendment was clearly in order, because it was a limitation and not new legislation. The Chair sees no reason for not adhering to the former ruling, and therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the vote be taken on the pending amendment without debate. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the vote be taken on the pending amendment without debate. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I object. Some Members of the House desire to illuminate the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York objects.

Mr. TAWNEY rose.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw that objection.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I understand the objection of the gentleman from New York is withdrawn.

Mr. KIMBALL. Mr. Chairman, I renew the objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in one hour and a half; that the debate proceed under the five-minute rule, and that the Chair have the disposition of the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in one hour and thirty minutes under the five-minute rule, the Chair to control the time, the time to be equally divided between those favoring and those opposing the amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I think if this question is going to be debated, that debate may develop the disposition of the House better if it is allowed to run on a while, and therefore I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama objects.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I renew my request, that the vote be taken on the pending amendment without debate.

Mr. KIMBALL. Mr. Chairman, I renew my objection.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to offer to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TIRRELL], which I would like to offer now, to have it pending.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from New York, who proposes an amendment to his amendment?

Mr. TIRRELL. I do not see how I can.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will be recognized at the close of the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. TIRRELL. Mr. Chairman, the amendment that I have offered is substantially the same as the amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill which was made in 1906 and 1907. To that bill, however, in 1906, there was attached a condition that it should not be operative until March, 1907. Inasmuch, therefore, as the officials of the Soldiers' Homes do not make up their report until the close of the fiscal year, or after June 30 of each year, there is only one official report, that issued last summer, from the officers of these Homes, which gives information relative to the operation of the canteen or anticanteen law. As the anticanteen régime was only in operation four months during that time, the only official report that we have is one which includes a year which had eight months of the canteen and four months without it.

The only other evidence which I have been able to find which has been submitted to this body or any members thereof, or to any committee connected therewith, is what purports to be extracts from hearings before the subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations, which will be undoubtedly referred to as a strong argument in favor of the restoration of the canteen. Upon an examination, however, of these alleged hearings, I find that they contain simply an extract of a few lines from the last official report of the officers of these Homes and a series of letters from the governors to the chairman of the committee.

I object to taking any such letters as evidence upon which to base our action. I find upon examination of this document that they have given statistics, or pretended to give statistics, in regard to the operation of the canteen and the anticanteen law. I find that in the Central Branch they report only the total number of arrests for all crimes. How are you going to ascertain from the total number of arrests for all crimes the number arrested for drunkenness or for leave without absence, or for any other crime for which they may be arrested in these Homes? I find in the Northwestern and Eastern Branches they give the total number arrested for drunkenness only. I find in the Southern Branch for 1906 they give the total number arrested for drunkenness or causes resulting therefrom. What causes resulting therefrom? How many cases cited here in this alleged evidence submitted to the Committee on Appropriations were for one or for the other? I find that they give in 1907 only the total arrests for all crimes and breaking of all regulations of the Southern Home. How many are for breaking of the regulations? In the Western, Pacific, and Marion Homes there are statistics for drunkenness, but whether that included also absences without leave does not appear. In the Danville Home they give only the arrests for drunkenness and bringing in whisky. How many cases are for bringing in whisky and how many for drunkenness? Were half a dozen for drunkenness and the rest for bringing in whisky? You see it gives no detailed information in regard to the operation of the anti-canteen provision. At the Mountain Home they only give the total arrests for 1906 and 1907 for drunkenness. Now, then, so much for the statistics which are, for the reasons given, unreliable and from which you can only draw deductions according to the standpoint you take. But whether there were more cases of drunkenness or not after the canteen was abolished, I want to call attention to what is said here by the governor of the Central Branch, which is a complete refutation of all the other arguments which these governors submit in favor of the canteen. Notice what he says; that is the point for which we, on this side, are contending. But for lack of time I will leave to others the reading of this important admission.

The truth of this matter is there is a predisposition of the governors of these Homes in favor of a canteen. Their reports, in my judgment, are thereby colored and distorted. They see things as they want to see them. I do not assert intentional misrepresentation is intended, but that inevitable misrepresentation which follows from a strong bias in favor of a canteen and the inability to appreciate or apparently comprehend the effect upon soldiers, inmates of the Home, who are total abstainers or very moderate drinkers. These governors should appear before a committee of Congress and be subjected to cross-examination. I want to know what their rules and regulations are relative to discipline in the Homes. I want to know in maintaining a canteen how much restriction they have placed upon the men in buying liquor. I want to know if they are not allowed to pass in and out in droves and buy as many glasses of liquor as they have checks. I want to know if they are limited in the number of checks they can purchase. I want to know if the statement is true which is asserted by scores of eyewitnesses that there is substantially no limitation, and sometimes the same soldier will pass in and out as the line of men sweeps in and out of the canteen from six to a dozen times. I want to know if it is not true that the men intoxicated in the canteen are not quickly taken by their comrades to barracks near by without arrest. I want to know if it has not been their policy to exercise the utmost leniency in enforcing discipline; in other words, not restraining them more than they consider actually necessary. I want to know if they do not take the ground that if the soldiers want beer they will have it; it is better for them to have it and they will assist them in securing it. I want to know if they have not talked this up among the men and advised them to patronize the canteen for the benefit of the amusement fund. As to their latest statistics, will they please inform us when such a cross-examination is afforded why they allow men whom they know will become drunk to leave the Home on pay day and wander to the dives outside for liquor? Why are they not refused leave of absence when it is known certainly that it is solely to get drunk? Are these governors administering a solemn trust to assist inebriates to become intoxicated? Why have they never furnished us information as to the number of times each soldier has been intoxicated or arrested or confined during the year? Are they afraid to disclose the existence of weak discipline or too many cases of veterans with an appetite for liquor allowed to become beastly intoxicated in the dives when if not in the Home they would be sent to an inebriate asylum or a Keely cure?

Let us have some evidence from the soldiers in the Home. Thus far, officially, they have been silent. Let us hear from him who sought the Home that his last days might be passed in peace. Let us hear from the veteran, old and feeble, unable to resist temptation right before him, who expected a Home without a perpetual temptation in a canteen at his very door. Give us the testimony of the total abstainer who, by an open canteen alluring him to destruction, has become addicted to drink. Let us listen to the voice of the aged warriors whose hours in the barracks, as the governors themselves admit, are disturbed by the turbulence and shouts of canteen beer victims. I call for this and similar evidence before another plea is made by the governors of these Homes for the canteen's restoration, and give them notice that these facts must be exploited honestly and fairly before some of us will cease to fight.

If they are incompetent to administer these Homes with the same order and decency as State Homes and benevolent institutions are conducted, where no such orgies and scenes are known, they should be summarily removed from office and men who represent the moral and Christian sentiment of the community substituted in their places. I call attention to the statement of Mrs. Ella M. Thatcher, of Florence, N. J., the wife of a one-armed veteran, the superintendent for soldiers and sailors under the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, who for twelve years, without money and without price, has devoted her time and energies to the interests of the inmates of Soldiers' Homes. She is familiar with the Homes with and without the canteen. She has visited, some of them repeatedly, every Home, except one, in the United States:

At Central Branch, just about pension time, I saw the beer hall, with a long oval bar and eight bartenders behind it; veterans standing five tiers thick, asking for beer, while many of these men sat at tables. The beer mugs are large and are called "schooners." Many of the men with all the full beer mugs that they could handle went back and forth between the bar and the tables supplying those at the tables.

I saw one man with both legs gone wheeled into the room and to the bar—the beer schooner was put into his hands; then a blind man, both eyes having been shot out, led up to the bar and a beer mug put into his hands. A man with one leg followed, and then a man with one arm, some on crutches; in fact, in all sorts of "crippledom."

I asked a guard how long the men could stay in the building. He responded, "All day, if they behave themselves."

"How many drinks may they have?" I asked. "As many as they pay for," was the reply. "You see we have the check system," he said. "What is that?" I asked. "They buy beer checks, then the amount is taken out of their pension money."

As soon as a man became disorderly he was taken out by one of the four guards stationed there.

At Northwestern Branch I saw men flocking in and out of the beer hall in crowds, and about the same things repeated there.

At Eastern, Western, and Pacific Branches, the conditions were about the same.

At Southern Branch I have seen veterans standing in long lines and in large numbers after having received their mug of beer go outside and take their places at the end of the line to get another drink, and do this again and again six or even seven times. This was a daily occurrence.

At the hotel in the camp, on Sunday, all day the men have gone in and out from early morning until evening, drinking beer, and allowed all they wanted if a nickel was spent for food. The bartender told me it was their busiest day, because the canteen was closed.

Before the canteen was closed I saw veterans lying drunk about the streets of Phoebus, a small town adjoining the Southern Branch. In December, after the canteen was abolished, while our fleet was there, not a drunken soldier was seen by me, and the people living in Phoebus said there was a decided change for the better.

When, about 1887 or 1888, the canteen was put in the Southern Branch there were six saloons in Phoebus, outside the gates. In 1900, thirteen years later, there were about ninety saloons, legal and illegal.

Mr. Chairman, nineteen times Congress has voted that liquor shall not be sold in Government buildings; nineteen times in ten years, since 1898, when the first favorable report was made on the Ellis bill. In the report made on that bill occurs the following:

Your committee, after giving the matter earnest and careful consideration, have reached the unanimous conclusion that but few, if any, reasons exist why the United States Government should engage in the liquor traffic, even to the extent of legalizing or permitting the sale of intoxicants within its immigrant stations, Soldiers' Homes, military posts, or any other buildings under its control, including the Capitol or other Government buildings within the District of Columbia, or any reservation upon which any of said buildings are situated.

It would seem incredible that when, as to most of the branches of the Government to which that committee referred, permanent law has been enacted in accordance with its recommendation, now, when a great temperance wave has been rolling over the country, we should take a backward step.

Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for five minutes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I feel constrained to object, because if we are going to limit this debate and confine Members to five minutes I think both sides should be treated alike. I now move that debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in one hour and thirty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in one hour and thirty minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend that by moving to close debate in two hours and thirty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama moves to extend the time to two hours and thirty minutes. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was taken and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken and the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PARSONS] is recognized to offer an amendment.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from New York will yield, I desire simply to offer a substitute for both amendments for the information of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] will be put after the proposed amendment to the amendment is read. The Clerk will read the amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 137: "without the sanction of a majority of the inmates of such Branch.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I raise a point of order on that amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let the amendment be reported, so that we will know what it is.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the proposed amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TIRRELL] as amended by the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARSONS].

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 34, page 137, add the following:
"Provided, That no part of the foregoing appropriations shall be expended for any purpose at any Branch of the National Home for Disabled Volunteers that maintains or permits to be maintained on its premises a bar, canteen, or other place where beer, wine, or other intoxicating liquors are sold."

Then add:
"Without the sanction of a majority of the inmates of such Branch."

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. On that I raise the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is the point of order?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The point of order is that it attempts by affirmative legislation to control the application of the appropriation, not limiting it, but absolutely controlling it. The point of order is that the amendment is clearly legislation.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will permit me——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] will state his inquiry.

Mr. TAWNEY. Motion was made to close debate on the paragraph and pending amendment. Now, is it not proper under that motion, the committee having agreed to it, to go ahead with the proper consideration of the paragraph and amendment, the points of order being considered after debate is closed? Debates on points of order coming out of the one hour and a half will very materially limit the number of Members that can be heard on the proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is clearly of the opinion that the time in which the points of order are to be discussed would certainly not be taken out of the one hour and thirty minutes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Then I have no objection at all.

The CHAIRMAN. And the Chair thinks points of order should first be disposed of, because various Members might want to discuss the amendment. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] on the point of order.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The proposition is that the amendment suggested by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARSONS] is in the nature of legislation.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is it not the proper place to determine on the germaneness of that amendment and substitute after we get through with this hour and a half of debate?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is about all I have to say in the opening of it, Mr. Chairman. The limitation, of course, is very clearly, as has already been ruled by the Chair, a limitation upon the expenditure of the appropriation. The amendment proposes an affirmative proposition that enables the application of the appropriation to be determined by the inmates of the Branch, which, in my judgment, is delegating to the inmates of that Branch the power to say whether or not the limitation shall apply, and for that reason is practically legislation, although it may be on the end of a limitation, but it gives to the men in the Home the power to determine, and that is a new and affirmative proposition. In a sense it delegates to them legislative power so far as that is concerned.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the original amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts was held in order on the ground that it limited an expenditure of money. All of us are aware of the fact that a limitation on expenditure may indirectly result in certain things happening or not happening, and they are so offered for that purpose, but the parliamentary rule that holds them in order is that the limitation is attached to and bears directly upon the appropriation. That is the fundamental of the rule. Now, to simply add to a limitation that does apply to the expenditure certain words as to when it applies is not to change it as a limitation, but is simply to amplify it and to determine the time when as a limitation it shall apply. There is nothing affirmative here. There is nothing that says that votes shall be taken; there is nothing that holds that a canteen must be established, but there is an amendment which says a limitation on the expenditure shall only apply when this canteen is established against a majority wish of the residents of the Home, and it is clearly in a form of a limitation and simply extends the character of that limitation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, this proposed amendment does not change any existing law, does not in any way control the exercise of discretion now reposed in any official. The original amendment provides that the appropriation shall not be expended in any Home where a canteen is maintained. The proposed amendment thereto provides that the appropriation shall not be expended in any Home where a canteen is maintained, except with the sanction of a majority of the inmates of the Home. The limitation does not restrict the discretion that anybody has under the law, does not change any existing law; and, so long as it does not either change any law or does not limit the discretion of executive officials, under the rulings it is a limitation.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am willing to rest this point of order upon the statement, in substance, made by the gentleman from Kentucky. The gentleman from Kentucky says that this——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Pardon me. You have got to include all the arguments made on this side. You can not select those that suit you.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Oh, yes; I recognize the gentleman from New York, and by way of courtesy I may say that his suggestions sometimes have relevancy to the subject. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman is attentive, he will find that some of the suggestions of the "gentleman from New York" are sometimes heeded even by the Chair. [Laughter.]

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is absolutely right, and sometimes controlling. The gentleman from New York has made many, and once in a while he has made a good one, and sometimes a bad one, and this is one of the bad ones.

Now, on the suggestion of the gentleman from Kentucky that this does not contemplate a vote, let me suggest, when you test that suggestion made by the gentleman from Kentucky in connection with the proposition suggested by the gentleman from New York, it contemplates nothing else but a vote. Now, I will read it. The limitation is:

Provided, That no part of the money of the foregoing appropriation shall be expended for any purpose at any Branch of the National Homes for Disabled Volunteers that maintains or permits to be maintained on its premises a bar, canteen, or other place where beer, wine, or other intoxicating liquors are sold.

Now, that is a definite proposition, predicated on an existing state of facts.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Wait a moment. That is a limitation predicated upon existing fact. Now, what does the gentleman from New York propose? He proposes in the amendment that this limitation, definitely predicated upon an existing condition, definitely and without any uncertainty, shall not take effect, without what? Without the sanction of a majority of the inmates of such Branch; and that definitely contemplates a vote. It expressly provides that this limitation shall not operate unless there is a favorable majority vote upon it by the inmates of the Home to which it is applied. Now, if that test is applied, and to this amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, that is clearly the test, because it can not operate without a vote.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. SHERLEY. Suppose there had been added to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts the words "and where tobacco is sold." That would be another condition, and yet would not change the form of the limitation.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The mere proposition to add the words "where tobacco is sold" would be an independent question, and has no more connection with the pending point of order than the canals in Mars with the waters flowing in the Potomac.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is a denial, but not an argument.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. To add the words "where tobacco is sold" is a distinct limitation, like the one already ruled out of order.

Mr. FASSETT. How is, first, the limitation to be determined? They can not determine without there is a canteen.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. It does not require any action.

Mr. FASSETT. If there is a canteen, that condition can determine; if there is no canteen, where do they sell. Now, somebody must determine whether they do, and this limitation is the method to determine that.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The fact is already determined, that condition is already in existence; but this amendment puts it in the power of a body to affirmatively determine the application of the limitation. It puts this limitation in the condition that if it is not followed by an express vote it does not operate, and if that does not authorize another body to determine what the rule is to be, I do not know what does. I appreciate the suggestion of the gentleman from New York. It is a fine hair, but I do not think it is split with great success. I follow the idea of the gentleman, but do not reach the same conclusion.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The question whether the money is appropriated depends upon a referendum.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Yes; and we are establishing a referendum and delegating to another body the question whether or not this limitation shall take effect.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the Chair please, in reply to the gentleman from Maine, I desire to say just a word or two. There is nothing in the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York that requires anything to be done. The limitation only applies, however, in the event that a canteen is maintained without a majority vote of the residents of the home. Now, the whole limitation is simply one going to the appropriation, that it shall not be expended except on certain conditions. The fact that a vote may or can be taken has nothing to do with the main proposition that the limitation attaches to the expenditure.

Mr. PARSONS. If there is no desire to maintain a canteen in the Home on the part of the managers, then no vote would have to be taken. Only in case the managers did desire to have a canteen maintained would a vote have to be taken. Assuming that that would require some affirmative action, I call the attention of the Chair to a couple of instances cited in the Manual. In one case it was held to be a good limitation where there was a proviso that money for a bridge should not be available until a corporation using it should fulfill certain conditions. That required affirmative action on the part of that corporation. Similarly another limitation that was decided to be proper was a provision that no part of an appropriation should be expended until estimates of the entire cost had been made. That again required some affirmative action. I submit that the rulings show that the fact that there must be some slight affirmative action does not destroy the amendment as a proper limitation.

Mr. HACKNEY. On the point of order raised by the gentleman from Maine, it seems to me that the proposition that he states can not be correct. We are all familiar with the fact that most of the States of the Union have passed local-option laws which say that intoxicating liquors shall not be sold; but there goes a proviso that that law is not operative until the community takes a vote on the proposition. Now, it has been the uniform decision of the courts in the last fifteen or twenty years—I think without any exception in any State—that that proviso allowing the voters to pass upon the proposition of the enforcement of the law is not delegating the authority to legislate.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I agree with the gentleman perfectly on that proposition, and he has stated correctly what the authorities hold; but when they do vote to have local option, I will ask the gentleman if it does not impose a new rule of law on that locality and change the law quo ad the section to which it applies?

Mr. HACKNEY. That is true.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Now, that is exactly the proposition pending here, and I agree with the gentleman on his legal proposition.

Mr. HACKNEY. In this respect it would make a condition as to the operation of the limitation on the appropriation.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Yes.

Mr. HACKNEY. Simply attaching a condition to it, thereby making a conditional limitation.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Take your illustration of the adoption of local option by a vote of the people. I will ask the gentleman whether when that vote is taken that does not operate as a change of law quo ad the people to whom it relates?

Mr. HACKNEY. That is true.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. It does, does it not?

Mr. HACKNEY. It does.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is my proposition with reference to this.

Mr. HACKNEY. The gentleman's objection would sustain the point of order raised by my colleague from Missouri to the main proposition here. The question is, Shall the appropriation be spent or shall it not be spent?

Now, the first proposition is that it shall not be spent at the place where a canteen is maintained, and the gentleman from New York offers an amendment annexing another proposition to that—that it shall not be expended at these places unless the majority are in favor of or against the proposition. That is another condition. If the Chair was correct in his ruling—and I think he was—that the amendment was not subject to a point of order, then this condition is not subject to a point of order. In other words, the Congress passes an act to suspend the operation until the local community may vote on that question. That is not delegating the lawmaking power. That is the same question that arises here.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I only want to make one suggestion as a test of whether or not the amendment to the amendment is in order. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that it should be tested now by inquiring whether, if the whole proposition contained in the two amendments had been offered in one amendment, the point of order would have been good against such an amendment. In my opinion, it would have been good, for the reason that it would not have been a limitation on the expenditure of the money. In that case the whole proposition would have been simply the provision that in expending the money you shall determine whether or not you would have a canteen by a vote of the inmates of the Soldiers' Homes, and in any case the money would all be expended. If the amendment to the amendment should be adopted and the amendment as amended should be adopted, there would be no limitation at all on the expenditure of any money appropriated or to be appropriated by the paragraph or the bill. Coming back to the rule that a limitation to be good as against a point of order must be a limitation that prevents the use of the money unless the conditions of the limitation are complied with, and treating the two amendments as one amendment embodied in the two amendments, it is clear that there would be no limitation on the expenditure of the money at all should it be adopted. All the money appropriated would be expended, and we would have a canteen or we would not have a canteen, depending on the vote of the inmates. It seems to me the last amendment offered is subject to the point of order regardless of its merits.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York is in order and not obnoxious to the rule. The Chair does not care to go into an elaborate decision. Congress has the right to appropriate or not to appropriate. If Congress does appropriate, it has a right to fix the conditions on which the appropriation shall be made. It has the right to fix the limitation, and this is simply a limitation on that appropriation.

The point raised by the gentleman from Ohio is not in point. The decisions are numerous that appropriations are made in certain contingencies, or that the money appropriated shall not be expended except where certain contingencies occur.

The point raised by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] was taken into consideration by the Chair. The Chair was at first inclined to believe that because some affirmative action was required that therefore it might not be a limitation, but new legislation. However, there are some decisions in point, and the Chair will not take the time to read them, except one:

A proviso that money for a bridge shall not be available until a corporation using it shall fulfill certain conditions was admitted as a limitation.

The Chair in ruling said:

The Chair will cite a ruling made at the first session of the Fifty-seventh Congress to the effect that the admissibility of the amendment should be judged from the provisions on its face rather than from the purposes which the circumstances may suggest.

In other words, it is not for the Chair to inquire beyond the language of the amendment, and this is simply a limitation on an appropriation which says that the money shall not be appropriated where a majority does not favor the canteen. It might not require a vote; it might be found out or ascertained by those in charge of the Home in any way; but at any rate, whatever machinery might be used it is not for the Chair to inquire; the only thing the Chair can inquire into is whether or not it is a limitation on the appropriation. The Chair thinks that it clearly limits the expenditure of the appropriation, and therefore overrules the point of order.

The gentleman from Minnesota sent to the desk a substitute which the Clerk will read.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The gentleman from Minnesota asked that it be considered as pending.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is this a substitute offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that it is a substitute offered by the gentleman from Minnesota to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. And the amendment thereto.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, if the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York is in order, I do not care to offer the substitute at this time and I will withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, there may be some misapprehension about this. I am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Ohio is in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts and understood that he asked recognition for five minutes.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, the sundry civil appropriation bill seems to be peculiar in respect to the matter of canteens. It seems that in the supreme wisdom of the Committee on Appropriations they have arrived at the conclusion that the soldiers and sailors who are inmates of the National Soldiers' Homes shall have canteens ad libitum, but others of the same class of soldiers and sailors who go into a State home shall go dry. You will find on page 139 of the present bill a provision substantially like the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TIRRELL], prohibiting canteens in soldiers' and sailors' homes where they are managed by the States. I have not the time to go fully into this discussion. I know the argument about drunkenness and so on, but I have studied the report of the Committee on Appropriations, and I have gone over the tables annexed to that report, coming from the different branches of the Federal Soldiers' and Sailors' Homes, and I do not reach the conclusion at all that they show in any instance that there is an increase of either criminals or of drunkenness in consequence of the abolition of canteens in these homes. I do find what I know to be a fact, that in almost every case where men leave the grounds of the homes and go out and drink beer or something stronger probably, that they are almost always arrested, and so they get into the table showing drunkenness or disorderly conduct; but I also find that if they get drunk or not, whatever stage they get into at the canteen, they are not arrested, but are permitted to go in their intoxicated condition to their quarters. So you can not make up a table that is very satisfactory, certainly not to show a canteen in a soldiers' home is a blessing. But let me read a key to this thing. I read a paragraph from the letter of Gov. John P. Smith, of the National Soldiers' Home of Tennessee:

> Following the closing of the beer hall it was noted that there was more quiet in the barracks and mess hall, for while beer drinkers were not permitted to indulge to intoxication they did imbibe to such degree that they became jovial and talkative and in some degree noisy. This hum of voices, while good-natured and seldom boisterous, was sometimes subject of complaint by more quiet members.

If the men who patronize the canteen had gotten in this merry, noisy mood outside of the Home, they would have been arrested and reported for drunkenness, and we would have had a tabulation here to show that the matter of the canteen was something that was to be nursed and nurtured in this day, when this matter of temperance is so widely spread and spreading all over the country. In Ohio, where we have the Central Branch of the National Home at Dayton, the law of the State prevents a saloon within 3 miles of the grounds of the Home. It applies to the Federal Home at Dayton and it also applies to the State Home at Sandusky. The committee by its bill here say that the poor old soldiers at Dayton, Ohio, on the Miami River, may have all the canteens they want, but when the same class of soldiers get up on the shore of Lake Erie, they are to be kept dry and no canteen is to be allowed. That is the situation that now presents itself here. There are many reasons and arguments, if I had the time to show, why this amendment should be adopted.

Mr. NORRIS. That is because one is a State Home and the other is a National.

Mr. KEIFER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KELIHER. Mr. Chairman, the zeal manifested by our prohibition friends in forcing the policy of absolute prohibition upon Homes of this character furnishes another striking illustration of their impracticability and an effective argument why we should ponder well the propositions they present. They prosecute this campaign against the canteen in the Homes of the aged soldier with the same earnestness and vigor that they combat the location of the saloon near a school or church.

Mr. Chairman, in one case their action offends our sense of right, and in the other it commands our hearty approbation. The great mistake made by the prohibitionist is that in a majority of cases he is overzealous and apt to shut his eyes to the practical phases of all questions which involve the use of alcohol. They know not the meaning of the words "toleration" and "compromise." Liquor is liquor in their eyes, and its use medicinally excites their opposition as much as when it is used socially. In fighting for its suppression they recognize no distinction between enthusiastic youth and infirm old age. They crusade in the same spirit against the use of alcoholic stimulants by the old soldier of fixed habits that they aim to remove temptation from the path of youth in the adolescent stage, when his habits are in the formative period. With the man who conscientiously believes in the principles of prohibition I have no quarrel. For the man in public life who, realizing the impracticability of many of the measures for which these ardent but often misguided people strive, is convinced that undesired results would follow their adoption, but supports them, I have naught but contempt.

The number of men who sacrifice their intellectual integrity to the desire for prohibition votes is alarmingly increasing.

Mr. Chairman, there are prohibition questions and prohibition questions. We should meet each and every one of them and judge them on their individual merits. Because they believe in the policy of prohibition, or because they desire to enlist the prohibition vote, they should not support every measure which involves the question of drink that is advocated by the prohibition propaganda.

In this particular instance we find ourselves confronted by this proposition. The question involved is whether light wines and beer shall be served in their Homes, and under proper regulations, to the remnants of that grand Army which nearly half a century ago fought and suffered physically that this great Republic might be kept intact. They are all men of extreme old age—whose habits are as fixed as their years. Now, it is proposed, in deference to a sentiment which can not look upon the subject without prejudice, and you know, Mr. Chairman, that "everything looks yellow to the jaundiced eye"—it is proposed to ignore the advice of all competent to judge, to deprive these old men of that stimulation in their Homes which habit and physical conditions make essential to their welfare.

Mr. Chairman, when we legislate upon subjects pertaining to the Army, Navy, State, and other Departments of the Government we call in the heads of those Departments and their trained, experienced, and competent assistants to furnish information. This is a fixed and universal policy. Now, on the question involved in the pending matter the committee has heard from those who are equipped to tender intelligent information. All are unanimous in the opinion that the canteen improves the morale of the old Soldiers' Homes. The doctor who cares for the physical condition, the chaplain who ministers to their spiritual welfare, and the governors who aim to keep high their moral standards declare in one voice that the canteen should be restored. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, if the opinions, the sincere, untrammeled opinions that one hears expressed upon this subject in the clubs, in the cloak room of this House, upon the streets, and elsewhere, if that opinion is recorded in the coming vote, the canteen will be restored. [Loud applause.]

Mr. KÜSTERMANN. Mr. Chairman, the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] read a report here from one of the governors of a Veterans' Home. Now, let me read you another one; and it is only one of the many statements that are in this general report. I have also received similar expressions in numerous letters. The governor of the Southern Branch, National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, says:

> There are evidences on every hand of the unfortunate results following the discontinuance of the canteen, and the members generally resent the change in the law and consider that they have a grievance. From their standpoint it was the results of their victories and hard service that now enables the American citizen to justly boast of his country, and they think that the least that may be done for them by a grateful people is to allow them the privilege of taking in quiet and comfort a glass of pure beer instead of compelling them to go outside, where vile compounds are sold in viler places.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic I had the pleasure of listening to a woman who seemed to be very much concerned in the fate of the old soldiers. She had gathered statistics, and here are some of them. She said that in all the different Homes there were at one time during the canteen period 20,757 members, and they spent in beer and wine in a year's time $286,483. Now, that seems a large sum, but reduced to per capita figures it amounts to but $13.80 yearly, or 4 cents a day for every man. Now, even if they did not all drink, the average daily expenditure per man would not have been greater than 6 cents a day, and that is certainly not a large expenditure for these old soldiers, to whom we ought to be grateful at all times and to whom we should give all the comfort and all the care possible.

In this connection this woman told the following heartrending story: "While I was standing near the canteen I saw an old soldier brought in without legs. Poor old soldier, his legs were shot off. He was wheeled up to the bar, and he took—just think of it—a glass of beer! Pretty soon there was led in a poor blind man, and he, too, partook of that terrible beverage. It almost broke my heart," she said, "and touched me so that I wept." [Laughter.] "But," she said, "a great victory has been won now that we have a law passed by Congress so that this blind man and the poor old cripple can not get any more of that vile stuff, except by going outside of the Home grounds, which, in their condition, they are unable to do."

Yes, you have robbed these poor men of what little comfort they find in their glass of beer. In that effort you have been successful, but you would have defied anyone to take this same privilege from you that you have taken from these veterans.

"But" says this woman, "if they can not take care of themselves, let us do it for them." Yes, let us care for them, let us see that they do not get anything stronger than milk; let us assume they have returned to their second childhood, and now take the nourishment they had when they were babies. [Laughter and applause.]

Now, let me say to you the next thing will be to take the tobacco out of the Homes. I had a letter only yesterday from a woman in my district pleading with me to see that in addition to abolishing the canteen that the tobacco evil be prohibited on all premises owned by the United States.

With all these prohibitive efforts the time may come when only the geysers in the Yellowstone Park will be allowed to smoke. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KIMBALL] is recognized in favor of the amendment.

Mr. KIMBALL. Mr. Chairman, in common with every right-thinking and healthy American I resent the suggestion that any law should be passed that would dictate to any man what he should eat, what he should drink, or wherewithal he should be clothed. But the principle involved here is an entirely different one. There is no legislation here seeking to control individual tastes or individual habits.

The liquor traffic has been regarded through all the years as an evil more or less gigantic. The Government has reserved to itself at all times the right to regulate it or to prohibit it. It has sometimes been regulated too severely, in other instances too leniently. But the suggestion I desire to make is this, that, being an evil under the ban of the law, the American Government should not engage in it. [Applause.]

I do not object to the old soldiers occupying the Homes having their beer, any more than I ought to object to Members of Congress having theirs. But I do insist that the wise, patriotic, and intelligent sentiment of the country, which originally forced the American Congress to eliminate the canteen from the Soldiers' Homes, ought to still be respected. That legislation was enacted in response to the wise, patriotic, and Christian sentiment of the people of America. I honor the old soldier as much as my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. KÜSTERMANN] does, but I undertake to say that the old soldier is entitled to no more consideration than a Member of Congress. They ousted the canteen from the Capitol some years ago, and I would like to see some Member with temerity enough to present to Congress a proposition to restore it.

I come from a district where whisky is largely manufactured and occasionally consumed. [Laughter.] Four of the counties in my district are absolutely dry. In the other four it is sold at the county seats in abundance. Any position that I may take upon this question here can not help me at home. I speak what I believe, regardless of results. I stand for what I regard as the correct principle; not as to whether this legislation is beneficial as a matter of discipline at the Soldiers' Homes, but upon a higher and broader ground, that the American Government should not go into the saloon business. [Applause.]

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TIRRELL] read a portion of a letter contained in the report of the House Committee on Appropriations, of which I want to read a part. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KÜSTERMANN] read a part of a letter from the Southern Branch. This is a letter from the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, the Central Branch, dated November 2, 1907, and signed by A. J. Clark, governor, as follows:

On the other hand, it is claimed that since the closing of the beer hall some men who could not stand the temptation of a beer hall in the Home, but would either drink too much at the beer hall or start on beer and then go out and get drunk, are now keeping perfectly sober. It seems to be very generally admitted that the camp in general and most of the barracks are quieter and pleasanter for sober men than when the beer hall was in operation, as in spite of the precautions exercised some men who drank too much at beer hall, but did not show the effect till after reaching barracks, would make it very unpleasant for others in barracks, while under existing conditions most of these men in coming into the Home from the outside are captured by the guards and taken to the guardhouse, and do not get into the barracks to trouble others. It should be stated that the unfortunate increase in the number of offenders against the rules of the Home since March 4 last can not be attributed entirely to the closing of the beer hall. The abolition (with the approval of the board) of the practice of close confinement of certain weak or troublesome members, who would frequently jump the fence, gives this class of men an opportunity to get drunk, which I am sorry to say some have taken advantage of. The large number of members (more than 1,200 up to the September quarterly payment) who have had increase of pension under the new law has brought more money into the hands of members than ever before, thus increasing temptation; and the inability to secure reduced-rate transportation has kept at the Home many who have been in the habit of going on short leaves occasionally, and presented special temptation to spend their money in unfortunate ways near the Home.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as one coming from a State that has constitutional prohibition, I want to say that I believe it is an insult to the intelligence, to the character and habit of the American soldier when we say that he can not get along without the saloon. It has been stated on this floor that even in a prohibition State like ours there are more Government licenses sold than there are in States where they have saloons. I admit, Mr. Chairman, that it is true that Government licenses have been sold, which I regret; but to whom have they been sold? They have been sold to the lawless class that comes to the State for that purpose and for nothing else. They have not been sold to the citizens of the State who believe in this law and who believe in the enforcement of this law. I say to you, Mr. Chairman, that the people of my State are in favor of this law that was enacted and that was placed in our constitution more than twenty years ago, and the law is more popular to-day than it was at that time.

It has been the experience of North Dakota that this law makes for sobriety and good citizenship; that because of it we have more general prosperity, that we have fewer drunkards and more happy homes.

I believe that drunkenness is to be discouraged in the Army as well as in civil life. I do not believe that there is anything either in the profession of the soldier or in the character of the American soldier which makes it necessary to place liquor as easily within his reach as possible. I believe that the best way to discourage drunkenness is to make it as difficult to obtain liquor as possible. I believe that Congress took a wise step in 1901 in abolishing the canteen in the Army, and that instead of receding from the position taken at that time we should refuse to allow the canteen either in the Army or in the various Soldiers' Homes.

In reference to the statements that the canteen at the Army posts prevented desertions and aided in maintaining discipline, I wish to insert in the RECORD an article written by Gen. A. S. Daggett:

LIQUOR SELLING IN ARMY SALOONS—THE TRUTH ABOUT THE CANTEEN.

[By Brig. Gen. A. S. Daggett.]

[This article was written in December, 1905. General Daggett has recently (October, 1907) confirmed all it contains. General Daggett is now retired from active military service after a long and honorable career. In the civil war he fought in the battles of Bull Run, Gaines Mills, Antietam, Fredericksburg, Salem Heights, Gettysburg, the Wilderness, Spottsylvania, Cold Harbor, Petersburg, and many others. He was twice wounded. In the Spanish-American war he fought in the Santiago campaign, at El Caney, etc. In the Philippine war he fought at Imus River, Bacoor, etc. He was second in command (and part of the time in full command) of the international allied forces that made the memorable "march to Peking" in the Boxer rebellion in China, when they rescued the imprisoned legations, missionaries, and others from massacre. The substance of this pamphlet was published in the Christian Endeavor World, Boston, in November, 1906. We believe his article as here published is the most overwhelming refutation of the procanteen arguments that has ever been published. General Daggett's high personal character and his long, honorable Army record make him an unquestioned authority on the canteen subject.—The International Reform Bureau, Washington, D. C.]

On my return from China and the Philippines in 1901 I was requested to write a letter expressing my opinion on the Army canteen. I did not then know of the discussions in the press, investigations by Congressional committees, and the general public interest that had been manifested on this subject prior to the abolishment of the canteen.

Drawing entirely from my own experience, on July 24, 1901, I wrote a letter from which the following is quoted:

"I will give the following reasons for my opposition to the Army canteen, viz:

"1. Many of our soldiers come from the rural districts, where they never entered nor even saw a saloon. Arriving at an Army post they find the saloon, called 'canteen,' established by the United States Government, managed by Army officers, and in some cases made as reputable as such an institution can be. It is the place of resort for nearly all the soldiers of the garrison. They live in an atmosphere that makes them feel that the thing to do is to spend their money at the canteen; it helps the company mess. The most of the recruits yield, and soon form the beer habit.

"DEBT AND DRUNK HABITS CONTRACTED.

"The credit system prevails. The soldier, being out of money, obtains checks on the canteen, presumably for a small part, but actually, in most cases, for a large part of his pay.

"This debt he is compelled to pay on pay day. He receives his money at the pay table and immediately goes to the canteen officer and pays a large part, perhaps all of it, to the canteen. In a few days he is out of money again, and repeats the same process, month after month, during his term of service.

"He entered the service free from the drink and debt habits. He is discharged with both fixed upon him.

"2. The canteen stands as a constant invitation to the total abstainer to drink, as a temptation to the moderate drinker to drink more, and as a convenience for the drunkard to load up on beer when he has not the means to obtain anything stronger.

"3. The constant presence of the canteen and the credit system offer opportunities for the soldiers to keep slightly under the influence of liquor all the time. It was no unusual thing to find a company (I commanded a company more than twenty years) on inspection with a majority of its men more or less under the influence of liquor, but not so much as to subject them to punishment; but they could not perform their duty as well as they could if they had not been drinking.

"4. If there is no canteen at an Army post, saloons will spring up just beyond the military reservation of so vile a character that respectable soldiers will not visit them. When I commanded a company, four-fifths of my men would not go near such dens of vice.

"The drunkard would have his pay-day spree, spend all his money, serve sentence of court-martial, and be sober the rest of the time.

"The viler the outside dens of iniquity are the better for the morals of the garrison, because they keep respectable men away, and the majority are respectable.

"5. There may have been cases when the canteen has been a temporary benefit.

"It is said that falsehood may be a temporary benefit to him who avails himself of it. But it will be ruinous to him in the end. So will the canteen system be to the Army.

"6. The canteen system, in my opinion, resolves itself into this question: Is it best to keep a constant temptation before total abstainers and moderate drinkers for the purpose of controlling the few drunkards, even if it would control them? But we have seen that it will not.

"Many of the railroad companies and business firms require total abstinence of all their employees. Only imagine their establishing canteens for them! Train men slightly dazed with beer! I believe the Government should require the same of the Army.

"You are at liberty to use this as you please.

"Yours, truly,

"A. S. DAGGETT,
"Brigadier-General, United States Army, Retired."

JULY, 1901.

The Army and Navy Journal, commenting on this letter, suggested that I recommend a substitute for the canteen. I wrote as follows to the editor on September 10, 1901:

"I have just read in your paper of August 24 your comments on my letter concerning the Army canteen. You wish to know—very properly, I think—what I would recommend as a means of satisfying their (soldiers') cravings for sociability and good-fellowship. Simply this: 1. Establish ample and attractive reading rooms, which may be the general places of resort, and where games and facilities for all sorts of proper social enjoyments can be found. 2. Establish ample and attractive gymnasiums. 3. Encourage and give facilities for all proper kinds of manly sports. 4. Require the Commissary Department to supply many of the luxuries now furnished by means of the company fund.

"DRUNKARDS NOT WANTED IN THE ARMY.

"Men not satisfied with the above provisions for their welfare are not wanted in the Army. Men whose 'craving for sociability and good fellowship' lead them to the saloon should not be enlisted; they are not a benefit, but a burden, to the Army. In the majority of cases they are in the guardhouse or hospital and require the services of good men to guard or care for them. * * * The remedy is, rid the Army of them as soon as practicable and enlist no more. I am aware that, partly under the influence of the canteen for the last fifteen years, soldiers have lived in an atmosphere which has led the majority of them more or less into the drink habit, and it will take time to bring about the desired change. But let it once be fully understood throughout the country that it is the fixed and unalterable purpose of the Government to have none but sober men in the Army, * * * its ranks will within a reasonable time be filled with such men. It is undeniable, whether justly or not, that the word 'army' is too much associated by the general public with strong drink. It is therefore an inducement to the inebriate and an objection to the sober man to enlist. This I learned during three years of recruiting service.

"But suppose we have drinking men in the Army. Can their desire for drink be lessened by keeping before them a constant invitation to drink? Consider for a moment. Will the cravings of the baser passions be lessened by indulgence? Would you recommend indulging them as a means of curing their cravings? Certainly you would not. But what does the canteen do?"

DIFFERING CONDITIONS.

Considerable discussion was aroused during the following months, and for the first time I learned what had occurred in and out of Congress when the bill for the abolition of the canteen was pending. I read many letters and articles in the press on the subject, and statements before the Congressional committees by officials of the War Department and Army officers, some with profit and some with amazement. The information thus obtained gave me a somewhat more extended view of the workings of the canteen, and emphasized some facts which the experience of no one person could supply. For example, the difference in conditions at different Army posts; at some posts the men are mostly recruits; at others, trained soldiers; some have lax and others strict disciplinarians in their officers, especially commanding officers; some are located near and others remote from towns; some offer facilities for maintaining vile dens near them; others do not; some are located where the local laws are enforced; others are not; and many other differences.

This accounts for some of the seemingly conflicting statements of officers.

From what can be gathered from all sources, the claims in favor of the canteen are:

1. It keeps the men in garrison.
2. It prevents desertions.
3. It helps to maintain discipline.
4. It prevents saloons from springing up near garrisons.
5. That credit is limited to a small part of their pay.
7. It helps company mess.

Let us examine these claims.

1. It may seem that the canteen should keep men in garrison, but this is a superficial view. Closer scrutiny will show that the tendency is the other way after the canteen has been in existence long enough to show its legitimate effects. It entices men to drink beer; the temptation is constantly before them, and they drink freely. But, when the recruit is half full of beer, he is easily led away by the old sot to the outside saloon for whisky. And this is what is done. Two examples:

In 1886, six companies of the Second Infantry moved to Fort Omaha, Nebr. A canteen was established. An officer was put in charge of it who was regarded as one of the ablest in that line of duty. A poor lunch counter and amusement room were attached to it. The canteen was run under a higher pressure than any I have seen in the Army. It was regarded as a wonderful success. The commanding officer made flaming reports concerning it, which, it is said, caused the War Department to establish the canteen officially February 1, 1889.

What was the result? This: The men flocked to the beer room. They avoided the lunch room and amusement room. If my memory serves me, these were finally abandoned. Beer was the thing. There were several saloons just outside of the garrison, within 200 or 300 yards of the canteen. During certain hours of the day and night streams of men could be seen passing between the canteen and the saloons. It was here that I saw the majority of the men of my company slightly under the influence of liquor as they were formed for exercises.

A VERY VILE DEN.

We had just come from Fort Spokane, Wash., where intoxicants were not allowed in the post. There was a very vile den just outside the limits of the military reservation, but so disreputable that respectable men would not visit it. When I went before that company and gave the command, "Attention!" there stood erect and alert a line of men with bright faces and clear eyes, respectable and self-respecting, ready and able to respond to any call. There were boys in that line from the rural districts who had never touched a drop of liquor. And there was no temptation for them to drink. The vile den was no temptation, but the reverse. But what a change! In a year after their arrival at Fort Omaha these same men wore red faces and dull eyes and in a measure were sodden. This is what the canteen did in this case, and I do not think it an exceptional one. This is one instance where the canteen kept the soldiers away from the outside saloons!

I visited old Fort Omaha not long ago, and there was not a saloon within perhaps a mile of it. When the post was abandoned the saloons were abandoned, notwithstanding the post had a canteen.

In November, 1899, I was stationed at Bacoor, about 12 miles south of Manila, P. I. This was the headquarters of the "South Line," regarded by the division commander as the most important line in the Philippines. The troops had not been paid for several months. The canteen officer made unusual preparations for pay day. The canteen wanted the money, and the soldiers must be kept in camp. A large supply of beer was procured. Pay day came. What did the men do? They patronized the canteen, then went where vino was sold, and drank until a large percentage of the command were dead drunk. As a command, it was unable to make much resistance in case of an attack.

TOO DRUNK TO FIGHT.

The Filipinos discovered the condition. Riding about the town and line, I discovered unmistakable signs of an attack. The presidente, a Filipino, warned the headquarters that Trias would try to break through the lines that night. Such was the condition of the troops that the commanding officer did not feel able to resist the attempt. He telegraphed the conditions to the division commander and asked for troops. Troops came as quickly as the steamer could bring them. Their arrival prevented what might have been a disgraceful disaster. This is another instance where the canteen "kept the men in camp," "preserved order," and "helped to maintain discipline!"

DOES THE CANTEEN CAUSE DESERTIONS?

2. It prevents desertions?

It is doubtful whether the canteen has much, if any, influence on desertions, either causing or preventing them. So far as I have observed, the older and more experienced officers say less about this than formerly. General Chaffee, in discussing the causes of desertion in his report, both last year and this year, did not mention the canteen. And, if I correctly interpret the extracts from his last report as published in the papers, he declines to express "an opinion on this subject, pro or con," "this subject" being alcoholism in connection with the canteen.

Inspector-General Burton, in his last report, gives ten causes for desertions, and says: "This (the canteen), however, is only one of the causes reported to the inspectors as leading to desertions, and not one of the greatest at that." This is important, for it shows a great toning down from the statements formerly published, both in and out of the Army, and even now made by the less-experienced officers.

Formerly the terms were "largely the cause," "the main cause," etc. But if it is true in any case that a man deserts because there is no canteen, the sooner he leaves the better for the service. There is not in the Army an officer of long service as company commander who will not agree to this.

And this leads me to say that the experienced company commander is the best judge of the effects of the canteen on the soldiers. He comes into contact with his men every day; often many times a day. If anything goes wrong, the first sergeant reports it to his company commander, who investigates and acts accordingly. He knows every man, his virtues, weaknesses, and peculiarities. If he is the commander he ought to be, his finger is on the pulse of every man, and he knows just when and where to loosen the rein or draw it tighter.

But it is only the commander of long experience, who has taken a deep interest in the welfare of his men, who has this knowledge. It is probable that the lack of good company commanders is the greatest cause of desertions. Many captains are absent from their companies, leaving them in charge of lieutenants who are frequently changed, so that they have no special interest in their companies. This is the greatest evil, so far as discipline is concerned, existing in the Army to-day. But the best company commander in the Army will have desertions. He can not keep bad men; he does not want them.

But the evil of desertion is erratic. No one can account for the sudden rise and fall of percentages of desertions. For instance, in 1867 desertions amounted to 26.7 per cent. The next year they dropped to 16.3 per cent. In 1870 they amounted to 20 per cent; the next year they rose to 30.2 per cent. What caused these sudden changes? No one knows. President Hayes prohibited the sale of intoxicants at Army posts in 1877. During the three following years the desertions amounted to only 8.3 per cent; but in 1882 they rose to 16.4. These figures are given merely to show that desertions fluctuate unaccountably.

REORGANIZATION OF THE ARMY.

The Army was reorganized about four years ago and is in a condition similar to that in which it was after the reorganization in 1866. It has much raw material among the officers and enlisted men. It took at least fifteen years to sift out the bad material and instruct and discipline the remaining after the latter reorganization. It may not take as long now, but it will require many more years to put the Army in as good condition as in 1898.

Several years ago an officer of long service, speaking of the condition of the Army in 1866 and the following years, said:

"The Army has been constantly improving since its reorganization in 1866. Then a very large number of the officers had just been appointed from the volunteers and civil life. They were unfamiliar with the ways and regulations of garrison life. * * * All had to learn, from the highest to the lowest. The class of recruits was the worst that the Army had ever received. The barracks were poor, dirty, forbidding buildings, poorly lighted and heated. Candles were used, and a small allowance at that. Bunks were of rough boards and three stories high. A bedsack, filled with straw, and a blanket or two furnished the soldier's bed. A tin plate, an iron knife, fork, and spoon were his table utensils. The principal ration was bacon, pork, occasionally beef, and bread, beans, coffee, and sugar. Improvement in these things began in the seventies. Now the barracks are warm, cheerful, and well lighted. The beds and mess are much better than most recruits enjoyed at their homes.

BETTER RECRUITS ENLISTED.

"Then the recruiting officer could enlist whomsoever he pleased. Since then he has been held responsible for the utmost care in selecting men morally and physically qualified, on penalty of having to pay the expenses of clothing, feeding, and transporting the recruit to his station, should he be rejected after arriving, and should it be shown that the recruiting officer had been negligent.

"Benevolent associations also began to furnish the soldiers with reading matter, etc. Many other things were done for the betterment of the soldiers. The army of new officers, after fifteen or twenty years of experience, had learned how to command and care for men. Too much importance can not be attached to this consideration.

"The fruits of all these things must necessarily have been a great reduction in desertions, admissions to hospital for alcoholism, and convictions by courts-martial. * * * The number of desertions from 1867 to 1874 was 20.5 per cent. From 1876 to 1880, 8.4 per cent. From 1881 to 1889, they amounted to 12 per cent. From 1890 to 1897, 5 per cent. From 1898 to 1900, 4.4 per cent. For 1901, only 1.9 per cent. This latter period is not for the whole year, but there has been no canteen since February 2. The number of admissions to the hospital for alcoholism during the canteen period, from 1891 to 1897, decreased 12.2 per thousand, while during the preceding period, from 1882 to 1890, the numbers decreased 27.2 per thousand.

"These statistics show that a decrease in desertions and admissions to hospital for alcoholism began long before the canteen was thought of, and that it has been going on up to the present time, and that it was more rapid before than since the canteen was established."

It will be seen that the Army was in bad condition for several years after the reorganization in 1866. It made constant improvement for a period of about twenty years. No one thing had so powerful an influence in improving the Army as did the system of target practice, which began about 1879. It was prosecuted with such intelligence and zeal that in 1898 ours was an Army of the best riflemen in the world. This principle can be made to apply in a measure to other exercises. Having been established formally in 1889, the canteen found the Army in fine condition; it was under these conditions that it was tried. The reorganization in 1901 was not as extensive as in 1866, but it was followed by similar results, as evidenced by courts-martial, dismissals, and desertion of officers during the last few years. These are the conditions under which the anticanteen law has been tried. The Army is now beginning to improve, and will continue to, whether there is a canteen or not. In ten years the officers will have gained experience, and conditions should approach those existing in 1889; and in some respect it should surpass them. In the meantime if the canteen should not be reestablished it is probable a majority of the officers would then be opposed to its restoration.

NO AID TO DISCIPLINE.

3. The canteen helps to maintain discipline.

A few years ago more was said on this point than now. It is probable some have become ashamed to admit they can not maintain discipline either with or without the canteen. They certainly ought to be. There may occur instances when untoward events have arisen suddenly that will seriously affect discipline for a short time, but it is only temporary, and will be speedily remedied. My experience has been invariably that discipline has been more easily maintained with sober than with drunken men, and that a much larger per cent are sober without the canteen.

4. It prevents saloons from springing up near garrisons.

It did not at Fort Omaha, nor at Bacoor, as related above. It did not at Forts Porter, N. Y.; Assinniboine and Missoula, Mont., and Logan, Colo. Nor did it prevent illicit traffic in intoxicants at Fort Sill, Okla.; Fort Custer, Mont., Fort Huachuca, Ariz., all of which were on large Government reservations. I served at all these posts. A constant watch had to be kept over the surrounding country by sending out mounted and unmounted patrols, and even then the traffic could not be entirely suppressed.

This shows that there are men who will have stronger drink than beer, and will resort to desperate means to get it. The canteen has no restraining influence over these men; it whets their thirst, and sends them out for stronger drink. Yes, saloons will spring up as near Army posts as the law will permit—some regardless of law—whether there is or is not a canteen. Whether there be a greater or a smaller number is of no consequence, for there will always be enough to furnish all the intoxicants required. What does it matter, for example, whether there be ten or twenty saloons near Fort Porter, N. Y.? In either case men can get all the liquor they want.

I am amazed at the statements of Army people on this point. But Congressman LITTLEFIELD, in his able, accurate, and exhaustive article on the canteen in the North American Review for March and April, 1904, has given statistics on this phase of the subject, to which the reader is referred. The following extract is quoted:[a]

"The canteen was established at these barracks (Washington Barracks) in 1889. The facts, as given by Maj. Richard Sylvester, superintendent of the police department of the District of Columbia, are that there were only three saloons on Four-and-one-half street, within three 'squares from the point at which it entered the post,' in 1889, and while two of them went out of existence shortly after the establishment of the canteen in 1890, four wholesale liquor stores, where the law authorized the sale of liquor in quantities of not less than a pint, were established, two continuing one year and two three years, and that, on the 2d of February, 1901, when the canteen was abolished, there were in this same location, three 'squares from the point where it entered the post,' four saloons, one more than when the canteen was established, and the number has not increased up to date. The facts show that the theory failed to materialize.

"THE CASE OF FORT MYER.

"Of Fort Myer, Major Seaman says: 'Before the introduction of the canteen there were between ten and twenty low groggeries between the terminus of the street railway and the entrance to Arlington, largely depending upon the patronage of the troops, * * * and that, after ten years of the canteen at the post, only two of these were left.' On the contrary, in that locality, instead of 'between ten and twenty low groggeries,' the commissioner of revenue of Alexandria County, Va., Mr. H. L. Holmes, informs me from his own actual knowledge that there were from three to four saloons open from 1880 to 1891, and instead of 'only two of these being left,' the records show that in 1900, the end of the canteen period, there were five in healthy working order. If all of the major's assertions of facts are equally open to criticism, it may not be entirely safe to rely without hestitation upon his conclusions."

5. It is claimed that the men's credit is limited to a small part of their pay.

So it is, on paper, but so far as my observation went this limitation was disregarded. Officers have said to me that if the canteen does not give men credit they will get it at the saloons, and the money will go outside; we had better have it. The result was that men were allowed to get credit for a large part of their pay, perhaps in some cases nearly all of it. There may have been posts where this was not allowed, but I never knew of one. Regulations do not always regulate.

UNDER CONTROL.

6. It is claimed that beer is sold under control of the commanding officer.

Let us see how this works. It is not expected that the post commander himself will stand behind the bar to see that men do not get too much drink. He appoints an exchange officer. Is he expected to go behind the bar to control the amount of beer sold to each man? If so, you can not find the commissioned officer who will do it. But men were employed, and for some time soldiers were detailed, to tend the bar. Not many, if any, of this class, would care to limit the amount of beer sold. But generally it would be impossible, if they desired to do so. Often a large crowd of men would clamor for beer, compelling the bartender to hand it out as rapidly as possible. No human being could tell how many mugs a man had drunk. The result was that men generally drank all they wanted, and some of them would get drunk.

It came to my knowledge that comrades, even noncommissioned officers, would take men from the canteen to their quarters drunk and put them to bed and allow them to sleep off their stupor, and make no report of it to their company officers. In this way they avoided court-martial, consequently no record was made. I wonder whether the same efforts to avoid making records have been made since the abolition of the canteen.

7. It helps the company mess.

Yes; and this, in my opinion, is the only thing that can be said in favor of the canteen; and a larger number of officers agree with me than is generally supposed. It did increase the company fund. But the deficiency has been largely made up by legislation. If more money is needed for the welfare of the soldier, Congress has shown a proper willingness to supply it; it should not be obtained by traffic in intoxicants.

OBJECTIONS TO THE CANTEEN.

Having discussed the claims made in favor of the canteen, let us now consider the arguments against it. In this connection little need be said beyond what is contained in the letters quoted above. The information I have obtained from all sources during the last four years has emphasized nearly all contained in those letters.

The greatest objection to the canteen is its educative influence. Wherever one was established a canteen sentiment was created. It was talked about, its dividends to the company funds were enlarged upon, and the tables in the mess rooms groaned with luxuries. It was the thing at the post. Everyone, officers and men, lived in a beer atmosphere. None but the strongest could withstand the pressure. What a contrast between the clean sentiment of Fort Spokane and the polluted atmosphere of Fort Omaha, referred to above! It needs not a prophet to tell what effect this would have on all who lived within its influence.

When an amusement room was first established by Colonel Morrow, as an experiment, at Vancouver Barracks, in 1882, or thereabouts, he called it a canteen for want of a better name. Beer was not sold in it at that time. Let me quote from a letter from the colonel's estimable wife, showing how the canteen originated. After relating how the colonel had observed the men going out of the garrison to the saloons, she quotes him as saying to the officers standing near: "Gentlemen, something must be done for these soldiers. It is not right to let them go on as prey and victims to the saloons, where they are soon made irresponsible through vile mixtures and then pushed into the street to become a scandal and a disgrace, debasing their manhood and their uniform. Something must be done, and we will begin to-morrow.

"The beginning was made 'to-morrow' in the humble way of a well-lighted room, a cup of coffee and a ham sandwich, plenty of newspapers and magazines, writing paper, envelopes, pens, and ink, with credit for postage stamps. Such was the birth of the canteen. How well I remember the glow of pleasure and encouragement that overspread my husband's face when he reported, rather recounted, to me the success of the first evening of the canteen—the result of an honest effort to help the private soldier to his own manly self, and yet to spend an evening in recreation. The rest you know—how the dozen or two of men, gathering in that room that evening, swelled in numbers until it was necessary to add another room, give greater facilities for amusements of various kinds, such as billiards, cards, backgammon, dominoes, etc.; beef tea, hot, was added to the drinks, and more appetizing eatables. Just when beer was added I do not remember."

THE COMING OF BEER.

This letter is quoted to show the nature of the canteen when it was first tried as an experiment. Special attention is called to it. It shows that the spirit in which it was conceived was that of a reading, amusement, and lunch room, free from the admitted evil of beer. As such it was a success. Had it remained so, it would probably have solved the drink problem in large measure long before this. But in an evil hour beer was introduced. It did not make the traffic in beer respectable, but did degrade the reading and amusement room. Its influence was constantly debasing. Turmoil and confusion on this question have followed ever since.

I well remember visiting Vancouver Barracks in 1883, I think it was, and witnessing the just pride manifested by Colonel Morrow as he explained to me the growth and success of what was called an experiment. The impression made upon me was that it was surrounding the soldiers with an elevating influence, and, if continued, would draw in all the better class of men and tend to establish them in the ways of morality and respectability. Those who would not be attracted to it would go their way to the saloons. It would make a sharp division between the good and the bad, the latter in the minority. And this is very important. This division places the majority on the side of morality and respectability and the minority on the other side, whereas with the canteen the minority are on the side of respectability.

Reports of this canteen soon spread abroad, and reached Fort Spokane, Wash., where I was stationed. A canteen was established there. The results were favorable. The canteen officer, being a beer man, wanted to introduce beer; but the proposition was instantly and severely frowned down.

The name "canteen" was used to designate the whole institution, including amusement, reading, lunch, store, and beer rooms, previous to February 8, 1892. In this sense it has been used in the pages referring to its origin at Vancouver and following. On that date the designation was changed to "post exchange," but the beer-room part still retained the name "canteen." This latter was abolished in 1901; but the post exchange remained, and does to this day. This should be borne carefully in mind, for great confusion has resulted from the persistent statements of procanteenists that the post exchange was abolished.

EXPERIENCE.

Several persons have written articles for magazines and made reports, more or less elaborate, on the canteen, which call for brief attention. Two articles appeared in the North American Review, one by Colonel Church in December, 1903, and one by Major Seaman in January, 1904. But who are Colonel Church and Major Seaman? Probably 99 per cent of the readers of their articles supposed them to be Army officers grown gray in the service. Colonel Church served about two years in the Army, from which he resigned in 1863 to take charge of the Army and Navy Journal. He never saw a canteen unless by courtesy of Army officers he was invited to do so. Major Seaman was in the volunteer service as a medical officer during the Spanish-American war, two or three years, I don't know just how long. But the experiences of a volunteer officer during a time of war gives him no opportunity whatever to observe the workings of the canteen in the Regular Army in time of peace. There is little need of comment on these articles, for Mr. Littlefield, in his article referred to, has so thoroughly exposed their errors that it would seem the refinement of cruelty to pursue them further. Only a few points will be noticed, and those briefly.

The Colonel says much about interference in Army matters by persons who know nothing about it by experience, such as the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and a "small, but most persistent and vociferous, body of theorists." But how much experience has the Colonel had? If they obtain their information from others, so does he. He and they are on the same footing. If he excludes them from exercising influence, he also must keep silent. But the colonel refers approvingly to the action of the American Medical Association favoring the canteen. But what do these gentlemen know about the canteen more than the Woman's Christian Temperance Union or the "vociferous body of theorists?" All depends upon whose ox is gored.

THE SOLDIERS' CLUB.

The same applies in some measure to Doctor Seaman. But the doctor says if "the canteen had been called the soldiers' club or post exchange from the beginning, it never would have been abolished." Why? Because it told the truth? The canteen was the saloon part of the post exchange. The name told the exact truth. Does he want a name given that will deceive people? The doctor and others have spoken of the canteen as the soldiers' club. It was in no sense a club. It was simply a drinking room. Regulations existed at one time prohibiting a soldier from taking his mug of beer away from the counter; he must stand and drink it there. No chairs even were in the room. The club was in the post exchange, not in the canteen. But the doctor's article is so full of errors that space will not permit noticing all of them. Even the colonel had to warn the readers of the Army and Navy Journal that they must take the doctor's report on the Japanese Army with a grain of allowance. "Who is this that darkeneth counsel by words without knowledge?"

So far as I have noticed in the papers, General Grant has made the most elaborate report favoring the restoration of the canteen of any department commander. It is proper to say that the general resigned from the Army October 1, 1881, and was reappointed in 1901, after the canteen had been abolished. He was not in the Army during the existence of the canteen. He was in the volunteer service during the Spanish-American war, but that gave him no opportunity whatever to learn how the canteen affected the Regular Army in time of peace. He knows nothing of the canteen by experience or observation.

Another department commander did not enter the Regular Army till after the canteen was abolished. Nevertheless, he has reported vigorously in favor of it. It is to be noticed that General Wint, who is an old veteran and always served with troops, is not in favor of the canteen, but favors some other method. Others, whose service with troops at Army garrisons has been more or less limited, have reported favorably on the canteen. It would seem that articles and reports on the canteen are elaborate in the inverse ration of experience.

Speaking of his work during the last years of his life, Professor Huxley said in 1892: "As to the substance of these public exercises, I must admit that it is quite correct to say that they have been largely composed of painful efforts to show that many of the lessons I had repeated in early life without a moment's doubts that they were compact of divine truth, are in fact made up either of obvious fictions or baseless assumptions." May not this apply to some of these gentlemen? For, though not young in years, they are in canteen experience.

WHY NOT?

A philanthropic association of Boston has established coffee rooms in different parts of the city and near saloons. They have reading matter, games, a lunch counter, etc., much the same as the post exchange. All sorts of proper methods are employed to make these rooms attractive for the class of men who visit in those vicinities. Why not have a beer counter in these rooms? The Young Men's Christian Association is doing for the welfare of young men what the post exchange is trying to do. Why not establish canteens in their rooms? The mere asking these questions is sufficient.

In December, 1900, a high official of the War Department stated before the Senate Military Committee that "it (beer) is the one thing that makes it possible to make the camp, the military post, an agreeable place for the soldiers." Beer "the one thing" needful! What kind of an Army have we if it is made up of men for whom beer is "the one thing" needful to make a camp agreeable? In case of war, do the people want to depend upon such an army? Were the Army of the Potomac and the Army of Northern Virginia composed of men for whom beer was the "one thing needful" to make camp life agreeable? If they had been, there never would have been an Antietam, a Gettysburg, and an Appomattox on the one side, or a Bull Run, a Fredericksburg, and a Chancellorsville on the other. But it was not true when I commanded a company, and I do not believe it is true now.

It was my privilege to visit that splendid regiment, the Fourteenth Infantry, at Vancouver Barracks last fall. About 1,200 men were in the garrison. I was there during two pay days. I took special pains to observe the conduct of the men. There are many saloons in the town of Vancouver, half a mile distant. I saw many soldiers about the saloons, perhaps a hundred; but suppose there were two hundred, where were the thousand? Shall the blighting influences of the canteen be resorted to just to keep this minority in, even if it would do that? Shall we hold out a constant temptation to the thousand, even if it would benefit the two hundred? But, as we have seen, the canteen will not keep them in the garrison. I inquired of the officers as to breaches of discipline; they said there were but very few.

This regiment has been favorably referred to several times, and especially for its conduct on the way from San Francisco to St. Paul, Minn., in 1901. A bit of history may not be amiss in this connection.

DISCIPLINE WITHOUT BEER.

In December, 1899, there was serious danger of an uprising in Manila, P. I. Reliable troops were needed in the city. This regiment was drawn in from the front and stationed there. This gave an opportunity to institute a rigid system of discipline, which was carried out by all officers with zeal. The bad men were weeded out by courts-martial and discharged; but very few were left. The regiment was officially reported to be in excellent condition. And, although the canteen existed, the beer influence was not the controlling one. There was but very little drinking among the officers. The sentiment was strongly against it. Under these circumstances what could have been expected from this regiment other than good reports of its conduct?

The Fourth Infantry was commanded by Colonel Ray [Colonel Ray has been retired with the rank of brigadier-general], an unusually able officer and a civil war veteran. He is opposed to the canteen. He said, "I can not only maintain discipline without the canteen, but it is always a menace to discipline." He conducted the post exchange under present conditions so successfully that, I am informed, a large percentage of his officers have come to his way of thinking. And so it will be with any organization with a strong man at its head who will carry out the present policy.

In 1899 a circular was issued from the War Department inviting or requiring officers to express their opinion on the canteen. Colonel Ray did not receive that letter. I did not. Thirty-four cavalry and infantry regiments reported. There were forty-seven officers in each regiment. Assume that twenty of them were absent. This would leave 918 in all. Four hundred and twenty-six reported. Where were the 492?

There are officers who were opposed to the canteen who did not think it advisable to express themselves openly against it. If an Australian ballot were to be taken a much larger percentage would be shown to be opposed to the canteen than has hitherto appeared.

"THOU SHALT NOT."

An officer of high rank in the Army was reported to have said some time ago that if you tell a man he shall not do a thing there is something in human nature that will make him want to do just that thing. Must we, then, refrain from saying that a person shall or shall not do certain things? If so, then nearly all orders, the Articles of War, civil laws, and the Ten Commandments must be repealed, for the great body of them is made up of "shalls" and "shall nots."

It is said that men will have their beer, and if not permitted to buy it in the garrison they are "compelled," "forced," "driven" to the low dens outside. All agree that whisky shall not be sold in the garrison. But there are men who will have their whisky. Why "compel," "force," "drive" them to the low dens outside to get it? It is claimed that the canteen helps to maintain discipline and good order in the garrison. Our canteen friends have great respect for the Sabbath. They all make prominent their desire to have the canteen closed on that sacred day. Why? If it helps to maintain good order in the post, why not keep it open on Sunday above all other days? Why "compel," "force," "drive" men to visit the low dives on Sundays?

It is unfortunate that the abandonment of the canteen should be regarded as an experiment. As long as it is so regarded it offers opportunities and inducements to work, either actively or passively, against its success. It is claimed that an overwhelming majority of Army officers are in favor of the canteen. Is it reasonable to expect that persons opposed to the success of an experiment will work with zeal to make that experiment a success? If a commanding officer believes that beer is "the one thing" needful to make a camp or military post agreeable, what will be the result? If, on the contrary, a commanding officer believes in prohibiting the sale of intoxicants in a post, what will be the result? General Ray's management of his regiment answers these questions.

But let it once be thoroughly understood, in and out of the Army, that it is the unalterable purpose of the Government to prohibit the sale of all intoxicants in the Army, then all will settle down to work for the success of this policy.

But there is a simple remedy for this whole matter. If the Washington authorities will say to the Army, officers and men, that, other things being equal, the total abstainer shall have the preference for all appointments and promotions made by selection, and all important and desirable details, and carry it out faithfully, the battle will be won. In a month there will be a different atmosphere, in a year a great change; in five years the Army will be revolutionized.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, in desiring to reach a conclusion on the question of maintaing the canteen in Soldiers' and Sailors' Homes, I have read many letters and examined many reports bearing on this matter written by distinguished men whose experience qualifies them to speak with authority. Their relations to both soldiers and Homes were such as to give assurance of their fairness and impartiality. Some were Army officers, some clergymen, some governors of these Homes, and all men who speak from experience and observation.

The weight of authority, it seems to me, is largely in favor of establishing the canteen in the interest of fairness, sobriety, decency, and discipline. I am aware that this view is somewhat bitterly opposed, but you will find the bulk of the opposition comes from those who favor absolute prohibition. They seem to seek through legislative machinery to enforce their views on temperance on the old, worn-out soldier, who, if he has become accustomed to his glass of beer, will get it in the saloons if he can not get it on the grounds of the Home. After all, prohibition is only a theory, which fails in a great measure when you endeavor to put it into practice.

All the laws Congress may pass will not make the soldier who wants his glass of beer an abstainer. Abolish the canteen, and, as experience has demonstrated, you drive him to the outside saloons, and when you do that you subject him to all the temptations and vices that under these circumstances, when away from the watchful eyes of his superiors, he necessarily encounters.

In the canteen only beers and ales are sold. None but the best quality is permitted. If the man shows signs of having taken enough, he will not be allowed to get any more. The canteen is under rules and regulations carefully prepared by the governors of the Homes. These men have no interest to serve but the good of the soldier. The discipline of the Home is one of their chief concerns. Which then, I ask, is the better of the two propositions, to allow the sale of beer and ale under proper restrictions on the grounds where, among the books in the library or in the company of his old comrades, the veteran may partake of his beverage, or else drive him out to seek the saloon where, too often, the poorer kinds of liquor and strong drink are sold? There he may procure whisky and other of the stronger and more intoxicating drinks. In the canteen he can not. If he be given to excessive drinking, there is where he may indulge himself. In the canteen he can not, even if he would. Nor is that all.

The farther he travels to get his drink the more he will want to get. He falls in the company of strangers—away from home and companions and the wholesome atmosphere of the institution. He becomes an easy prey to temptations of every sort; he is left without restraint; he breaks through the discipline which he is accustomed to observe in the Home. No wonder, then, that where the canteen has been abolished many a poor old fellow, whose desire for drink has compelled him to seek the far-away saloon, has been found helpless on the public highway.

In the canteen he enjoys the comfort that the Home affords him; he has the companionship of his comrades; he is free from demoralizing influences; he is compelled to abide by the rules of the institution, which restrict the sale of the beverage and prevent its being given to men who show the least sign of intoxication.

Why, then, should the old soldier be deprived of the enjoyment of his glass of beer or ale within the Home? He has as great a right to enjoy this privilege in his little club within that Home as has the more fortunate man the privilege and opportunity of enjoying his drink in his palatial club.

The old veteran served his country well in the hours of its greatest danger. He risked his life upon the field of battle. He marched valiantly forth and aided in the vindication of the honor of our flag. He earned a nation's gratitude, and though misfortune compelled him to seek the shelter of the Home, he ought not, in the sunset of his life, to be compelled to forego the privileges which the canteen affords him. In his younger days he may have cultivated a taste for beer, which served him either as a pleasant beverage or a necessary stimulant.

In most cases he is a moderate drinker. It is an exception when he drinks to excess. Amid companionship of friends and comrades, whose association he holds dear, he enjoys his glass of beer with them. Though he be deprived of getting beer in the canteen, if he wants it, he will get it outside. If he is a drinking man, he will be the worse off for having to go outside the reservation. There alone is the danger of his engaging in excess, for he is free from restraining influences. If you compel him to seek his beer off the reservation, he will get it, and stronger drink, too, under conditions that we know are sometimes demoralizing.

Physically and morally the old veteran is far better off with the canteen. Men thoroughly acquainted with conditions that pertain to Soldiers' and Sailors' Homes assure me that the canteen is a benefit to the men. It prevents many of the evils to which those who favor prohibition claim to be so strictly and virtuously opposed. I am convinced the abolition of the canteen works an injury to the man.

My able and estimable colleague from New York [Mr. GOULDEN], who served with distinction in the war, is a governor of one of these State Homes. He is intimately acquainted with conditions that obtain in the canteen. No man in the land is more desirous of looking out for the welfare and comfort of the veterans and preserving at the same time order and discipline than my friend and colleague, Colonel GOULDEN. His large and wise experience qualifies him to speak a thousandfold more than men who oppose the canteen guided only by sentiment or by overzeal for the cause of prohibition or animated by a spirit of fanaticism.

My colleague assures me that the canteen is a positive benefit to the men and operates in the interests of sobriety, decency, and good order. I willingly accept his judgment. It is amply supported by excellent authority. It is in complete accord with the judgment expressed by others equally versed upon this subject. Upon their judgment I am willing to rest my vote against the amendment to abolish the canteen.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. LANDIS. Unless consent is given for general extension, I shall object.

The CHAIRMAN. Permission for general extension would have to be given by the House.

Mr. LANDIS. I shall not object, then.

The CHAIRMAN. No objection is heard.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I remember when this same subject was before the House two years ago, and in the closing debate a voice that was heard deprecating the establishment of a canteen in a Soldiers' Home is not here to be heard to-day. That was the voice of a soldier of this Republic who had spent some years of his life on the battlefields to maintain the Union, and he stood on this floor and pleaded for his comrades in the Soldiers' Homes. That was the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, Mr. HEPBURN, of Iowa. I regret that illness prevents his being here at this hour to assist in the adoption of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts. I am glad to have the privilege in this presence to-day of saying a word in behalf of the soldiers who are inmates of Soldiers' Homes, but who are not drunkards. We are told by these governors that the Soldiers' Homes of this country are filled up with drunkards; that a large per cent of the inmates of the Soldiers' Homes are men who have been accustomed to the use of stimulants the greater part of their lives; that the habit has so grown upon them during those forty years of drinking that now, in their old age, it should not be taken away from them.

I stand here, not as a soldier, but as the representative of the soldiers of my district, to resent the charge that is made against the soldiers of the Republic that they are common drunkards. I stand here for the soldiers of my State, who anywhere would resent such a charge and who, forty years after the war is over, are leading honorable and upright lives. They are temperate, most of them, and they are not drunkards. If there are a few drunkards in the Soldiers' Homes—and there may be some—let them be taken to their own homes, where they can be taken care of, rather than be allowed to frequent the dives or saloons in towns surrounding Soldiers' Homes and there become addicted to alcoholism and find a drunkard's grave.

What are the facts of the case about our soldiers that appeared before this distinguished Committee on Appropriations?

Not a single soldier from the Soldiers' Home, not a single letter here from a soldier in a Soldiers' Home, so far as I know, aside from the governors of the Homes. What do those governors say? I call the attention of this body to the statement of some of them. They say that the canteen ought to be maintained in the interest of discipline and in the interest of good morals. Great Heavens! Think of it! You must maintain a canteen in the Soldiers' Homes in order that discipline may be maintained. Everybody, of course, knows if you want to maintain discipline the first thing to do is to get the fellows drunk, and then it is easy to maintain discipline! Everybody knows, according to these governors, that if you make it more difficult for the soldiers in the Soldiers' Homes to get drink, therefore they will get more of it, and therefore that the best way to maintain discipline in a Soldiers' Home is to make them drunkards!

But what are the facts? Here is a distinguished governor of the Soldiers' Home in Kansas who makes a statement as to the difference in the conduct of the inmates when the canteen was out of the Home and when in the Home. He gives the figures, as he says, to show that there were more arrests for drunkenness in 1907, when they did not have the canteen, than in 1906, when they did have it. His figures show that in the four months—August, September, October, and November, 1906—when there was a canteen there were 211 arrests, and during the four months when there was no canteen, in 1907, there were 210 arrests; one more arrest made when there was no canteen than when there was a canteen, which, if it proves anything, proves that there were more arrests when they had the canteen than when they did not have it. As a matter of fact, these statements do not prove anything, and are simply used by the governors of these Homes to deceive Members of Congress and lead us to believe that because there were more arrests for drunkenness when they did not have the canteen, that therefore there was more drinking than when they had the canteen. The facts are when the soldiers go out and get drunk, on their return they are all arrested and sent to the guardhouse, and of course a record is made of these arrests, but when they get drunk in the canteen they are hustled off to the barracks, where they disturb those who are sober, and no record is made of these drunks. I plead for the soldiers in these Homes who do not get drunk that they may be protected from the insolence and abuse of those who do drink. The governors say that the soldiers who go out to the saloons and drink whisky die of alcoholism. If so, the fault is theirs. But if we reestablish the canteen and the soldiers at the Home die of alcoholism, then the fault will be ours. I do not care to assume any part of this responsibility. The report of the committee shows that $35,900 more money was appropriated without the beer canteen than with it, which is startling, to say the least. It shows that the revenue from the sale of beer alone in these Homes is $35,900 a year. And this money is the pensions provided by a grateful country to its defenders, and is being literally wasted, when with proper control of these Soldiers' Homes this money would or could be used in clothing and educating the children of the inmates of the Homes. Strange, indeed, it is that in the American Congress there can be found defenders for such conduct. For one I propose by my vote on this amendment to emphasize my earnest protest against the whole infamous business as regards the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors. It is bad, and all bad; not a redeeming feature about it. Its whole pathway is strewn with the wrecks of some of the brightest and best of the citizens of the Republic. And, in my judgment, the hour is not far distant when the decent manhood and womanhood of this country will assert itself and wipe out the legalized saloon not only in Soldiers' Homes, but in every part of our fair land.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kansas may extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I ask the same privilege for myself.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask the same privilege.

Mr. GOULDEN. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MILLER], the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DOUGLAS], the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], and the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOULDEN] may extend their remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, the question of canteen in the Soldiers' Homes is an important one. Prejudice should be discarded and the subject considered on its merits. It stands alone, having no connection with prohibition or the local option question. To my mind the warmest advocates and supporters of temperance can with propriety vote for the canteen in the Homes where the brave old soldiers are awaiting the summons of the Supreme Commander to join the heavenly armies. Considered from a patriotic economic view, its effect on the sobriety, morals, and discipline of the fifty-odd thousand inmates of these institutions, there can be no doubt whatever as to the proper solution of this question.

Speaking from the practical side, with an experience of more than six years as a trustee and an officer in the New York State Home at Bath, under both the canteen and anticanteen plans, I am forced to the conclusion that from every point of view the best interests of the inmates and the Homes demand that the canteen should be reestablished and maintained. Our experience in the Bath Home has taught us this lesson.

As I have on former occasions in this Chamber gone into the matter at considerable length, advocating the benefits and advantages of the canteen, where nothing but pure, unadulterated malt liquors are sold, under strict rules and regulations, I will content myself at this time by giving you the views of practical men, whose thorough knowledge of this question entitles them to favorable consideration.

First, I will read the resolution of the board of trustees of the New York State Home, having an average membership of 2,000:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the board of trustees of the New York State Soldiers and Sailors' Home that the best interests of the institution and the good of the members thereof will be subserved by the reestablishment at the Home of the canteen at which only malt liquors are sold, and the board urgently requests the several Members of Congress from the State of New York to use their best endeavors to accomplish this result.

I have here a letter from the Catholic chaplain of the Home, a most devoted clergyman, in which he says:

NEW YORK STATE SOLDIERS AND SAILORS' HOME,
Bath, Steuben County, N. Y., January 16, 1906.

Hon. J. A. GOULDEN, M. C., Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In compliance with your request, I send my views as to the advisability of returning to the canteen system in the Soldiers' Homes of the country.

I have been Catholic chaplain at the New York State Soldiers and Sailors' Home for nearly four years. When I began my work here I was opposed to the canteen, but experience has taught me that it is morally impossible to eradicate intemperance. The best we can do is to endeavor to control it. A large number of the inmates formed an appetite for intoxicating liquors early in life and now consider them essential. To my mind it would be far better to establish a canteen at this Home in which the men could obtain mild stimulants under proper restrictions than to practically force them to frequent the saloons, of which there are many in the proximate vicinity of the Home, where the vilest kind of liquors are generally sold.

I am, yours, sincerely,

JOHN F. FARRELL.

While this letter was written in 1906, the chaplain reaffirms his position taken at that time. I have a letter from the commandant of the Home, Col. Joseph E. Ewell, himself a teetotaler, an advocate of prohibition, a consistent member of the Anti-Saloon League. His letter is as follows:

NEW YORK STATE SOLDIERS AND SAILORS' HOME,
Bath, Steuben County, N. Y., February 15, 1908.

Hon. JOSEPH A. GOULDEN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your inquiry in regard to the canteen at the New York State Soldiers and Sailors' Home, in which you ask my opinion as to its advantages and disadvantages, I beg to say that the canteen was established at this institution many years ago, pursuant to the provisions of a State law authorizing the sale of ale and beer to members of the Home on the Home grounds under such rules and regulations as the trustees of the institution might prescribe, the net proceeds of the sale to be expended for the support of the library and reading room of the Home, and for such other purposes as might be deemed best for the comfort and amusement of the members.

It was discontinued on the 1st day of July, 1904, by reason of Congressional legislation regarding it. In my opinion the canteen, judging from its effects here, was in the highest degree beneficial, and the interests of the Home would be advanced by its reinstatement. I speak from an experience of more than five years partly with and without the canteen.

Just outside the main entrance to the Home there are 19 saloons and hotels, to which all the members have easy and convenient access. The resulting evils are well known. The argument in favor of the canteen, in my opinion, is that it diminishes, at least to some extent, these evils and that it is conducive to discipline and good order. During the period in which we had the canteen there was a slight decrease in the percentage of arrests for intoxication at this institution, and during the remaining years there has been a decided increase.

This seems to me to be a strong and, indeed, an unanswerable argument in favor of the canteen.

Respectfully,

J. E. EWELL, Commandant.

I have also the following letters on the same subject from the able governors of two of the leading National Homes and one from that gallant soldier, Col. John R. King, past commander in chief of that splendid organization—the Grand Army of the Republic:

SOUTHERN BRANCH, NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS,
February 14, 1908.

Hon. J. A. GOULDEN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I have your letter of the 10th instant, and in reply desire to say that there is only one opinion among the officers of the Branch as to the abolishment of the canteen, which is that the effect works injuriously to the members. Our membership is very largely composed of old men, the average age of those from the civil war being about 68 years, very many over 70, and quite a number over 80 years of age. They have not many years to live, and it seems to them a hardship that they are not allowed to take a glass of pure beer of less than 3 per cent of alcohol comfortably and quietly, but instead are compelled to go outside and buy such vile drinks as are sold, much under the name of "whisky," but contain a large amount of wood alcohol.

Surrounded by the influences of the saloon element, whose only desire is to get the money from the old men, frequently when it can not be otherwise obtained, these old men are drugged and robbed. There is a very general impression among the members that their services and the victories won by them from 1861 to 1865 make it possible for the American people to boast of the magnitude, wealth, and power of our united country, and they feel that Congress should aid in their protection from being the victims of persons conducting saloons and the injurious influences. Since the canteen has been abolished the number of arrests from drunkenness and effects incident thereto have greatly increased, as well as the number of cases of acute alcoholism treated at the hospital and the deaths resulting therefrom.

The officers of the Branch are almost without exception total abstainers from drink, but they are unanimous in the opinion that the canteen should be restored for the protection and welfare of the members. The surgeon and the Protestant and Catholic chaplains are pronounced in these views.

Very respectfully, T. T. KNOX, Governor.

SOUTHERN BRANCH, NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS,
January 6, 1908.

Hon. J. A. TAWNEY,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

(Through the President of the Board of Managers N. H. D. V. S.)

DEAR SIR: In reply to your letter of the 14th ultimo, with reference to the results following the abolition of the canteen at this Branch, I desire to say that the records show as follows:

"Number of arrests from drunkenness or causes resulting therefrom from March 4, 1906, to December 1, 1906, 730; cases of alcoholism treated in the hospital for the same period, 191; March 4, 1907, to December 1, 1907, arrests, 1,261; cases of alcoholism in hospital, 320; total number of arrests incident to drunkenness from January 1, 1906, to December 31, 1906, 1,407; cases in hospital, same cause, 274."

On March 31, 1906, the average present was 2,698; on December 1, 1907, 2,242. There was a large increase in number of arrests incident to drink after the canteen was closed, while at the same time the membership was decreased by several hundred. Had the membership remained the same, doubtless the figures would be greater, showing the results from drink. There is only one opinion among the officers of the Branch, having the welfare of the members at heart, as to the resulting effect of the abolishment of the canteen. Without exception we think it results in great injury to the members. These members in their old age need great care and kindness and should often be treated much as a parent treats a child. When we had the canteen this was done with good results. Large numbers of the members at that time were fully satisfied to take pure beer of less than 3 per cent alcohol, taken in peace and comfort.

The canteen was conducted under strict rules, all tending to the good of the members. Since its abolishment the Branch officers have largely been helpless in controlling the appetites of the members, many of whom acquired the drink habit years ago, and it must not be expected that men in advanced life, with confirmed habits, can be easily persuaded to change them. Such men will drink; if mild drinks are not supplied, they will buy strong ones, and with the temptations such as they receive in saloons are unable to restrain themselves. It is generally believed by the surgeons and others that whiskies of such inferior quality, largely containing wood alcohol, are sold to members, which frequently results in death. Could those who brought about the abolishment of the canteen visit and remain at the Branch for some time, it is believed that they would be convinced that their actions had been injurious to the members of the Home. These members, who take equal pride with other Americans in the magnitude, wealth, and power of our country, feel that had not the victories from 1861 to 1865 been won by them there would be no united country to boast of. They also feel that they should be entitled to the small privilege of drinking in comfort mild beverages at the Branch under proper rules, rather than be compelled to go outside and be the victims in their old age and helpless condition of such persons as compose the saloon element. At these saloons their money is all that is wanted, and in many cases when it can not otherwise be obtained they are drugged and robbed. The number of saloons in the small town adjoining the Branch remains about the same as before March 4, 1907, but this number is quite large—twenty-eight. Of these, twelve are within two squares from the corner of the street near the Home entrance, and not much room for any more.

Congress should do its part to protect the members under such circumstances. The officers of the Branch almost without exception are strict abstainers from drink, but it is their unanimous and firm conviction that the best interests of the Branch suggests the restoration of the canteen. The surgeon states that after eleven years' experience he believes the canteen to be an aid in the maintenance of discipline and the health of the members. Both Protestant and Catholic chaplains are heartily in favor of the canteen being restored.

Respectfully, yours,

T. T. KNOX, Governor.

EASTERN BRANCH, NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS,
Togus, Me., February 25, 1908.

Hon. J. A. GOULDEN, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: In reply to your communication of the 10th instant, requesting my views upon the canteen question in the Soldiers' Home, I have the honor to state that the experience of an officer of the Home can not fail to convince him that the presence of a beer hall, where the sale of a mild type of beer is allowed, under control, is a strong aid to discipline.

The closing of the beer hall, instead of advancing the interests of temperance, has had exactly the opposite effect. The difficulties of maintaining proper discipline are very largely increased. At a Home situated as is this one, in a State where the sale of liquor is prohibited, the beer which the men have been accustomed to is certainly much better for them than the vile compound which is sold to them under the name of liquor by the violators of the law who infest the vicinity of the Branch for the purpose of preying upon the members of the Home. Further than this, the records of the hospital will bear out the statement that one debauch in the brothels and dives which, in spite of the prohibitory law of the State, are most evidently doing a thriving business, far more seriously affects the health of the veteran than a continued moderate use of beer. The percentage of cases of alcoholism treated in the hospital since the closing of the beer hall, as compared with corresponding periods during its existence, has almost doubled.

The average age of the members is 68 years. They are men of fixed habits. Those among them who have never used beer or intoxicants can not be induced to drink them, while those who have been accustomed to their use can not be changed. Nearly all of the offenses committed by the members of the Home are directly traceable to the vile liquor obtained outside the reservation. Since the closing of the beer hall, the number of offenses attributable to the use of intoxicating liquor has increased more than 20 per cent. It is therefore reasonable that any system that tends to keep the members from these temptations and supplies, to those who crave it, a mild beer, under rigid control, must work for the betterment of the Home and the welfare and health of its members.

Yours, very respectfully, JOHN T. RICHARDS, Governor.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 28, 1908.

Hon. J. A. GOULDEN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR COMRADE GOULDEN: You ask me for an opinion relative to the propriety of maintaining canteens at National Soldiers' Homes, and in reply I beg to say at the outset that I am a firm advocate as a fundamental principle of the right of the majority to determine whether or not spirituous or intoxicating liquors shall be sold within certain prescribed territory. In company with the late United States Senator Arthur P. Gorman, we met the question in my county in Maryland, and the advocates of local option prevailed by a large majority, so that my predilections are against the sale of intoxicants; hence what I shall say is from that standpoint.

My observations of the conditions surrounding the Soldiers' Homes is confined to the one at Hampton, Va. I have been a frequent visitor there, have noted the effects of the canteen, and my candid judgment is in favor of this institution. I have seen scores of old veterans in the canteen drinking beer, but never saw one of them drunk.

The best argument in favor of the canteen is the degrading and disgusting low groggeries outside and adjacent to the Home, alarmingly multiplied in numbers since the abolishment of the canteen. Into these low dives the old soldiers are inveigled, made drunk by the vile concoctions kept in the place, drugged and robbed and beaten nigh unto death, and in many cases it is surmised die from the rough treatment received at the hands of the keepers of these rum mills and bawdy houses; hence it is upon purely moral grounds and for the best interests of these old comrades of ours that I favor the restoration of the canteen.

Sincerely, yours, JNO. R. KING.

I also desire to have the following poem, written by an old soldier, an inmate of the Eastern Home, at Togus, Me., who, unlike the one whose letter my colleague from New York [Mr. BENNET] has had read, is not ashamed to have his name known. The poem tells its own pathetic story:

[From Daily Eastern Argus, Portland, Me., October 21, 1907.]

GIVE US BACK OUR OLD CANTEEN.

Turning back to treasured memories, of the times now long ago,
When as boys we marched together through swamps, the rain, and snow;
Charging up the rugged hillside; buried dead beside the streams;
'Twas then we turned for solace to our precious old canteens.
Though often filled with turbid water from the roadside murky glen,
Yet 'twas nectar on our marches, and to lips of dying men;
And we fancy do they sing their song on that far-distant shore,
We are coming, Father Abraham, three hundred thousand more!
We are marching fast toward the end! Still many wear the blue
In the Soldiers' Homes of Uncle Sam, to veterans always true.
He knows our faults and virtues some—has not forgot his due
To men with blood, not angels, who helped to get him through.
Had we not gained the cause we struggled for in years of cruel strife
'Twould have stayed the tide of progress and the cause of human rights.
And why Uncle Sam likes veterans now, we'll tell it just to you:
They kept all the stars a shining on his flag red, white, and blue.
Uncle Sam put canteens in the Homes to cheer vets on the road,
With just enough of lager beer to lighten up their load;
Of broken hopes, apart from friends and homes they held so dear,
'Till some, who claimed to be their friends, deprived them of their beer.
In our case they changed the maxim "Of two evils choose the least,"
For on beer there is a famine, while on rum there is a feast.
We can not reconcile reform, with the facts as they appear;
There is all the rum you want to drink, but you can't have lager beer.

ADDENDA.

We have no votes in Togus, thus our weakness there is seen,
So we ask our friends to help us to restore the old canteen.

HUGH YOUNG.

TOGUS, ME., October 14, 1907.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts should be adopted, and the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York should be defeated. Originally, the National Soldiers' Homes were designed, and it was believed that they would be supported by contributions from benevolent people. That, however, has passed away, and they are now maintained solely out of the Federal Treasury and at Federal expense. In every practical sense the Government of the United States owns every one of these Homes, and if intoxicating liquors are to be sold there, the Government of the United States is in fact to sell these liquors at retail.

I am opposed to the Government of the United States directly going into the retail liquor business, and, therefore, I oppose the amendment to the amendment and to any canteen in the Soldiers' Homes of the United States. [Applause.] We owe to these old veterans a home; we owe to these old veterans light; we owe to them food; we owe to them clothing, but we do not owe to them any duty that the Government of the United States shall itself engage in the retail liquor business. [Applause.] I do not propose to inquire whether these men will drink more or less. They are men to whom we owe a duty, but they are free moral agents. We are not guardians over them; it is not our duty to investigate and ascertain and protect them from drinking Peruna if they see fit. [Laughter.] No such obligation rests upon the United States in any sense, in my judgment.

I therefore believe that we are not to consider the question of whether it is good for these people to get pure beer or impure beer. It is beneath the dignity of the Government of the United States to engage in the retail liquor traffic, and that we ought not to do it, let the consequences be what they may. [Applause.]

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, any phase of the liquor traffic arrests the attention of every citizen who is concerned for the reputation and happiness of his country. On no other question, except possibly that of differences in religious belief, do men divide themselves into more clearly defined and aggressively hostile parties. Each is positive that he is right; at least, he is absolutely certain that the other is wrong.

There is a wave of sentiment in opposition to the official recognition of liquor selling now sweeping over the country. It paralyzes the reasoning faculties of legislators and makes them afraid. It is forcing gentlemen here who should be more courageous to conceal their real views and to play the part of a coward.

The intemperate use of intoxicants is a filthy and disgusting habit that can not be too severely condemned by society. To get habitually drunk ought to be an unpardonable social crime, and when it is so considered and properly punished the sot will disappear from public view.

I am as stanch an advocate of temperance as any man on earth, in the pulpit and out of it, in the temperance forum and out of it. I hate excesses, and I would like to see them properly punished, but I can not shut my eyes to certain well attested facts about the administration of these Soldiers' Homes and military posts.

This paragraph in the bill, this particular question, is important only as it presents one phase of a great social problem, the solution of which perplexes the best minds in the country. Among gentlemen of equal moral worth, people of the highest character, of equal integrity and station, there are to be found radically different opinions as to how the liquor traffic should be treated.

I wish I had the time to go into an extended argument in support of my views on this question. As it is, I shall use the few minutes allowed me by asking the attention of the committee to a statement of certain facts made to me by a surgeon of the United States Army, who was visiting at my house two days ago.

In the course of his military career he has done professional duty in connection with the Army at seven or eight posts. At one of these stations he observed certain peculiarities among his soldier patients that made him suspect that they were addicted to the use of habit-making drugs. He communicated his suspicions to the commanding officer, and received his consent to a searching examination. He assembled the men, stripped them, and made a careful professional examination. As he had thought would be the case, he found that an appalling percentage of them were habitually using a hypodermic syringe with opium as a means of stimulation. He found that other men in the same command habitually used cocaine by snuffing it in their noses.

All that, Mr. Chairman, was in a State where the sale of liquor is prohibited by law.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. What State is that?

Mr. SLAYDEN. The State of Maine, and in the vicinity of Portland. My friend the surgeon went on to say that in the course of his service at six or seven other stations, not a single man had been brought to the hospital or had come under his observation who was addicted to the use of drugs.

In a perfectly fair spirit, he added that he did not doubt that there might be soldiers at every military post who habitually used these poisonous drugs. He was only certain that none of them had come to him for professional treatment.

Is it not a fair inference that there are not so many soldiers addicted to these enslaving drugs outside of prohibition States as can be found among those who are stationed in communities where liquor is only sold illicitly? Certainly, if they used a drug to the extent that my surgeon says that they did at Portland, in Maine, some of them would have been so much under its control that they would have required the services of a doctor.

I asked him if any of the soldiers ever drank to excess in the prohibition States. He said they did, but that there was certainly less drunkenness among enlisted men in Maine than in other States, like New York for instance.

Mr. Chairman, I do not have to go to the testimony of surgeons to convince me that where you deprive men of the opportunity to get alcoholic stimulants you increase the consumption of hurtful, habit-forming drugs and horrible patent medicines, so-called, that develop the taste for both.

The patent medicine is a double-barreled weapon for evil that should be outlawed without delay. It enriches the rascal, cheats the ignorant, and besots the unwary.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MILLER] has just said that the charge has been made here that the Homes for old soldiers are peopled by drunkards. I have heard no one make that charge. I do not think that he has. He was speaking in the heat of debate and did not measure his words when he made that charge against those gentlemen here who oppose the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts. The statement has been made that many of these old men do want a drink now and then, and he will hardly deny that that is true. But a man may want stimulants occasionally and take them without being a drunkard, just as a man may want food three times a day without laying himself open to the charge that he is a glutton. Personally, I do not think that for matured men there is any danger from the proper and moderate use of alcoholic beverages. Certainly it is not as hurtful as overindulgence in foods. Each has its place in the economy of nature. Each should be used; neither should be abused.

The place to regulate the habits of men is, first, at the mother's knee, then the church, and finally the school. I do not believe that we can make them good, or even temperate, by statute.

No, Mr. Chairman, I do not think that these old soldiers are drunkards. As they served in a war that closed forty-three years ago, I know that they are not children, and so I do not think that we can change their habits by an amendment to an appropriation bill.

I hope that these old men, who are not drunkards, who are now looking down the slope toward the sunset of life, who have earned some consideration, may not be deprived of the privilege of an occasional stimulant, a privilege that, I dare say, 95 per cent of them would like, and which can be granted under such circumstances that gross improprieties and breaches of discipline are not possible.

Mr. SCOTT. In the course of this discussion we have heard a great deal from and about two classes of people. We have heard from the officers of the National Homes, who are quoted as declaring that the abolition of the canteen has interfered with discipline, has resulted in a large number of additional arrests, and has been a great hardship to the inmates of the Home. And we have heard pathetic and impassioned appeals in behalf of the old soldiers in these Homes who have formed the drinking habit, have indulged in it all their lives, and whose health and happiness are now destroyed because the Government does not provide within the very walls of the Home it has built for them the means to gratify their unfortunate appetite.

But there are two other classes of people whom we have not heard from, but who, it seems to me, are entitled to consideration. One of these classes is made up of the families of the old soldiers in the various Homes, and who are dependent in whole or in part upon that portion of the soldier's pension which is sent to them. What would they have to say on this question if their voice could be heard here? In all probability they are in poverty now, largely because of the intemperate habit of the husband or father who is now in the National Home. Would they ask us to legislate into this great institution the counterpart of the village saloon which has wrecked their happiness? Would they ask us to keep constantly in the very presence of this husband or father the temptation which had made shipwreck of his life? As a mere matter of money, what would they say to us?

The records show that in 1905 the sales in the beer halls in all the National Homes amounted to $261,427. In 1906 the sales amounted to $291,690, an increase during the year of $30,263. The pensions received by the inmates of all the Homes in 1905 amounted to $3,454,752, while in 1906 the pensions received amounted to $3,572,124, an increase during the year of $117,372. But in 1905 the amount of money sent home by the inmates in all the National Homes amounted to $786,369, while in 1906, with $117,372 more received, there was sent home only $775,672. That is to say, during these two years, with the canteen in all the Homes, the increase in the liquor sales was $30,263, while in the amount of pension money sent home there was an actual decrease of $10,697. Whatever the presence of the canteen may contribute, therefore, to the happiness and comfort and good conduct of the man in the Home, these figures certainly make it apparent that the family dependent upon him does not share in the benefit.

But let me call your attention to some other figures. In 1906, as I have just stated, the sales in the beer halls amounted to $291,690. In 1907, with the canteen eliminated from the Homes only four months out of the twelve, the sales amounted to $211,429, a decrease over the preceding year of $80,261. Now, the pensions received during 1907 by the inmates of the Homes were $142,837 in excess of the amount received the preceding year, but little more, you will notice, than the increase of 1906 over 1905. But in 1907 the amount of the pensions sent home by the soldiers was $888,559 as against $775,672 in 1906, an increase of $112,887. During the last two years of the canteen there was an actual decrease of $10,697 in the amount sent home, while during 1907, although the canteen still remained in the Homes two-thirds of the year, the increase in the amount sent home over the preceding year was $112,887. In the light of these figures is it not absolutely clear that the great majority of the old soldiers in the National Homes saved the money which they had been accustomed to spending in the canteen and sent it to their families, instead of spending it in riotous debauches in outside dives and brothels, as the attempt has been made to have it appear?

But there is another class of persons interested in this controversy who are entitled to be heard and for whom I wish to speak. And that is the sober men, the men who have never formed the drinking habit, but who have been forced by untoward circumstances to take refuge in the National Homes. What right have we to thrust intoxicating liquors continually in their faces? What right have we to make it possible for their more unfortunate comrades to put themselves in such a condition of mind and body as to seriously disturb the peace and quiet of those who do not join in their tippling? I have a letter here from a personal friend who is now a subordinate officer in one of the Homes, which I believe fairly represents the sentiment of these nondrinking soldiers. I am unable to give the name of the writer of this letter, because I have not his permission to use it, and the letter is a personal one. I may say, however, that I have known the gentleman many years and that I have no doubt he writes what he believes to be the truth. And here is a portion of his letter:

As there is an effort being made to restore the "canteen" in the Soldiers' Homes, I desire to write you briefly. The saloon or "canteen" was abolished in the Soldiers' Homes by a condition placed in the sundry civil appropriation bill for the present fiscal year, and I hope the same prohibition will be made in the present bill now before Congress.

I have resided here, both before and since the exit of the "canteen," and I can assure you that the absence of that institution has wrought a great improvement in the civil conduct and good order of the members of the Home. When the "canteen" was here, that portion of the old veterans who are addicted to drink were constantly under the influence of beer, causing them to be reckless of speech, obscene, and often quarrelsome, keeping their appetites for drink constantly "whetted up," and when pensions were paid them their desire for something stronger caused them to go to the extremes. When the "canteen" was here there used to be from 100 to 200 arrests of veterans in the Home by the police for intoxication within a day or two after each pension pay day. Since the "canteen" went out the number of such arrests has greatly diminished.

The plea made by some officers of the Army and Soldiers' Homes that the "canteen" serves to keep the men from going to outside resorts and getting drunk on "bad whisky" is not true as to this Home, as I can assure you from my own personal observation. It is furthermore an insult to all the old soldiers as a class to say that they are such drinkers of intoxicating liquors as to make it necessary to run a saloon in the Home in order to keep them from going to outside resorts.

The profits of the "canteen" were immense, and as the authorities of the Home who had charge of the proceeds were not required to account to the Government for the same it is reasonable to presume a motive other than the welfare of the men for the clamor being made for the restoration of the camp saloon. No private member of the Home was allowed to know anything about the expenditures of the proceeds or for what purpose they were applied.

The clamor for the "canteen" comes mainly from officers. The majority of the private members of the Home are not petitioning for it. All who love peace, quiet, and decency hope that it will never return.

That letter sounds to me like a sane and faithful report of actual conditions, and I submit that it suggests a very different condition from that which those who have opposed this amendment have attempted to picture. I do not wish to be understood, of course, as giving my assent to the implied charge that the authorities of the Homes have a dishonest pecuniary motive in wishing the canteens restored; although it does seem to me that the Committee on Appropriations might well take the trouble in case they are restored to find out just what is done with the very large amount of money which will be received.

I trust and believe, however, that the canteen will not be restored. I voted to take the canteen out of the Regular Army posts. I have voted to take it out, and to-day shall vote to keep it out of the Soldiers' Homes, and if I could have an opportunity I should vote to exclude the sale of liquor from any institution over which the United States has jurisdiction. In casting these votes I have not only reflected the sentiment of a large majoriy of my constituents, but I have voiced my own profound conviction. I am against the amendment to make the restoration of the canteen a local-option question in each of the Homes, and I am for the amendment to exclude the canteen from all the Homes. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Chair recognizes now the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] for two minutes, as the Chair understood that the five minutes' time was to be divided between the two gentlemen from Kansas [Mr. SCOTT and Mr. CAMPBELL]—three minutes to one and two minutes to the other.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, two minutes is too short a time in which to enter into a discussion of this question. I have been listening for two months to a discussion of the liquor question, and it has been proven beyond any doubt, on the one hand, that it was a good thing to have liquor where you could get it in the most convenient manner possible and, on the other hand, that it was the worst possible thing to have within reach at all. I am not surprised, therefore, at the evidence which has been given here to-day for the establishment and maintenance of canteens in the Soldiers' Homes, on the one hand, and for their abolishment, on the other. We have been given the percentage of the use of liquor under both plans. We have been told that the canteen was a convenience and a benefit to the inmates. We have been told that it was an injury to the Home and the morals of those in them. The evidence is hopelessly conflicting. But I put the question far above the mere matter of the convenience of the soldier who may be the inmate of the Home or the amount that may be consumed with the canteen or without it. I put it far above whether more or less liquor is consumed by the inmates of the Home. The important question is, Shall the Government of the United States engage in the saloon business? Shall representatives of the Government be barkeepers and sell liquor for a profit or sell it at all under any sort of circumstances? I am opposed to the Government selling intoxicating liquors on any of its property, or permitting it to be done. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TIRRELL] ought to be adopted and the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARSONS] ought to be defeated. I sincerely hope both may be done.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I do not quite understand what is meant by the words "Soldiers' Home"—a home. Does it mean a State prison, subject to State-prison government? I would say, No. These men are the defenders of our country and they are entitled to the blessings of freedom. Do those words mean a workhouse? They mean what they say—they mean a home. What man of you would submit to legislation which would say that you should or should not drink temperately in your own home? Mr. Chairman, it is not a question of the United States engaging in the liquor traffic. It is a question of the soldiers' club, whether they shall have the right to have one. It has never been run for the benefit of the United States, this so-called "canteen"—wrongly so called. It has been run for the benefit of the soldiers themselves.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. For a moment.

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman says it is not run for the benefit of the Government of the United States, but for the soldiers themselves.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. Have not $35,000 more been appropriated in this bill because of the fact that the canteen was taken out of the Soldiers' Homes?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I do not know.

Mr. MILLER. Well, I do.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I think possibly we have appropriated more in order to give reading rooms.

Mr. MILLER. No; they assign it as a reason——

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. No, no; I can not yield. Let me proceed. I say that the old soldier has the right to his own club. I appeal to the experience of every man in this House as to whether the institution of clubs—gentlemen's clubs—has not changed the whole state of society in many localities, and whether drinking, instead of being done at ale houses and drinking saloons, has not come to be decent and in order, not for the purpose of getting drunk, but taken as a mere refreshment.

But I appeal, whether that be so or not, for the right of the old soldier in the Home to establish a place where he can in his home, poor old man, take a glass of beer, that he wants, instead of being forced to go out for it. Now, this amendment to the amendment secures that to a certain extent. It says that with the consent of a majority of those who are there it can be done, and I ask for that amendment, if we can get no more; but I maintain, Mr. Chairman, and I maintain before this whole people, that if 100 or more or less of the old soldiers in a Home choose to have a room where they can serve themselves in decency and moderation with light beers and can sit and read their newspapers, that they have as good a right to have a club of that sort as you or I, and I stand for their freedom in this respect. [Applause.]

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Chairman, I heartily favor the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TIRRELL]. It may not be improper for me to state that I offered a similar amendment in the committee while the bill was under consideration there. I agree with those gentlemen who see more in this matter than a mere question as to whether the canteen is beneficial or harmful, and to my mind it can and should be solved independently of any such considerations. The initial inquiry—and one that must be answered before any question as to the good or evil effect upon the soldiers or the Homes can possibly arise—is, Shall the United States as a Government go into the retail liquor or saloon business? Shall the Government, in this day and age, when the liquor traffic is universally regarded as an evil to be repressed and regulated—nay, if possible, to be entirely suppressed—take a stand in the path of moral progress, and in defiance of that wholesome and healthy sentiment proclaim by its conduct that the liquor traffic is a good thing, so good, indeed, that the Government is willing to engage in it? There can be but one answer to this question. The Government can not and must not go into any such business, and that this is the only answer is evidenced by the efforts to escape the fact that wherever the canteen is maintained the Government is in the liquor business. But I am not willing to concede that the operation of the canteen is beneficial, either to the inmates of the Homes or to the Homes as institutions.

I have read with care all the reports from the managers of these institutions and they do not convince me. I can not believe that the passing of the canteen has produced increased drunkenness, and the facts and figures given instead of bringing that conviction to my mind merely establish that when the man who now gets drunk outside the grounds is always caught and arrested when he returns, whereas when he formerly got drunk, in the canteen, he frequently escaped arrest and was thereby enabled to annoy and disturb the sober inmates. On that the report from the Central Branch is significant. I quote:

> In some cases it is claimed that members who were accustomed to drink moderately at the beer hall do not go out and that their health is impaired for lack of their usual stimulant. On the other hand it is claimed that since the closing of the beer hall some men who could not stand the temptation of a beer hall in the Home, but would either drink too much at the beer hall or start on beer and then go out and get drunk, are now keeping perfectly sober. It seems to be very generally admitted that the camp in general and most of the barracks are quieter and pleasanter for sober men than when the beer hall was in operation, as in spite of the precautions exercised some men who drank too much at beer hall, but did not show the effects till after reaching barracks, would make it very unpleasant for others in barracks, while under existing conditions most of these men in coming into the Home from the outside are captured by the guards and taken to the guardhouse, and do not get into the barracks to trouble others.

Besides it has been shown in this argument that these soldiers remitted over $100,000 more to their families during three months in which there was no canteen than they had done the corresponding months of the previous year when the canteen was in operation. Certainly that fact can not be reconciled with the idea of increased drinking or increased expenditures for liquor. I can not be made to believe that the best way to keep the peace is to permit any man who desires to carry a pistol, nor the best way to promote temperance to provide facilities to drink. Again, the sober soldier is entitled to the first consideration. He has a right to be freed from the offensive disturbing conduct of those who drink. He has a right to a quiet, orderly, peaceful home in which to spend his declining years.

That the abolition of the canteen promotes that condition can not be doubted. Let me repeat the language of Mr. Clark, governor of the Central Branch:

> It seems to be very generally admitted that the camp in general and most of the barracks are quieter and pleasanter for sober men than when the beer hall was in operation.

If there was nothing else urged, this alone would be conclusive with me. The drunk have no right to annoy the sober. The sober have a right to be freed from the offensive conduct of those who are intoxicated. To my mind good morals, good administration, and good government all demand the abolition of the canteen. I shall vote to put it, and keep it, out of business. [Applause.]

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the canteen in the Soldiers' Home. [Applause.] I stand for the sober soldier. We have heard a good deal from the committee on management and from outside people. Now, I would like to have read a letter from an inmate of the Soldiers' Home at Danville. I know his name, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS] knows of him. He has asked me not to use his name, I presume so as to avoid some petty persecution in the Home. I would like to have the letter read in my time by the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the letter in the gentleman's time.

The Clerk read as follows:

NATIONAL MILITARY HOME, DANVILLE BRANCH,
Danville, Ill., April 28, 1908.

Hon. W. S. BENNET,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: As a member of this Branch of the Soldiers' Home and interested in its greatest good, I take the liberty to earnestly request you to do all you lawfully can to prevent the reestablishment of the beer hall or "canteen" in the Soldiers' Home.

From my personal observation, before and after the "canteen" went out, I am fully satisfied that the moral tone and condition of the Home have greatly improved since the beer hall closed.

During its existence a mass of men were daily going to the "canteen," and were more or less under the influence of liquor, from the slightest degree to complete intoxication. They would be noisy, profane, obscene in language, troublesome, and unruly in the barracks.

Since it was closed this is much lessened, and the barracks are places of much more decency, quiet, and peace.

One man said in my hearing: "Before I came here I did not drink very much, but the beer hall being so handy, I go there and drink and drink, more and more, until I get real drunk."

Another said: "Every time I go there and take beer it drives me straight downtown for something stronger, and I get drunk."

Both of these men said they "wished Congress would close the thing out."

Each of these men represented many other drinking men who were like minded. And there are a multitude of men here who are glad the "canteen" is out and hope it will never return.

I believe it would be a great calamity and a real disgrace to the Home and to the nation to reestablish it, besides making the Home an unpleasant and undesirable place for those men who wish to have a decent, quiet, and orderly home to live in.

Trusting that you will do your utmost to prevent its reestablishment, I am, most respectfully,

Your obedient servant,

——— ———.

Mr. BENNET of New York. That is the sentiment of the men who live in the Home—the men who have to live in the Home, whether the canteen is there or not there—and I think that this House ought to stand by the sober soldier. Why, there is less than 10 per cent of the men in this Home who come up in the courts on these charges—less than 10 per cent given under the figures which have been sent in by the Committee on Appropriations, from whom they have to get their money and whose sentiments are tolerably well known. Now, there is another thing that does not seem to be taken into account, and that is the families of these soldiers.

It is claimed by friends of the canteen in Soldiers' Homes that the effects of its abolition have been detrimental. It is a fact worthy of note that, while the last report of the Board of Managers of the National Homes only covers a period of about four months, during which the canteen was abolished, the amount of money returned to the families of the soldiers was materially increased. While the report of 1906 shows that .217 of the total amount of pensions received by soldiers in the Homes was returned to their families, the report of 1907 shows that .239 was returned. The total increase of pensions received for the year ended June 30, 1907, over the year ended June 30, 1906, was $143,837.61, but of this increase $112,886.91 was returned to the families of the soldiers, leaving only $30,950.70 of the increase to be retained by the soldiers themselves. The increase of pensioners during the year ended June 30, 1907, over the preceding year was 1.6 per cent; the amount of pensions paid during this period increased 4.03 per cent. The increase of pensions paid to families was 14.55 per cent, while the increase paid to the pensioners direct was only .65 per cent. The increase in the amount paid to the families of the soldiers was three and one-half times the increase paid to the pensioners direct. It is a noteworthy fact that while there was this increase of $112,886.91 paid to the families of the soldiers, as compared with a decrease the previous year of $10,696.50, the sales at the beer halls for the year ended June 30, 1907, decreased $80,261.73, as compared with an increase of $30,263.58 the previous year.

It is claimed by the friends of the canteen that since its abolition, March 4, 1907, the number of offenses committed at each Branch has materially increased. At least one of the Homes presents a record showing the reverse. It would, however, be very remarkable, considering the appetites of some of the men who have been used to drinking in the Homes, if the record for a while did not show an increase in the number of offenses committed, because of the desire of some of the men to go out from the Home without leave to get liquor. That this should be so is one of the indictments against the canteen, because of the appetites for drink which the canteen has created and fostered. Reports from one of the Branches, in order to make a point against the abolition of the canteen, indicate that the mayor and police officers of the city have become enlisted in trying to preserve order among the soldiers. With the aid of the city police to hunt up cases against the men, there is little wonder that the total number of offenses shows an increase.

Perhaps the best test of this whole matter is a comparison of conditions in several Branches of the Soldiers' Homes during the period when the canteen was maintained and the Soldiers' Home at Washington for Regulars without the canteen. Covering a period between 1900 and 1905 the total per cent of offenses of all kinds at the Washington Home without the canteen was 17½, while the total of offenses of all kinds at the several Branches of the Soldiers' Homes which maintained the canteen during this same period was 38.9 per cent. During the same period the average per cent of offenses charged with introducing intoxicating liquors into the Washington Home was one-half of 1 per cent; in the others which maintained a beer hall for the same period the average was 3.4 per cent. In the Washington Home without the canteen the average per cent of cases of drunkenness was 11.4, while in the other Homes for the same period with the beer hall the average was 17.8 per cent. In the Washington Home the per cent of absentees without leave during this period was 4.4, while in the other Homes with the canteen the per cent was 10.3. In the Washington Home the average ratio of deaths per thousand was 47.27; in the other Homes the average was 54.96.

Much is being made over the report of the governors of the various Soldiers' Homes showing an increase in the number of arrests for drunkenness since the canteen was abolished from these Homes. It is necessary, however, to understand the conditions under which these arrests are made. Take, for instance, the statement of Rev. J. W. West, assistant superintendent of the Virginia Anti-Saloon League, concerning the conditions in the Southern Branch at Hampton, Va. After investigation, he reports that during the existence of the canteen the men could go out from their quarters to the canteen and back again without coming under the notice of the officers in charge, and frequently men under the influence of liquor would be returned to their quarters by their comrades, and of course the record shows no arrests for drunkenness. Since the abolition of the canteen, when the men desire to drink they go outside and return in full view of the guards, who make arrests in every instance, so that while conditions are no worse, or even not so bad, the record would show a larger number of offenses for the reason above indicated.

Attention needs to be called to the report of A. J. Clark, governor of the Central Branch at Dayton, Ohio, in which, while making a showing in favor of the canteen, he admits that some of the men who have previously been in the habit of getting drunk are now keeping perfectly sober, and that it is generally admitted that the camp in general and most of the barracks are quieter and pleasanter for sober men than when the beer hall was in operation. While taking it for granted that many of those who have previously formed the appetite for drink will continue to get it if possible, for a while at least, yet a system that will create better order in the Home and in the barracks generally, and which is bound to create this condition more effectively in the future in proportion as the men get away from the habits of drink in the Home, ought not to be condemned or set aside hastily.

It needs to be recalled that the experiment of no canteen in the Homes has not yet been sufficiently tried to judge of the full beneficial effects upon these Homes. It may be said also that the policy of getting State legislation to remove outside saloons from the vicinity of the Home is being urged in most, if not all, the States in which these Homes are situated, and with the enactment of these laws, we believe that every argument for the return of the canteen to these Homes will have been removed.

Although opposed personally to the canteen, I shall vote for the amendment proposed by my colleague [Mr. PARSONS]. It is in form a local-option amendment, and I have always approved that principle. Possibly this is not a case strictly within the local-option principle, but I prefer to err on the side of consistency. If my colleague's amendment is defeated, I shall, with great pleasure, vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TIRRELL].

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, if I am recognized I would like to say a word or two. I am, and have always been, on the dry side of the whisky proposition, gentlemen. [Applause.] I have been so taught and have so voted at all times. I have voted the saloon out of the House and the Senate restaurants, and I shall vote to keep the law that way, and as a result we have a better attendance in this House and the Senate. I remember four or five years ago, Mr. Chairman, I read in the press statements about the Danville Home in substance that on a certain day—that is, on yesterday, we will say, the soldiers drew their money and a large number of them got drunk and raised a row and hurt each other and finally the peace officers of the city had to be called in to stop the row, and I think arrests were made. That was in the Danville Home. I do not know where the Danville Home is, but I do remember that. Now, Mr. Chairman, if a man lives in that Home and wants a drink and there is another man who does not want to drink and does not want to be run over by a drunken man and is run over by one who drinks, I want to know who has the greatest right to have this limitation put on here to prevent that?

That man who drinks trespasses upon the other man's physical rights as well as his peace of mind. This is a Home carried on by taxation. The Federal Government has the right to control these Homes. The Federal Government should control them, so as to prevent the strong man who may be addicted to drink from being drunk and trespassing upon the rights, the liberties of the man who possibly is younger and physically weaker, and wants his home peaceful and protected from such influences and interruptions. Now, the idea of the Government of the United States carrying on a bar in a Home—in anybody's home! If the soldier wants his bar at his door, then let him go, if he chooses, back to his old home, into some State that has no prohibitory laws. I am willing to vote just pension money and all the appropriations asked for to take care of the old soldiers honorably discharged, and I have done so, and will continue to do so, but, upon the other hand, I shall never vote to put or keep a bar in a Home that is created and maintained by the taxpayers of this country in order to protect the heroes of this country in their old age. [Applause.]

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, the amendment that I offered provides that if the governors of the Homes should decide that the canteen was desirable they none the less could not have it unless a majority of the inmates approved of having it. Last year I voted for the "no-canteen" amendment; but I have felt ever since that I made a mistake; that I was not justified in voting that way against the judgment of the managers of every one of the Homes practically. On the other hand, it seems to me that if a majority of the inmates, even if the managers think the canteen is desirable, think they are better off without a canteen they ought not to have it, and that is the reason I have offered this amendment.

I differ with the gentleman from Iowa as to the duty that we owe to these old soldiers. We have established Homes for Disabled Volunteers. We owe the duty of giving them the best care that we can, and it is a question, to my mind of what is the best care for the greatest number.

The evidence before the committee is such that, it seems to me, unless the managers are greatly mistaken, the soldiers en masse are much better off with the canteen than without it. If the managers are mistaken, then the inmates know it, and they will have a chance to say so under my amendment.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the gentleman think that we should arm the Homes with the power of letting some member go there and get drunk and assault his fellow-soldier? [Laughter.]

Mr. PARSONS. The question answers itself.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Of course it does. Make it easy to get whisky and assaults are liable to occur. It is hard enough to keep assaults down among sober men sometimes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FASSETT] is recognized for eight minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. FASSETT. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether I have the balance of the time of the other gentleman from New York [Mr. PARSONS] or of the gentleman in the gallery. I do not know what side of this question the latter had.

Mr. Chairman, eight minutes is not long enough, or ten minutes, or even twenty minutes, to thoroughly thrash out the merits or demerits of this proposition. I can not add to what I said a year ago, and I would not take from what I said a year ago. I want to speak to the merits of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARSONS], and it seems to me that my prohibition friends, my temperance friends, my personal-liberty friends, and all friends of local self-government, home rule, and State rule, must support the idea that local option should be granted to the inmates of Soldiers' Homes [applause], that there should go into those Homes the same privileges that exist for soldiers and civilians outside of those Homes.

I can not agree with my friend from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] that our duties to the old soldier are exhausted when we have deprived him of an opportunity to satisfy his appetite in the Home. We owe him not only a home, not alone fuel and light, not alone medical care; we owe him gratitude for a nation saved and a flag purified. [Applause.] We did not ask whether it was within the dignity of the United States Government that he should get whisky, with or without quinine, when he was fighting the battles of his country in a war that ended forty-three years ago. We take these men, the battle-scarred remnants of a strenuous time, and give them, not prisons, not disciplinary institutions, but Homes. The gentleman says that if they can not behave themselves "my way" in a Home, let them go out to the penitentiaries or county jails or the almshouses.

I say, if we owe any soldier a home, it is not alone the sober soldier; it is the soldier who most needs surveillance and protection, the soldier with all the infirmities of the habits contracted in youth gathering around him as he advances in age, that most needs our care.

It is unfortunate that any man should drink anywhere, and if I could have my way I would abolish the drinking and abuse of alcohol, and I would vote, if voting would do it, that alcohol as a beverage be swept off the face of the world. But we have to take human nature as we find it, and we have to discharge our duties according to our conscience and our knowledge of human nature as practical men, not as theorists. It is not a question of the United States being in the retail liquor-selling business. That is a ridiculous business to put the Government in. I sympathize with those gentlemen who think that it is not wise or nice for Uncle Sam to wear a barkeeper's apron. But I am willing to give soldiers in the Soldiers' Homes some of the privileges we ask for ourselves in our own homes. [Loud applause.]

Let them have a club, if they please, run by themselves and not by Uncle Sam. I would like to see them restrained from an improper use of their privileges. The men who have consecrated their lives to the care of these old soldiers tell you when you shut up the canteens in a Home, you open brothels and saloons out of the Home. If it could be arranged that there be no liquor sold within 5 miles of a Soldiers' Home, then we could more safely prevent its sale and use inside the Soldiers' Homes. As it now is, we practically drive these old men to unrestrained indulgence outside the Homes amid unrestricted temptations. I believe in the work of those men and women who are raising up an army for the promotion of prohibition and temperance throughout the United States. It is a grand thing. These devoted reformers are moving forward like an army with banners and accomplishing noble work. These aged men who have to look to the State or the nation for a home are men with fixed appetites and chronic failings. With increasing years their will power diminishes, but their willfulness increases. They remain human even if they grow infirm, and unnecessary restraint irks them. They are not helped to temperance by rules which permit no drink inside the Home and all drinks just outside.

I ask simply that we may exercise intelligent care and plain common sense in providing for this remnant of that grand army of the past. I am making no special plea for the soldier who gets drunk nor for the soldier who does not get drunk. I ask you to listen not to the over-earnest advocates of either intemperance or temperance, but to the declarations of the experienced men and women who are devoting their lives to the study of the needs of these men. I have no personal knowledge of any other Soldiers' Home except the Soldiers' and Sailors' Home at Bath, N. Y., and every trustee and every doctor, whether doctors of the souls or doctors of the bodies, say that since the Home shut out the canteen and outsiders opened up the brothel and the saloon the men have gone from bad to worse, and that if we can restore the canteen it will protect the soldiers from the evils of the saloons, restore them to their former condition in the Home, that it will be of benefit to the soldier and of use and protection to the community.

I advocate the reestablishment of the social club in the Home in the interest of the old soldier himself and in the name of temperance and good order. I am not speaking of the old soldier as he ought to be, nor as I want him to be, but as he is, as shown by experience. The great mass of them are of good habits. Some are weak. The weaker brethren need the most tender care. And it is not tender care to thrust these aged and infirm men out of the gates of our sheltering Homes into the hands of harpies and thugs, to bamboozle and rob and assault.

If we feel we must deny them access to alcoholic beverages, let us make the denial effective beyond the Home as well as inside.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I wish to read as part of my remarks the following message, which has just been handed me:

Methodist General Conference at Baltimore, representing 3,000,000 members, by unanimous standing vote to-day petitioned Congress to continue the exclusion of canteens for the sale of intoxicating liquors from all Branches of the National Soldiers' Homes.

WILBUR F. CRAFTS.

[Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I desire at the outset to resent the not infrequent, but, I am compelled to believe, unintentional aspersion cast upon the character of the survivors of the civil war. A young person sitting in the galleries during this discussion would get the impression from the advocates of the canteen that we all—and I am proud that I am one of them—were given to the use of intoxicating liquors. It is the glory of my later years, it is the pride of my children, and will be to the latest generation, that their ancestor served under the Stars and the Stripes in that great conflict; but I do not want them or anybody else to get the impression that I or my comrades were men who, as soldiers or as citizens generally, yielded to the immoderate use of intoxicating liquors.

Out of 100 men that went to the war in the company of which I was a member it is not possible to name 5 who drank to excess.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. FASSETT] says we should protect these old soldiers. That man needs protection most who is least able to protect himself. It is true there is a minority of veterans who indulge to excess. I am glad to say it is a small minority. I do not know of 2 per cent of the members of the post to which I belong in my home town who use intoxicating liquors immoderately.

I do not say that this low percentage is universal; I only speak from within the range of my knowledge. There is only a very small per cent in any of the Homes who are either grossly intemperate or immoral. Gentlemen, that minority in a large degree were carried there because they patronized too frequently the canteen in the town in which they had been living before they went to the Home. They call it a saloon there, but the rose smells just as sweet under one name as the other, and the results are just the same.

In this very bill we prohibit in the State Homes the sale of liquors, and you can not get national aid for a State Home without banishing the saloon. In the State Homes the saloons are out now, and they will be kept out.

Would you, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARSONS] would have us, put local option in the National Homes and impose absolute prohibition on the State Homes and the National Home in this District? What is fair for one is fair for another. These Homes are not built, as the gentleman from New Jersey would lead us to think, by the soldiers. They are not homes in which the occupants have a proprietary right. [Applause.]

The National Homes are built, furnished, and maintained by the Government. Every real need for the comfort of the veteran is supplied. Surely it is within the right of the Government to put such limitations upon the conduct of these Homes as is believed to be for the best interests of all. [Applause.]

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Chairman, I recall with no small degree of satisfaction that about six years ago I offered an amendment to a bill then under consideration in this House providing for the abolition of the sale of intoxicating liquors in this Capitol. It passed, notwithstanding the dire prophecies that were made, predicated upon its passage; and I do not believe that there is a Member now on this floor, matching conditions during the past three or four years with those that obtained before, who would vote to restore the sale of intoxicating liquors in this Capitol.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. LANDIS. I stated at that time, and I repeat it now, that if I had my way about it I would not permit intoxicating liquors to be sold upon any territory over which the Government has jurisdiction, neither would I permit its sale within 10 miles of any Army post or any Soldiers' Home. [Applause.]

I regret that this contest has been again precipitated. This question has been thrashed out on this floor on several occasions, and it strikes me that it would have been much better to have settled it this year in the committee by repeating in this bill the language of last year by which the sale of intoxicating liquors was prohibited in Soldiers' Homes.

I deem it appropriate, in this connection, and as an answer against the systematic campaign organized by the officials in charge of these Homes, to read a letter recently received from a veteran in the Home at Danville, Ill. For reasons best known to himself, and which may be inferred by Members of this House in view of the attitude assumed by the management of these Homes, he requests that his name be not made public. I will say, however, that I can vouch for his character and veracity. It is as follows:

NATIONAL MILITARY HOME, DANVILLE BRANCH,
Danville, Ill., April 27, 1908.

Hon. CHARLES B. LANDIS,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I recently read in one of the newspapers a quotation from you touching the "canteen" in Soldiers' Homes, and, having lived in this Branch of the Home, both while the "canteen" was here and since it was abolished, I heartily approve of your position in this matter. The absence of the "canteen" has wrought a great improvement in the good order and civil conduct of the veterans in the Home, and its return would be a misfortune to the great majority of the members who love peace, quiet, and decency. The plea on the part of some officers that the "canteen" serves to keep the drinking men from going to outside resorts and getting drunk on "bad whisky" is not true, as I can assure you from my own personal observation, covering several years' residence in the Home. It is an insult to the old soldiers, as a class, to say that they are such drinkers of intoxicating liquors that it is necessary to run a saloon in the Home in order to keep them from going to outside resorts.

When the "canteen" was here those members of the Home who were addicted to drink were daily under the influence of beer, causing them to be reckless of speech, profane, and often quarrelsome. Following the exit of the "canteen" there has come a marked improvement in the civil conduct of the men. Profane and obscene language have greatly decreased and a better and more friendly feeling between comrades is noticeable.

* * * * * * *

The profits of the "canteen" were immense, and as those handling and having charge of the same were not required to account to the Government for the same, it is reasonable to presume a motive other than the welfare of the men for the clamor being made for the restoration of the camp saloon. No private member of the Home was allowed to know anything about the expenditure of the proceeds or for what purpose they were applied.

This is the testimony of a plain soldier, one who is making his home with the Government in the Branch at Danville, Ill. And in this connection I would like to say that the Members of this House should not be deluded nor led away by the amendment such as has been offered by the gentleman from New York providing that this question be left to a vote of the inmates of these Homes.

I have knowledge of the influence exercised by the management of these Homes on occasions when elections are held. Soldiers in these Homes have the right to vote in primaries when the selection of delegates to county, State, and Congressional conventions are made, and I want to say that if the same tactics were pursued when the canteen proposition were at stake as have been followed on certain occasions when the selection of delegates was the chief subject of interest, there would be about as much chance to get an honest expression on the question as there would be to get an unbiased opinion of the right and virtue of free speech from the Czar of Russia. These men on such occasions are frequently threatened, bulldozed, and intimidated to a degree that is at once a scandal and an outrage and will sometime call for a Congressional investigation.

The officers in charge of these Homes are notoriously wedded to the canteen.

Such a thing as a fair vote could not be had in any Soldiers' Home in the United States. These Homes are organized against a fair vote on this question. Out on the Pacific slope within the past twelve months the inmates of that Home voluntarily entered upon such an election. They had cast about 500 votes when the governor of the Home compelled the electors to desist and refused to permit them to carry on that election. But when the votes were counted it was ascertained that out of 500 cast they stood 8 to 1 against the canteen. [Applause.] The officers of these Homes will not permit a vote of that kind to go on unless it is under their jurisdiction.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LANDIS. No, sir.

There are statistics and testimony and sentiment on both sides of this question, and the deeper we go into it from any one of these standpoints the more mystified we become as to the practical effect of this amendment. It seems to me that the whole thing resolves itself into the question as to whether or not this Congress will recognize the progress that has been made in the control and treatment of the beer and whisky business or will, by giving governmental sanction to the traffic, strengthen and dignify it.

The only defense that is made in justification of the sale of intoxicants in the canteen in the Soldiers' Home that has any force with me, is that embodied in the statement that the habits of these old soldiers have become fixed, that they must have their stimulants, and if they can not get them in the Home they will get them outside of the Home. It is contended that if they can get these stimulants in the Home they will indulge to a moderate degree; but if it is made necessary for them to go outside the Home, then they give themselves up to excesses which are disgraceful and disgusting in the extreme, and make them easy prey for thugs and robbers. I have always contended that nine times out of ten the practice of drinking whisky is a habit. [Applause.] And I believe that nine times out of ten the habit can be broken in old age, even though it may have been formed in young manhood. I recall an aged acquaintance whose habit it was to indulge in a daily spree. That habit was broken by keeping from him the money with which he purchased Angostura bitters. In the early days it was the habit to serve whisky in the harvest field, and entire communities contended that men could not bind wheat without it. That habit has been broken, and the old practice is now unheard of. Had this habit plea been permitted to control, the whisky-drinking engineer would never have been taken off the locomotive, nor the whisky-drinking pilot off the ship. This same specious plea would have rendered it absolutely impossible to establish prohibition in any community in the United States. It is a fictitious contention and an argument without substance. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I have been shocked beyond measure by the statements that have been made by the advocates of the sale of intoxicants in the canteen relative to the conduct of soldiers on the outside when it has been impossible for them to indulge their appetite in a saloon in the Home. Those who profess the greatest interest in these soldiers, those who pretend to be the most solicitous for their happiness and welfare have described their conduct not only as disgraceful and indecent, but beastly beyond description. We have been told that after the quarterly pension payments are made the highways between the doggeries in the cities and these Homes are lined by drunken veterans, helpless in their inebriety, and this performance is practiced quarter after quarter and year after year. I would say to this House that my father was a Union soldier. He entered the Army at the outbreak of the war and remained with his regiment until he was shot out. I do not believe any man has a warmer, more reverential affection for the splendid Army that suppressed the rebellion than I. But I contend there are limits in conduct beyond which even the Union soldier should not be permitted to go. [Applause.]

After the war was over, in recognition of the debt we owed him we made liberal provision for pensions, not only for him, but for his widow and children. We have provided Homes—Territorial, State, and National—and have made good the proud boast that necessity compels no man who wore the blue to take refuge in his old age in an almshouse. We have furnished these Homes with every comfort—aye, with luxury. Having done all this, is there not something we have a right to require of the soldier? I say there is. What is it? Good conduct, decent deportment. [Applause.] He owes that to the country that cares for him in his old age. He owes that to the comrades that marched with him on the field of battle, some of whom never returned. He owes it to the flag of his country which he so valiantly defended. He owes that to the boys and girls, to the young men and young women of the present day, who have read of his deeds of valor. In this instance the nation is the host, and it dispenses its hospitality through these Homes, and if the soldier abuses this hospitality and by his conduct disgraces his host he should be made to suffer for it; he should be separated from the Home. I deny that the typical Union soldier, who by reason of misfortune has been led to take up his residence in a Soldiers' Home, is a drunkard. I contend that rules and regulations could be prescribed and enforced that would reduce to a minimum cases of debauchery such as have been described. An inmate of a Soldiers' Home who wastes in drink the pension money he receives from his Government should have that pension withheld. [Applause.]

This money is given to him by his Government to assist him, not to injure him. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I believe that this entire proposition is born of the desire of the men who manufacture beer to find a market for it. It is a notorious fact that one-half of the saloons of the country are owned by the brewers, their policy being to force the saloon into every community where there is the slightest chance to establish it. The gentleman from Massachusetts says that he resents any attempt to force the canteen out of these Soldiers' Homes. I would say, in answer to the gentleman from Massachusetts, that we are standing here this afternoon resenting the attempts of the brewers of this country to force the canteen into the Soldiers' Homes. [Applause.]

I resent the insolence with which the brewers and whisky men attempt to force their products upon people and into communities where instinct tells us and common sense should tell them it has no business. [Applause.] To their arrogance and lack of judgment is due the overwhelming sentiment against the saloon which we must recognize in this country to-day. They invited it. They challenged it. They have dared it to conflict in open battle. They have invited and challenged it by attempting to dictate politics, local, State, and national, in every part of the land. They have invited and challenged it by studied, open, willful, deliberate violation of the law. Their conduct has been impudent, brazen, and defiant. They have sown the wind and they will have no one to blame but themselves if they reap the whirlwind in all its fury.

I say, and I say it deliberately, that if they continue their present aggressive policy I expect to live to see the day when there will not be a single saloon in this entire Republic outside the corporation lines of the large cities. [Loud applause.] Nearly 40,000,000 of our people are to-day living in dry territory.

Mr. Chairman, I see in the daily print that a grant has been secured to establish a bar in the new Union Station, that splendid edifice which would never have been erected but for the assistance voted by the American Congress. This exemplifies the shortsightedness of these gentlemen who call themselves friends of personal liberty. They should be wise enough to know that that grant will be of short duration. [Applause.] No District appropriation bill will ever again pass this House that does not carry a provision sounding the death knell to that bar that is to be established at the gateway to this splendid capital city. I would utter a word of warning to these friends of personal liberty. I would warn them that that very grant is likely to precipitate a contest on this floor, under this dome, that will not only prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in the new Union Station, but close forever every saloon within the confines of the District of Columbia. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I sincerely trust that this amendment will pass by such an overwhelming majority as will serve notice upon the brewers of this Republic that they can never hope for their business to receive the solemn sanction of the American Congress. [Loud applause.]

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TIRRELL] because of the facts disclosed to the Committee on Appropriations as the result of our experience with the canteen in the Soldiers' Homes. That testimony shows conclusively that the amendment is in the interest of intemperance and not in the interest of temperance; in the interest of the saloons, not in the interest of the soldiers. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, we are not dealing with a question that involves the conduct of young men; we are not dealing with a question that involves the conduct of men whose habits have not been formed. We are not dealing with the habits of men generally; we are dealing with a select few, whose average age is almost 70 years, and who, by reason of their circumstances, are obliged to accept the hospitality of the Government of the United States in their declining years. It is in behalf of these men, the men through whose valor and through whose heroism the Starry Banner of Liberty has been preserved to us and to our children unsoiled by dishonor and unsevered by disunion that I plead here to-day. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the report of the Board of Managers of our Federal Homes shows that the experience in these Homes without the canteen is that acute alcoholism in the National Soldiers' Homes has increased since the abolition of the canteen from 13 to 90 per cent. That, Mr. Chairman, is an indisputable fact, and one that should arrest our attention and prompt us to do our duty as we see it and our duty to these old warriors to whom we are indebted for a united and a prosperous country. [Applause.] At the Togus Home, in Maine, a prohibition State, the increase of intemperance has been 90 per cent since the canteen has been taken out of the Home, and the lowest increase was in the Pacific Home, California, 13 per cent. In the Home in California, according to the report of the surgeon, six old soldiers died within the first seven months after the canteen was abolished of acute alcoholism, while during the preceding seven months there was not a single death from that cause.

I say, therefore, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts is not in the interest of temperance. It is in the interest of intemperance, as shown by the record and by experience during the last year in our Federal Homes.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS] has a Home in his State, and I want to read a short editorial giving a description of the conditions now in Marion, Ind. The editorial is from the News-Tribune, of Marion, Ind., of the date of Thursday, February 27, 1908. It, and the letter of General Steele transmitting it, is as follows:

MARION BRANCH,
NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS,
National Military Home, Indiana, February 27, 1908.

Hon. J. A. TAWNEY,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. TAWNEY: I mail you, under separate cover, copy of the News-Tribune, published in this city, with marked editorial on the subject of the canteen. It is absolutely uninspired by any of the officers of the Home or by any member, further than is suggested in the article itself.

Very respectfully,
GEO. W. STEELE,
Governor.

[Editorial in News-Tribune, Marion, Ind., Thursday, February 27, 1908.]

VALUE OF THE CANTEEN.

"It has been worse than usual this time," said a Marion patrolman last night, as he helped the last of a squad of veterans on the last Home car. "I don't know why, but it seems to me that the veterans have invested more money than usual in bad liquor this pension time."

To the resident of Marion the sight of a veteran in the uniform under the influence of liquor is common about pension day. Unable, since Congress, in its infinite wisdom, abolished the canteen, to obtain stimulants at the Home, these unfortunate slaves to an appetite of long ago make the rounds of the saloons of the city, store away a bottle, and are found upon the streets almost unable to navigate. The police are lenient, and it is only when the victim becomes unruly that he is jailed.

But there are few more disgusting sights in Marion than the loading of the last Home car just after pension day at the Home.

Censure for this state of affairs can not be placed upon the Home officers, and only in a measure upon the veterans themselves. With the canteen they were seldom found in their cups. With liquor forbidden them, they frequently overindulge. Practice has shown the canteen to be most desirable, and the records of the Marion police will show it was a potent factor in the reduction of the number of arrests for intoxication.

I hope, Mr. Chairman, in the interest of the old soldiers, the inmates of these National Homes, the amendment will not be agreed to. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, with the consent of the committee, I will print that part of the report of the Managers of the Soldiers' Homes that deals with the actual experience and results of the abolition of the canteen, where only a mild beer has been sold.

CANTEEN IN SOLDIERS' HOMES—CANTEEN OR BEER HALL (AGAIN).

The CHAIRMAN. As to the proviso, "That no part of this appropriation shall be apportioned to any National Home for Disabled Volunteers that maintains a bar or canteen where intoxicating liquors are sold;" do you recommend that that proviso be stricken out?

Major HARRIS. We do; yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The reason for your recommending the striking out of this proviso is given in your annual report, is it?

Major HARRIS. Yes, sir. Here is what the Board says in that report [reads]:

"In compliance with the act of Congress approved June 30, 1906, the sale of beer to members of the Home was discontinued on the 4th of March, 1907.

"The circumstances that influenced the Board of Managers to authorize this practice at the Branch Homes and the opinions of officers of the Home as to its effect upon sobriety and good order were fully explained in the last annual report of the Board.

"A period of eight months has now elapsed since the closing of the beer halls, during which time the general policy as to administration and discipline has not been otherwise changed. Reports from governors of all Branches of the Home show that 1,576 more offenses have been committed by members during this period than during the same eight months of the previous fiscal year, when the beer halls were in operation, an increase of 28.02 per cent. Practically all of these offenses were due to intemperance.

"The number of cases of acute alcoholism treated in the hospitals during this period has increased. The smallest increase reported was 13 per cent, at the Pacific Branch, and the largest, 91 per cent, at the Eastern Branch, in Maine.

"The opinion of the Board, as stated in its last annual report, that the discontinuance of the sale of beer would be a distinct detriment to the moral and physical interests of the members of the Home, appears to be fully sustained by the deplorable results shown by the above figures, and it is strongly recommended and urged that the prohibition against the sale of beer, which was attached as a provision to the appropriation for the support of the Home for the current fiscal year, be not renewed."

THE NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS,
New York, N. Y., April 3, 1908.

Hon. JAMES A. TAWNEY,

CANTEEN IN THE HOMES (AGAIN).

NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS,
New York, N. Y., January 6, 1908.

Hon. JAMES A. TAWNEY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. TAWNEY: I forward herewith reports from the governors of the various branches of the National Home relative to the effect of the abolition of the beer hall, as requested by you. These letters have been sent through this office, as is customary with reports of this kind.

Sincerely, yours,

J. W. WADSWORTH,
President Board of Managers.

CENTRAL BRANCH,
NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS,
December 23, 1907.

Hon. JAMES A. TAWNEY,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of yours of 14th instant, requesting information as to the effect on this Branch of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers of the closing of the beer hall here on March 4 last, and in reply to state as follows: On the 2d of last month, in reply to a request from the president of the Board of Managers, National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, a statement was made showing the effect at this Home of the closing of our beer hall, and I have thought it best to send you a copy of said statement, marked "Exhibit A," adding such information as you request, which is not contained therein. Instead of giving the number of arrests for "drunkenness," as you request, I am giving the total number of arrests, as the original cause of almost all of the offenses against the regulations of the Home, for which members are placed under arrest, is drinking too much, but in a large number of cases this is not the "charge," as in case of absence without leave, etc.; therefore, to give only the arrests for drunkenness would not furnish the desired information. The inclosed statement, marked "Exhibit B," shows the number of arrests, by months, in 1906 and 1907. So far as known no saloons or other bad resorts have been established in the vicinity of the Home since the closing of the beer hall, this being prevented by the State "mile and a half limit law," which has been in force for many years.

In conclusion, permit me to say that during my connection with this Home, first as treasurer and then as governor, covering a period of six years, I have been a careful observer of conditions existing here, and, as stated in my reply to the president of the board, I feel that on the whole the effect of the closing of the beer hall has been more detrimental than beneficial to the Home.

Very respectfully,

A. J. CLARK, Governor.

Through Maj. James W. Wadsworth, President Board of Managers National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

Maj. JAMES W. WADSWORTH,
President Board of Managers National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, New York, N. Y.

SIR: Referring to letter of September 9, 1907, from the president's office, requesting a report showing the effect, if any, on the discipline and good order of the Home of the abolition of the beer hall on March 4 last, I have the honor to report as follows:

Since the closing of the beer hall there has been a larger increase in the number of cases which come before the governor's court. From the 1st of March to the 31st of October, 1906, with an average present of 4,375, there were 1,717 cases, while during the same period in 1907, with an average present of 4,150, there were 2,242 cases. The number of cases of whisky drunkenness, before unfortunately large, has greatly increased since the closing of the beer hall, and the same can be said of the amount of whisky brought into the Home by members for personal use or for sale to other members. The difficulty of keeping certain member employees in condition to perform their duties has increased, as some of those who were contented, as a rule, with beer at the beer hall, now go out to get stimulants and frequently return drunk and come before the governor's court or remain overtime and lose their places for being absent without leave. In some cases it is claimed that members who were accustomed to drink moderately at the beer hall do not go out and that their health is impaired for lack of their usual stimulant. On the other hand, it is claimed that since the closing of the beer hall some men who could not stand the temptation of a beer hall in the Home, but would either drink too much at the beer hall or start on beer and then go out and get drunk, are now keeping perfectly sober. It seems to be very generally admitted that the camp in general and most of the barracks are quieter and pleasanter for sober men than when the beer hall was in operation, as in spite of the precautions exercised some men who drank too much at beer hall, but did not show the effects till after reaching barracks, would make it very unpleasant for others in barracks, while under existing conditions most of these men in coming into the Home from the outside are captured by the guards and taken to the guardhouse, and do not get into the barracks to trouble others. It should be stated that the unfortunate increase in the number of offenders against the rules of the Home since March 4 last can not be attributed entirely to the closing of the beer hall. The abolition (with the approval of the board) of the practice of close confinement of certain weak or troublesome members, who would frequently jump the fence, gives this class of men an opportunity to get drunk, which I am sorry to say some have taken advantage of. The large number of members (more than 1,200 up to the September quarterly payment) who have had increase of pension under the new law has brought more money into the hands of members than ever before, thus increasing temptation; and the inability to secure reduced-rate transportation has kept at the Home many who have been in the habit of going on short leaves occasionally, and presented special temptation to spend their money in unfortunate ways near the Home. The number of arrests of members of the Home in Dayton has largely increased since the beer hall closed, and while debauchery and murder of the days before the beer hall was started have not been repeated, as was feared, the members are much older now and the stuff which they drink outside is of such a character, as a rule, that the number of cases of alcoholism and alcoholic gastritis treated in Home hospital has increased greatly, there being 266 cases in 1907 from March 1 to October 31, while with the larger membership in 1906 the number was only 102. The foregoing is a statement of the situation as the governor sees it at this Branch Home, and while there are undoubtedly two sides to the question, he feels that on the whole the effect of closing the beer hall has proved more detrimental than beneficial to the Branch.

Very respectfully,

A. J. CLARK, Governor.

NORTHWESTERN BRANCH,
NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS,
Milwaukee, Wis., January 2, 1908.

Hon. J. A. TAWNEY,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

(Through Maj. James W. Wadsworth, President Board of Managers, National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.)

SIR: In response to your letter of December 14, 1907, requesting information regarding the effect of the abolishment of the canteen at this Home, I have the honor to state that I have been governor of this Home for the past sixteen years, and during all that period until the closing of the canteen March 4, 1907, when the law took effect, the canteen was successfully conducted in the interest and for the benefit of its members; that is, all profits from the sale of beer, which was strictly confined to the members, were expended solely for them in the way of amusements, theatrical entertainments, maintenance of the library, band, card and billiard rooms, and the church choirs.

The discipline of the Home was reasonably good; as good, in fact, as could reasonably be expected from a membership of over 2,000 men of all shades and conditions of life—averaging nearly 70 years of age—and a majority of whom have been accustomed to the use of a stimulant the greater part of their lives.

They still want it and will have it; and from my experience I am fully convinced that it is much better for them to be able to obtain it at home, where they can be kept in reasonable control, than to be obliged to go to the outlying saloons and dives surrounding us. That we are surrounded is evidenced by the fact that there are fifty-six saloons now in full operation within one-half mile of the Home grounds, seven of which have been built since the closing of the canteen.

The situation is one of decided discomfort to many of the lame and blind members, who have been so accustomed to their mild stimulants practically ever since the close of the war that now, in their old age and infirm health, they are compelled to go quite a long distance, and outside of the Home grounds, to obtain what they want.

Many of them were regular patrons of the beer hall (canteen), moderate in their habits, and made little or no trouble. Now, when they leave the grounds, many of them frequently remain out for the whole day, and often for the whole night also, and return in a lamentable condition, injurious to themselves and uncomfortable for their comrades.

They can not be confined to the limits of the Home grounds all the time. This is intended to be a home for dependent old soldiers, and as such they must necessarily be given a reasonable amount of liberty, or, in other words, not restrained more than actually necessary for their comfort and safety. Many of them, being in a partially senile condition, it is necessary to guard them from outside influences as much as possible and have the institution still retain its designation of a home and not a prison.

The following comparative statements show the results of the closing of the canteen. These figures have been taken from the offenders' docket, and show only those offenses which were for or include drunkenness. There were a number of other offenses committed, many of which might properly be charged to the effect of the drink habit, but not being included in the charges proper they have been omitted.

Arrests for entire year 1907, 710.

The above statement appears to show conclusively that the closing of the canteen for the past ten months has not proven beneficial to the Home or its members. The number of arrests for drunkenness and the amount of intoxicating liquors brought into camp have very materially increased. The discipline of the Home, however, has been maintained, but it has required rather more stringent measures to do so.

The deprivation of the privileges of a canteen is an absolute discomfort to very many members and the moral effect the very reverse of good; and if the good people who seem to be desirous of adding to the comfort of the members of the Homes will give a little more thought to the age, condition, and causes which have brought these men together to be cared for by the Government, and to the fact that they seem to have united with the saloon keepers to force these old men to patronize the saloons outside instead of being allowed to obtain a reasonable quantity of stimulants in the way of beer at their own Home, perhaps they may be convinced that their efforts have been misdirected—to the injury and not to the benefit of the old soldiers.

Respectfully,

CORNELIUS WHEELER, Governor.
EASTERN BRANCH,

NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS,
January 6, 1908.

Hon. JAMES A. TAWNEY, M. C.,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: In reply to your communication of the 14th instant, asking for a brief statement of my experience as governor of this Branch of the National Home, with the canteen and without it, I have the honor to give below for your information a detailed statement of the number of offenses committed by the members of this Branch during the entire year 1906; from March 4, 1906, to December 1, 1906; from March 4, 1907, to December 1, 1907, as shown by the offenders' docket record:

Offense.	January 1 to December 31, 1906.	March 4 to December 1, 1906.	March 4 to December 1, 1907.
Penal offenses	3	2	1
Bringing intoxicating liquor within limits of Branch	96	79	99
Drunkenness on duty	9	7	4
Absence without leave while under sentence	17	15	28
Absence without leave	183	150	217
Drunkenness	338	262	302
Disorderly conduct	8	6	6
Other misconduct	22	14	13
	676	535	670

It will be noted that the number of trials, both for absence without leave and for drunkenness, during the period from March 4 to December 1, 1907, is greater than the number of trials for the same offenses during the period from March 4 to December 1, 1906. An examination of the record of the trials for absence without leave, in individual cases, discloses the fact that, in very many instances, the absence without leave is the result of a debauch in some brothel or dive in the vicinity of the Branch, or in the neighboring cities, where the absentee is often found in jail or to have remained away until at least partially sober, in order to avoid trial for drunkenness, preferring to be convicted of the less serious offense of absence without leave. The most significant fact, however, in connection with the closing of the beer hall is its effect upon the health of the members. That one such debauch far more seriously affects the health of the veteran than a continued moderate use of beer is shown by an examination of the hospital records, which show that the percentage of cases of acute alcoholism to the whole number treated during the period from March 4, 1906, to November 1, 1906, was 13.1, while the percentage from March 4, 1907, to November 1, 1907, was 24.6.

The difficulties of maintaining proper discipline at the Branch have been largely increased since the abolition of the beer hall. The number of saloons and other resorts which have been established in the vicinity of the Home, since and as a result of the anticanteen provision of the appropriation act, can not be positively stated, because, this being a prohibition State, all such places attempt to work secretly. Observation would indicate, however, that the number has more than doubled, and that all of them are far more prosperous. There are now places in the vicinity of the Home to which the members resort in large numbers, and to all appearances for no other purpose than to obtain intoxicating liquor. This liquor, sold in spite of the prohibitory law of the State, is of the vilest character, and its injurious effects upon those who drink it can hardly be overestimated. Pocket peddlers are numerous, and the State authorities seem to be utterly unable to suppress them. Some of them have become so bold as to attempt to ply their nefarious trade within the limits of the reservation.

It will be understood, of course, in speaking of the number of arrests for drunkenness, as shown above, that discipline at the Branch is intended to be as mild as is consistent with the preservation of good order, and that arrests for drunkenness are only made when the member is in such condition that restraint is necessary in order to prevent his disturbing the peace and comfort of his comrades.

It is earnestly to be hoped that success may attend the efforts to secure the restoration of the beer hall to the Soldiers' Home. Near-at-hand and every-day observation of the Home, both before and since the abolition of the beer hall, conclusively demonstrates that its closing at the Home is a step backward in the cause of temperance and an injury to the best interests, happiness, and welfare of the veterans who are the wards of the Government.

Yours, very respectfully, JOHN T. RICHARDS, Governor.

SOUTHERN BRANCH,
NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS,
January 6, 1908.

Hon. J. A. TAWNEY,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

(Through the president of the Board of Managers National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.)

DEAR SIR: In reply to your letter of the 14th ultimo, with reference to the results following the abolition of the canteen at this Branch, I desire to say that the records show as follows:

Number of arrests from drunkenness or causes resulting therefrom from March 4, 1906, to December 1, 1906 730
Cases of alcoholism treated in the hospital for the same period 191
March 4, 1907, to December 1, 1907, arrests 1,261
Cases of alcoholism in hospital 320
Total number of arrests incident to drunkenness from January 1, 1906, to December 31, 1906 1,407
Cases in the hospital, same cause 274
On March 31, 1906, the average present was 2,698
On December 1, 1907 2,242

There was a large increase in number of arrests incident to drink after the canteen was closed, while at the same time the membership was decreased by several hundred. Had the membership remained the same doubtless the figures would be greater, showing the results from drink. There is only one opinion among the officers of the Branch having the welfare of the members at heart as to the resulting effect of the abolishment of the canteen.

Without exception, we think it results in great injury to the members. These members in their old age need great care and kindness and should often be treated much as a parent treats a child.

When we had the canteen this was done with good results. Large numbers of the members at that time were fully satisfied to take pure beer of less than 3 per cent alcohol, taken in peace and comfort. The canteen was conducted under strict rules, all tending to the good of the members. Since its abolishment the Branch officers have largely been helpless in controlling the appetites of the members, many of whom acquired the drink habit years ago, and it must not be expected that men in advanced life, with confirmed habits, can be easily persuaded to change them. Such men will drink. If mild drinks are not supplied they will buy strong ones, and with the temptations such as they receive in saloons, are unable to restrain themselves. It is generally believed by the surgeons and others that whiskies of such inferior quality, largely containing wood alcohol, are sold to members, which frequently results in death.

Could those who brought about the abolishment of the canteen visit and remain at the Branch for some time, it is believed that they would be convinced that their actions had been injurious to the members of the Home. These members, who take equal pride with other Americans in the magnitude, wealth, and power of our country, feel that, had not the victories from 1861 to 1865 been won by them, there would be no united country to boast of. They also feel that they should be entitled to the small privilege of drinking in comfort mild beverages at the Branch, under proper rules, rather than be compelled to go outside and be the victims in their old age and helpless condition of such persons as compose the saloon element. At these saloons their money is all that is wanted, and in many cases when it can not otherwise be obtained, they are drugged and robbed. The number of saloons in the small town adjoining the Branch remains about the same as before March 4, 1907, but this number is quite large, twenty-eight. Of these, twelve are within two squares from the corner of the street near the Home entrance, and not much room for any more.

Congress should do its part to protect the members under such circumstances. The officers of the Branch almost without exception are strict abstainers from drink, but it is their unanimous and firm conviction that the best interests of the Branch suggests the restoration of the canteen. The surgeon states that after eleven years' experience he believes the canteen to be an aid in the maintenance of discipline and the health of the members. Both the Protestant and Catholic chaplains are heartily in favor of the canteen being restored.

Respectfully, yours,

T. T. KNOX, Governor.

Chairman House Committee on Appropriations,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of December 14, 1907, requesting a brief statement of my experience as governor of this Home, with the canteen and without it, and asking for certain statistics relating to the subject.

Speaking generally, I can say that the canteen had a strong influence for temperance and sobriety among members of the Home. The regulations governing its operation prevented excessive drinking. The only beverage sold was beer, and that of the most wholesome quality. This satisfied the appetites of a large number of old men who had been accustomed to drink beer or other intoxicating beverages all their lives. The regulations as to sale absolutely prevented drunkenness, attendants being constantly in charge for the purpose of cautioning men who showed any tendency toward excess.

Since the abolition of the canteen these old men, not being at their advanced age able to change their life habits, were obliged to go outside the Home for their drinks. In doing this they frequently drank whisky, and that of a bad quality, instead of beer.

The sale of intoxicating liquors in the State of Kansas is prohibited by the constitution and laws, and sellers are compelled to conduct their sales secretly. The risk being considerable, and whisky less bulky and more profitable than beer, it has resulted that the old men can obtain whisky easier than beer. It has come about, therefore, that the old men accustomed to drink beer have quickly become intoxicated by drinking vile whisky and have come into the Home in increased numbers in that condition, frequently bringing in with them bottles of whisky and other drinks. This in turn has resulted in an unusual amount of disorderly conduct, which has compelled the Home authorities to give more frequent penalties for offenses and to considerably increase the number of expulsions for serious and continued ill conduct.

My observation is also that this outside drinking and drinking whisky brought into the Home has been much more injurious to the health of men than the moderate drinking of beer in the canteen.

The number of dives in the vicinity of the Home has increased, but as the business is conducted secretly and in odd and unknown places it is difficult to say how large this increase has been.

The following table shows the number of arrests for drunkenness in this Home from March 4, 1906, to December 1, 1906, during which time the canteen was in operation, and for the corresponding period March 4, 1907, to December 1, 1907, during which time the canteen was not in operation. The table also shows the average number of members present in the Home for each of those periods and the percentage of such arrests to the average number of members present for each period.

RECAPITULATION.

The percentage of arrests for drunkenness for the nine months with the canteen is 0.167
The percentage of arrests for drunkenness for the corresponding nine months without canteen ..... .253
Increased percentage since abolishment of canteen ..... .086

It therefore appears that such arrests have increased 51 per cent since abolishment of the canteen. This increase would doubless have been greater, except for the fact that coincident with the abolishment of the canteen the State authorities inaugurated an energetic campaign to enforce the prohibitory laws in Leavenworth and vicinity. This has necessitated hunting up the whisky dives in the new and secret locations to which they were driven, and in that way made it for a time more difficult for men to find their supplies.

In accordance with your request I beg to state that the total arrests for drunkenness for the calendar year 1906, during which time the canteen was in operation, was 589, as against 590 for the nine months stated during which time the canteen was closed, and during which time the average membership present was much lower than for 1906.

Very respectfully,

S. G. COOKE, Governor.

DEAR SIR: Complying with your request for information regarding the effects of abolishing the canteen at this Branch, I have the honor to submit the following:

The effects have been disastrous. Habitual users of stimulants for forty-odd years will not change the habit for any act of Congress, especially those who honestly believe that moderate stimulation is beneficial at their age.

Here State law prohibits the sale of intoxicants within a mile and a half of Home boundaries; but the ingenuity of illicit venders often baffles the combined efforts of the Home and county authorities to enforce the laws. The results of its continued violation can not be more clearly stated than by our surgeon in a recent report:

"There has been an increase of a fraction over 13 per cent in the number of cases of alcoholism treated in the hospital in comparison to the same period of last year. The cases have been of greater severity, there having been six deaths resulting, whereas there were none for the same period last year. Three men fell over the cliff at Santa Monica while drunk, one of these resulting in death, the others in severe bruises only. The ambulance has been called into requisition for bringing in drunks and those injured while drunk outside the Home more often than ever before. This was especially noted after last pension payment, September 16, 1907.

"Of these cases some were brought to the hospital, some to the guardhouse, some bruised and injured, claiming they were beaten and robbed.

"Whisky has been smuggled into the barracks and even into the hospital. Empty whisky bottles used to be found occasionally in these places, but on my last sanitary inspection (the latter part of September) I found hidden away in the dark corners and thrown into the waste cans a large number of empty whisky bottles, and found four one morning in one waste can at the hospital."

The beer hall (canteen), where no other stimulant than mild, pure beer was supplied, while it was in operation under the salutary regulations of the board of managers afforded temperate stimulation to members who from their belief and habit required it, but in no case did it afford means of intoxication. All who were reported drunk during the operation of the beer hall procured their intoxicants from outside the Home, as has been more extensively done since the beer hall was closed.

All of the profit on beer went into the post fund, which provides free amusements for members, as library, dramatic and musical entertainments, billiard halls, etc. All these are now much reduced, and in consequence many members seek other amusements in the "boot-legger's" bottle.

The following tables show the increase of intemperance at this Branch during the period from March 4 to October 31, 1907, over that for the corresponding period of the preceding year:

Date.	Average number present.		Total convicted in governor's court of drunkenness.
	1906.	1907.	1906.	1907.
March	2,123	2,252	40	61
April	2,059	2,143	13	26
May	2,074	2,112	20	19
June	2,023	2,075	23	50
July	1,981	2,019	31	26
August	2,073	2,088	18	24
September	2,063	2,104	21	70
October	2,042	2,120	30	38
Total			196	314

March, June, and September were the months of pension payments during both periods. Each of those months in the last period show nearly double the number of convictions over the first period, and the totals show a similar result.

Very respectfully,

(Through Maj. James W. Wadsworth, President Board of Managers, National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.)

DEAR SIR: In reply to yours of December 14 with reference to the effect of the abolition of the canteen upon discipline in the Home, I have the honor to report that the canteen was established at this Home on January 9, 1906, and by operation of law was discontinued on March 3, 1907, no canteen having been in operation before or since the time mentioned. It seemed to me that unusual effort was made on the part of dive keepers to render the canteen unpopular. Credit, I am informed, was extended to many members of the Home who had not before been so favored. Bottle houses were especially active in this direction, with a view to members debauching themselves by overindulgence, at a nominal profit as compared with the traffic indulged in by a great many persons in and about what is known as the "Home Corner."

I do not consider that the statistics inclosed are entirely fair to the Home, in that we had the above trouble to contend with until within a comparatively short time before the law abolishing the canteen became operative, when the beneficial effects of the canteen became very apparent, not only in the good order of the Home, but on account of members having money to their credit who had not before been so fortunate, and more especially in the general contentment that prevailed.

Until very recently the unlawful traffic by druggists, saloon keepers, and dive keepers had been indulged in, so that there was very little trouble for members to become customers of the illegal traffic. By illegal traffic I mean that liquor was sold within the mile limit of the Home, which by law is prohibited, and without license, and to be drunk upon the premises or not upon the premises as the purchaser preferred. While this traffic has not prevailed so openly within the last few weeks as it has before, it is still indulged in, and there are a great many more empty whisky bottles found scattered over the Home grounds now than is usual. Boot leggers or bottle-house keepers are only occasionally apprehended, notwithstanding, I believe, that the governor of the State, through his power, aided by police commissioners of his own appointment, is really trying to prevent the traffic.

Although I have not gone off the Home grounds, nor permitted members of the Home guard force to do so excepting where they have been clothed with police power, I have been made the personal object of assault; wire fences have been cut on a farm that I happen to own; a barn burned, and a suit for damages in the sum of $5,000 is now pending in the supreme court of the State, on appeal from this county. The question of jurisdiction being raised, the judge of our circuit court decided that I had committed no offense; that my act was within the law as governor of this Home. The suit was on account of one James Rowan claiming that I had injured his restaurant business to the extent above stated by issuing an order forbidding members of the Home to visit his resort, where he flagrantly violated the law. After securing police power for certain members of the Home, they were stationed on premises adjoining or near to Rowan's place to see that the order was obeyed, Rowan having constructed a high, tight, board fence for the purpose of shielding members who chose to be his customers, although he had made no pretense, I am informed, and would be able to prove, I think, of running a restaurant.

That the canteen is of advantage to the Home I am absolutely certain, and I believe that any person who desires to be fair, who will investigate the matter, will so determine.

One of the active persons, Humphrey by name, was very busy in his efforts to drive out the canteen (I presume the committee knows of him), and in a letter to Hon. George B. Lockwood, now secretary to Senator FAIRBANKS, among other things stated that he "had the honor to have his picture taken with one of the saloon keepers at the Home Corner," a man engaged in illegal traffic. He did not call upon me or other officers of the Home, so far as I am aware, nor, so far as I can learn or believe, did not undertake to obtain information showing the advantages of the canteen to the members of the Home.

In complance with your request I hand you herewith comparative statement showing the number of arrests on account of drunkenness, including bringing in liquor, from March 4, 1906, to December 1, 1906, and from March 4, 1907, to December 1, 1907; also the total number of arrests on account of drunkenness for the year ending December 31, 1906, and for the year ending December 31, 1907.

DANVILLE BRANCH,
NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS,
National Home, Danville, Ill., January 3, 1907.

Hon. J. A. TAWNEY,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Answering your favor of December 14, I have the honor to state that I have furnished the president of the Board of Managers, National Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, a complete statement of the workings of the canteen and the noncanteen at this Branch of the Home from March 1 to November 1, 1906, and for the same period in 1907, which will appear in the annual report of the Board of Managers. The month of November in these two years shows nothing that would throw light upon this subject at this Branch. In addition to the facts shown there and answering you further, I would state that the number of arrests for drunkeness for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1906, was 237. Also 196 were arrested for bringing liquor into camp.

There have been no saloons or resorts established in the neighborhood of this Branch of the Home, the laws of Illinois prohibiting the sale of liquors anywhere within 1 1/10 miles of a National Home.

The facts related in my communication to the president of the Board of Managers seem to me to be of a character to convince any right-minded man of the necessity of permitting the managers of the Home to control the members in matter of their drinking if possible. Certainly it is not in the interest of sobriety or good government to throw the old men into the hands of the dive keepers in the cities adjacent to the Homes.

The number charged with drunkenness and bringing in whisky from March 4, 1906, to November 30, 1906, was 521. For the same period in 1907 the number was 703. For the entire year 1906 the total number for the same offenses was 702, being 1 less than the number from March 4 to November 30, 1907.

Very respectfully,
ISAAC CLEMENTS,
Governor.

Through the president of the Board of Managers, National Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

MOUNTAIN BRANCH,
NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS,
National Soldiers' Home, Tenn., December 17, 1907.

Hon. JAMES A. TAWNEY,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of December 14, 1907, requesting me to give you a brief statement of my experience as governor of the Mountain Branch of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers with the canteen and without it; also a detailed statement of the number of arrests on account of drunkenness made from the 4th of March to the 1st of December, 1906, and the number of arrests for the corresponding period of this year; also the number of saloons and other resorts which have been established in the vicinity of the Home since and as the result of the anti-canteen provision in the appropriation act, etc., and in reply thereto to state as follows:

(1) Before the opening of the Mountain Branch, by State legislation, the sale of intoxicating liquors was prohibited within 4 miles of any National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, and this statute with another known as the "4-mile law," prohibiting sales of intoxicating liquors within 4 miles of a schoolhouse outside of an incorporated town, freed the Branch from the presence in its vicinity of any licensed saloons. The nearest point at which liquors could be legally sold was Bristol, Tenn., 25 miles distant. After each pay day, of both the monthly roll and the quarterly payments of pensions, large numbers of the members visited Bristol for the purpose of indulging in intoxicants, and this usually resulted in debauches which lasted until the members' funds were exhausted, when they would return, and in many instances in such condition that hospital treatment became necessary. This condition continued until a beer hall was opened, when the members, or most of them, inclined to drink appeared content with the beer they received at the beer hall, which was always managed with the strictest regard for the rules, which prohibited members drinking to intoxication.

Soon after the beer hall closed numbers of members commenced to visit Bristol after pay day, the members commenced to order by express, and numerous illicit joints opened in the vicinity of the Branch, and "boot-leggers" were around on all sides of the camp with whisky of a most abominable compound for sale to the members. In fact, ever since the Branch was opened "boot-leggers" have infested the vicinity and have been the source of much annoyance and evil consequences, for the reason that the vile compound they sell to the members is largely made up of pernicious drugs, in some instances wood alcohol being used. Certain merchants (of small stores) have added to their stock a so-called cider, but of such strength that three or four glasses will intoxicate. Members buy this stuff and add Jamaica ginger to induce intoxication.

On the 1st of November, 1907, prohibition statutes became effective in Bristol and Knoxville, so that at this time the nearest points at which saloons are licensed are Chattanooga, 219 miles to the west, and Roanoke, Va., 176 miles to the east. North and south (across country) there are no transportation facilities to reach any nearer open saloons. From these distances "boot-leggers," illicit dives, and the members continue to order liquors.

Active cooperation on the part of the city, county, State, and Federal authorities has failed to break up the illicit traffic.

(2) For the period March 4, 1906, to December 1, 1906, there were 143 arrests and convictions in "governor's court" for drunkenness. In the same period, 11 were arrested and convicted on charge of "bringing whisky into camp."

(3) For the period March 4, 1907, to December 1, 1907, there were 143 arrests and convictions in "governor's court" for drunkenness and 10 for "bringing whisky into camp."

Following the closing of the beer hall it was noted that there was more quiet in the barracks and mess hall, for while beer drinkers were not permitted to indulge to intoxication they did imbibe to such degree that they became jovial and talkative and in some degree noisy. This hum of voices, while good-natured and seldom boisterous, was sometimes subject of complaint by more quiet members.

After the beer hall was closed, there being no open saloons in immediate vicinity of the Branch, many of those addicted to drink left this Branch for the purpose of getting into a Branch nearer to saloons.

Very respectfully,
JOHN P. SMITH, Governor.

MOUNTAIN BRANCH.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be again reported.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I think both the amendment and the amendment to the amendment better be reported, so that everybody will have a fair comprehension of what they are doing.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment as it would read if amended by the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the amendment and the amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken, and on a division, demanded by Mr. BARCHFELD, there were—ayes 62, noes 146.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TIRRELL].

The question was taken, and on a division, demanded by Mr. BARTHOLDT, there were—ayes 167, noes 46.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The necessary expenses for lodging and subsistence actually paid, not exceeding $4 per day, and actual and necessary traveling expenses of the United States district attorneys and their assistants, while absent from their respective official residences and necessarily employed in going to, returning from, and attending before any United States court, commissioner, or other committing magistrate, and while otherwise necessarily absent from their respective official residences on official business, shall be allowed and paid in the following manner: That the accounts of the United States attorneys and assistant United States attorneys for expenses herein provided for shall be made out monthly in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Attorney-General. And when said expense accounts are made out, as hereinbefore provided, and verified on oath before an officer authorized by law to administer oaths, they shall be submitted to and examined by one of the judges of the circuit court or district court of the district for which said United States attorney or assistant United States attorney was appointed, and when approved by said judge may be allowed and paid by the United States marshal for said district, and the amount of such payments shall be included in said marshal's accounts with the United States and audited and allowed as now provided by law.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that provision just read, as being contrary to existing law.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order?

Mr. MACON. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I will say that the provision is unquestionably subject to a point of order. It is inserted in this bill at the earnest request of the Department of Justice and also in the interest of the district attorneys, whose compensation or whose expenses are not in any respect increased by reason of this provision. The effect will be to enable the district attorneys to secure from the marshal the amount of their expenses incurred in the discharge of their duties instead of waiting until the accounting officer of the Department of Justice here in Washington passes upon their accounts.

The account of the marshal who makes the disbursement must subsequently be audited just the same as heretofore; and if there is any improper allowance by the marshal, the marshal would be responsible under this provision for that improper or illegal allowance, just the same as the disbursing officer is now. It is purely a matter of the convenience of the district attorneys and to prevent them from being required to wait sometimes six months for the payment of several hundred dollars of expenses incurred in the conduct of their business. That is all there is to it. The difference is simply this: Under existing law the disbursing officer of the Department makes payment. Under this new provision the United States marshal would make the disbursement, and the amount would be audited just the same thereafter as now, and the district attorney would not be required to wait three or six months to receive his money.

In many instances, I may say, as it appeared before the committee, the amounts were quite large, and the district attorneys are not receiving very large salaries, and when they pay out these expenses they pay them out of their own pockets. It seems to the committee that there is no justice in compelling these men to be without their money for the length of time they have heretofore been compelled to wait.

Mr. MACON. Under existing law are the district attorneys allowed $4 per day?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes. This does not change the compensation in any respect. It is simply a matter of allowing the district attorneys to be reimbursed for the amount expended on account of traveling and other expenses incident to the transaction of their business by the marshal instead of by the accounting officer here in Washington.

Mr. MACON. Instead of having to wait?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. MACON. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For fees of United States district attorney for the District of Columbia, $23,800.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order to the last section in order that I may ask a question. Does that mean that the district attorney of the District of Columbia receives for his fees—that is, for his compensation—the sum of $23,800? If so, that is very large pay.

Mr. TAWNEY. It does not. The district attorney of the District of Columbia gets $6,000 for salary, and this is for the assistant attorneys and expenses of administering his office.

Mr. PERKINS. They are not fees, but expenses.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is all; and the assistants are paid out of this. The pay of the district attorney for the District of Columbia is $6,000. This is for the compensation of his assistants and the expenses of administering the office.

Mr. PERKINS. But the word used is "fee," which means the fee of the district attorney, which he receives for his own use.

Mr. TAWNEY. I would say to the gentleman that the law allows him to retain of his fees $6,000 for his own salary, and the balance of the $23,800 is for the pay of his assistants and the expenses of his office; and the balance, if any, goes into the Treasury.

Mr. PERKINS. He is not paid beyond $6,000 a year?

Mr. TAWNEY. That is all.

Mr. PERKINS. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For payment of assistants to the Attorney-General and to United States district attorneys employed by the Attorney-General to aid in special cases, $106,000. This appropriation shall be available also for the payment of foreign counsel employed by the Attorney-General in special cases, and such counsel shall not be required to take oath of office in accordance with section 366, Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to ask the chairman where and in what countries foreign counsel are employed?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman from New York this provision was originally inserted in the bill, I think some four years ago, in connection with the Greene and Gaynor cases, where there was a great deal of legal services required up in Canada in connection with getting extradition papers, and it has been used in several other cases of less importance, but the Department asks that it be continued, so if there was any necessity for the employment of foreign counsel they would have this authority. Without this authority it could not be done.

Mr. DRISCOLL. It is not known now this will be needed?

Mr. TAWNEY. It is not known that any of it will be needed.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For payment of assistants to the Attorney-General and of assistants to United States district attorneys, employed by the Attorney-General to represent the United States in naturalization and other proceedings, and for other necessary expenses in connection with such proceedings and cases, $150,000, which shall be paid from the permanent appropriation for expenses of regulating immigration.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment: On line 20, strike out the last word, "one," and insert "two," so that the appropriation shall be $250,000 instead of $150,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 147, line 20, strike out the word "one" and insert the word "two," so that the appropriation will read, "two hundred and fifty thousand dollars."

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Chairman, it is only two or three years ago since this country rang with the story of naturalization frauds. It is a fact that there were gross naturalization frauds. They existed in the city which I represent in part and in other cities. You could buy naturalization papers for $10 apiece, no matter what name you had, in the city of New York, and the same condition existed in other cities, in mining regions, and generally throughout the United States. In the last Congress we passed a bill to do away with these naturalization frauds, passed it under the able leadership of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BONYNGE], and it was the intention of the House, I am sure, because the bill passed under the suspension of the rule with only 8 negative votes, that this law should be enforced.

For this fiscal year the appropriation for that purpose is in two parts, $100,000 in the regular bill and $93,000 in the urgent deficiency bill, and yet for the next fiscal year—a year which includes a Presidential election, when there will be extra attempts at fraud, the committee has cut down the appropriation from $193,000 to $150,000. Now, Mr. Chairman, I believe in enforcing these naturalization laws. I value my American citizenship, and I think that my vote when I go to the polls in November ought not to be offset by some man who has perhaps only lived in this country one or two years and got his alleged citizenship by paying $10 for it to some naturalization broker.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Certainly.

Mr. GOULDEN. I think I understood the gentleman to say that these frauds are perpetrated in New York City, a city which the gentleman represents in part——

Mr. BENNET of New York. Both the gentleman and myself.

Mr. GOULDEN. I want to ask whether the same condition did not prevail in other cities—Boston, Baltimore, and elsewhere?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Everywhere.

Mr. GOULDEN. I examined into the matter very thoroughly and I know that is the fact.

Mr. BENNET of New York. And the gentleman had the honor of starting the thing——

Mr. GOULDEN. Thank you.

Mr. BENNET of New York. By introducing a resolution in the Fifty-eighth Congress, which the President took up and which resulted in the Commission and resulted in the law.

Mr. GOULDEN. Thank you.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Now, I want to stand by it.

Mr. DRISCOLL. If the gentleman will allow me; is any of this money taken out of the immigration fund?

Mr. BENNET of New York. It is all taken out of the immigration fund.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Does it say so here?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes; in line 22 it says:

Which shall be paid from the permanent appropriation for expenses of regulating immigration.

I want to say, Mr. Chairman, the last quarter showed that they had taken in $50,000 in fees—that is, the Government's share of the fees. We are actually beginning to make money out of the naturalization business, which ought not to be.

The law ought to be enforced, and I hope this House will adopt the amendment.

Mr. BONYNGE. I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Certainly.

Mr. BONYNGE. Does the gentleman know how many assistant attorneys-general are employed for this purpose?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I will read them to him. There is one at San Francisco, one at Denver——

Mr. BONYNGE. What is the salary paid at Denver?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Twenty-five hundred dollars.

Mr. BONYNGE. What is the salary at San Francisco?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Twenty-five hundred dollars.

Mr. BONYNGE. Let me have the others.

Mr. BENNET of New York. One at Chicago, $2,500, and the assistant, $2,000; one at Boston, $2,500; one at Detroit, at $2,500; one at St. Paul, at $2,500; one at St. Louis, at $2,500, and one at New York, at $3,000.

Mr. BONYNGE. That makes how many assistants?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I thought I was through, but I am not. There is one at Philadelphia at $2,500, one at Pittsburg at $2,500, and one at Seattle at $2,500. The total salary roll of all the officials——

Mr. BONYNGE. Not of all the officials, but of the assistant attorneys-general.

Mr. BENNET of New York. There are eleven.

Mr. BONYNGE. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET], if he will pardon me for an interruption at this point, served very ably on the committee and assisted in having this bill passed. I think the gentleman will remember that it was not in contemplation when we passed the bill that it would be necessary to have special assistant attorneys-general to enforce this law. It was anticipated at the time that the work could be done by the regular district attorneys in the respective districts.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I will say frankly to the House that that was the hope of our committee. The Attorney-General, however, came before the Committee on Appropriations and said——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BENNET of New York. The Attorney-General of the United States came before the Appropriations Committee and said that that could not be done and that he needed additional assistants. They are not very high-priced men. I do not think that $2,500 in Denver is excessive for a lawyer.

Mr. BONYNGE. I think the work that these men have to do is largely ministerial, that there is not any very deep legal ability required of a man to conduct these naturalization cases, and it could be ably done by a young lawyer at $1,500 or $1,800 a year.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to ask a question for information. What is the reason the district attorneys can not attend to this business?

Mr. BENNET of New York. The Attorney-General of the United States said that the force in the office of the district attorneys in these places where they had to get the special assistants was not sufficient. You take New York City—and I will have to speak of the things with which I am familiar, of course—their office there is overburdened anyway, and when you are taking in, as you are in the city of New York, say 6,000 cases a year, you need a man, and $3,000 is not too much to pay for an assistant to look after these matters.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What is it that these men do?

Mr. BENNET of New York. They investigate the applicant. They find out if they really live in the State. They find out if their statements are true, if they have been here five years; they find out if their witnesses are professional witnesses or genuine, and they prepare the examination so as to save the time of the judges in the court. If you did not have these men you would block the whole scheme of naturalization all over the country.

Mr. SULZER. It is blocked now in New York, is it not?

Mr. BENNET of New York. It is.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Do they do that, or do the examiners do it?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Both.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does not the gentleman think that is a service that any student in a law office would be glad to get a chance to do and get money out of it to pay his expenses?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I should like the gentleman just to state what this $3,000 man in New York, outside of bossing a so-called "number of examiners" and having a pretty easy time, does?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I will be very glad to reply to the question of my colleague, although I do not accept the characterization of the easy time that the man has.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Tell me what he does. I have tried to find out and could not.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I will tell you he has under him examiners.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How many in the city of New York?

Mr. BENNET of New York. One chief examiner.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Sixteen others, has he not?

Mr. BENNET of New York. One chief examiner, $2,550; one at $2,200; one at $1,600; three examiners, at $1,400. Do you want the rest?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I want to know it all. It is a very good thing.

Mr. BENNET of New York. All right; I will make it better. One interpreter, $2,242; one at $1,400; five examiners, at $1,200; two special agents, at $1,224; two stenographers, at $1,200; one stenographer, at $960, and one at $600.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How many is that altogether?

Mr. SULZER. It is enough.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no; they want more examiners. How many are there?

Mr. BENNET of New York. There are twenty people. If my colleague will allow me to answer his question——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am asking it in good faith.

Mr. BENNET of New York. These twenty people cover not only the Borough of Manhattan, which my colleague [Mr. SULZER] and myself live in, but the Borough of Brooklyn, which my colleague lives in, and all the State of New York and the city of Jersey City. I will tell you what these twenty do. Here comes in a petition. The law says there shall be ninety days between the time of filing the petition and the time of the final order. They look up that man, and they see if he actually lives where he says he does, and is not a fictitious person. They look up his witnesses and see if they are not fictitious persons. They ask him such questions as they can in his home, which is the best place to find out what kind of a man he is. So that if he is a good, deserving man—and most of them are—the attorney can get up in court after the investigation by the examiner and say:

> Your honor, I have looked into this case; I will not delay your honor, but simply ask the statutory questions.

It is for the purpose of putting all the questions that are necessary and not with the view of keeping him out of American citizenship.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How many cases were there in New York?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may be allowed to proceed five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Do you mean the State of New York?

Mr. FITZGERALD. In this place where these twenty men have been employed. How many cases did they have?

Mr. BENNET of New York. In the whole State of New York?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Wherever they examined.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I should say something like 8,000 cases.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How many were rejected?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I have not the exact figures, but I know that in one day in Schenectady they ran into a nest of anarchists and rejected 65 out of 130.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is a Republican city. I want to get something out about the Democratic city you have maligned.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Oh, there is no question of politics in it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman did that, however.

Mr. BENNET of New York. If my colleague will permit me, I know it is a Democratic city, and I am trying to do all I can to facilitate the naturalization of genuine people there, I do not care whether they vote for the Democratic party or not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We are in accord about that. But I desire to know if the gentleman is able to state the number of rejections and the reasons; because the gentleman from Iowa will give some information shortly as to some of the reasons assigned for rejections in Iowa, and if the same reasons are alleged for the rejections in New York it shows the whole thing is a farce.

Mr. BENNET of New York. All right.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is it practically agreed that they were the same kind of rejections of cases for which this Bureau claims credit?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I will tell you what they did, and I had personal experience when I sat with the judge when these examinations were made. He would ask, "what officers of the city of New York were elected," and the answer was, "the policemen and firemen were, and nobody else." They rejected the men who did not know the name of the chief officer of the city of New York.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman permit a question right there?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Certainly.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the gentleman consider it requires a highly paid official to enable the court to reject a man because of the ignorance displayed in this case?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Does the gentleman think it possible to say that these are anything like high-paid officials?

Mr. SHERLEY. This is what I asked the gentleman: If he considered it necessary to have officials highly paid or low paid in order to enable a court to reject a case such as he has spoken of?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I will answer the gentleman in my own way——

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman can answer the question yes or no.

Mr. BENNET of New York (continuing). By saying that before we had that law that there were naturalized sometimes, not only in New York City, but in many other cities in the country, under a single judge, five or six hundred a day.

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, if the gentleman will permit me to come back again, as I understood him——

Mr. BENNET of New York. I want to finish my answer.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, we can come to the issue.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I want to finish my own answer in my own way. Now, I submit to the gentleman from Kentucky, in answer to his inquiry, that a system of that kind demonstrates the need of officials besides the judges on the bench, whom I do not impugn, but who are busy men in a big city and with lots of work. It demonstrates the need of a friend of the people, as you might say, in the courts, to bring out these facts.

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, if the gentleman will permit me again.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the gentleman mean to tell this House that it is necessary to have these officials, not in certain cases, but in cases enumerated by him, which were cases where the naturalization was refused because the men applying did not know that the police and firemen were appointed instead of being elected? Do not you think that fact brought out could have been taken into full consideration by the court without the need of these men?

[The time of Mr. BENNET of New York having expired, by unanimous consent, at the request of Mr. GOLDFOGLE, it was extended five minutes.]

Mr. BENNET of New York. I simply say that under the conditions those facts were not brought out. I am in politics in New York City, and when the old law was in force I got as many men naturalized as I could, seventy or eighty or a hundred, in a campaign.

Mr. SHERLEY. Without regard to their right to become citizens?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I took them and they got naturalized, and they voted.

Mr. SHERLEY. Honest confession is good for the soul. I am glad to see that the gentleman has reformed.

Mr. BENNET of New York. No; I have not, but the law has reformed.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am sorry that the gentleman has not reformed.

Now, I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee, who, I see, is on his feet.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want to invite the gentleman now to another line of argument, or a suggestion as a remedy for this evil. Does not the gentleman think the law should be so amended as to require the United States district judges in the city of New York to specially instruct their grand juries at each term of the court to investigate violations of the naturalization laws?

Mr. BENNET of New York. If the gentleman will permit me, in answer to that, it was only yesterday that in a United States district court a man was sent up for violating the naturalization laws, and I myself, in that same court room, have seen 300 men stand up and plead guilty to violations of the naturalization laws.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And yet the gentleman is asking for more money, notwithstanding 300 guilty men stand up and confess. Now, I want 300,000 guilty ones punished if guilty.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I am asking for more money to prevent that in the future.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I do not think you will need more money if you will show to the people of New York that here is the grand jury that protects their homes and the country and protects the city of New York from violators of the naturalization law.

Mr. BENNET of New York. So far as I am concerned, I should prefer to prevent crime before it is committed than to punish it afterwards, and if we give these men the appropriation they ought to have and do not cut them down, we can enforce this naturalization law all over the United States.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will say to my friend that I really believe one of the reasons why we have so much crime and so many violations of our antimonopoly laws and election laws and naturalization laws is because the grand juries are not instructed by the presiding judge at each term to execute the law against violators. Now, I want to be heard on that just a moment. The gentleman himself has just confessed that during election times he seeks to naturalize, I presume, anybody who will vote the Republican ticket. That is the substance of the gentleman's confession, and I must admire him for his frankness.

And yet, in time of peace as it were, recognizing the imposition upon society in the State of New York, and upon our laws, he comes down here and asks us to give more money to create more offices for partisan appointees, and asks more of the sinews of political warfare for the city of New York.

Now, I submit, and I have not done this for the first time, for eight or ten years ago I insisted on amending the Sherman antitrust law so as to compel the district judges in each district of the United States to call at each term especial attention of the Federal grand juries to violations of that law, and asked them to investigate the violations of the law instead of letting the violators accumulate to such an extent that they become terrors of commerce, terrors of ordinary commercial men, until finally some brave fellow will say, "Live or die, survive or perish, I will go to Washington and employ a lawyer," which he does, at the expense of $1,000 or $1,500, to beg the Attorney-General to investigate the matter.

Then it takes eighteen months or two years to investigate and get at whether they are violating the law, instead of having the grand jury throughout the United States constantly investigate for violations of the law, and constantly, when proper, throughout the country bring in indictments against them and thus sustain the majesty of that great piece of statesmanship, the antitrust law of 1890, and to protect the people and small dealers and manufacturers in the end. That law never will be successful until the power is given to the judges. Courts are forced at each term to charge their grand juries to investigate the violations and enforce it by indictment. Now, here is a case that is perhaps equally as dangerous to society. Here the gentleman himself admits in effect that he violated the law. Why, he asked for more clerks and a stenographer and a Department clerk arrangement.

Why, Mr. Chairman, this country has got to be too much of a departmental country. I want it to be more of a country run by Congressional investigations, such as we are trying to have in the pulp matter. Congress has relegated to Department officials and clerks the power of investigating wrongdoers in violating the Federal laws in this country. We have ceased to investigate, except in legislation presented to us.

Twenty or thirty years ago we investigated these things ourselves. Congress investigated the Standard Oil concern, the steel trust, and the armor plate trust for having put blowhole armor on our men-of-war. We did not turn these matters over to the Departments then. We called the trust members together in the proper committee room, and we sent for the witnesses and sent for the prosecutors, and Congress found them guilty when we could find the guilty one.

We never shall have the naturalization laws enforced, we never shall have the immigration laws enforced, we never shall have the antimonopoly laws enforced as they should be and as society and the spirit of the law demand that they should be enforced until we compel the Federal courts to charge their grand juries to look after these violators of the law. Let Congress investigate more. Let grand juries be directed to investigate at each term of the court and happier conditions will prevail.

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend the remarks I made to-day in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by printing the communication received from the board of governors and the several reports of the board.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] may be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that his colleague [Mr. SLAYDEN] may extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, it fell to my lot in the last session of Congress as a member of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization to be appointed chairman of the subcommittee that had in charge the naturalization bill. On that committee also served the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT], whom I see on the other side of the aisle. The other members of the subcommittee were Mr. MOORE of Texas and Mr. HAYES of California. The bill was carefully considered. It was reported to the House and occupied the attention of the House for many days at different times. In reporting it we did not rely at all, Mr. Chairman, upon the examination made in open court for the enforcement of the naturalization law. I say we did not rely at all—perhaps I overstate the fact—but we did depend largely and almost wholly upon the other provisions of the law to prevent fraud, and not upon the examination that would be had in open court.

It was not expected or anticipated when we reported the bill to the House that there would ever arise any necessity for the appointment of assistant attorneys-general to enforce the law. I well remember, Mr. Chairman, in presenting the bill to the House, that I stated upon the floor when interrogated in regard to the bill that the regular district attorneys of the respective districts and their assistants would be able, in my judgment, to take care of the naturalization cases. It was expected in a few rare cases, when a matter of controversy would arise, that it might become necessary for the United States district attorney to appear in court in opposition to the application and cross-examine the witnesses. I stated in answer to an inquiry in reference to that matter that, in my judgment, more than 90 per cent of the cases would be settled outside of court, and only in the remaining 10 per cent of the cases would it become necessary for the United States district attorney to appear. We felt that a limited number of cases could be taken care of by the regular United States attorney, instead of requiring an assistant for that special work.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I appreciate the gentleman's opinion, Mr. Chairman, and I would like, right along that line, to ask him this—if he does not think it would be wise to amend the law and require the Federal judges to instruct the grand juries touching it, to investigate the violations of the law?

Mr. BONYNGE. In a general way they always do that. It is the duty of the court to instruct the grand juries to investigate all alleged violations of law, including the naturalization law as well as any other law.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I hope the gentleman is mistaken, since we find so many violations of it; but I believe if we were to amend the law and require the Federal judges to charge the grand juries to investigate violations of the naturalization law, it would serve as a deterrent.

Mr. BONYNGE. There certainly could be no objection to the Federal judge giving that special charge to the grand jury, but I do not think there will be a sufficient number of fraudulent cases under the new law we enacted to make it necessary to enact a special law requiring the district judge to charge the juries specifically in regard to violations of the naturalization law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BONYNGE. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] said he saw 300 stand up in a court room and plead guilty.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is under the old law.

Mr. BONYNGE. The gentleman from New York referred to the old law. I do not know how many convictions there may have been under the new law, but with the many safeguards there are in the bill enacted at the last Congress, I think there will be very few violations of it, and there will not be very many cases when it will be necessary to have an attorney in court to examine the witnesses. There will be some, but such examinations as do occur in the future will be very limited, and the work will not be difficult. It will consist largely in putting stereotyped questions to witnesses. It does not require the ability of a high-priced lawyer to conduct such cases. As evidence of that fact, let me state what occurred in my own city.

The Attorney-General selected as the assistant attorney-general to conduct the cases in the city of Denver a gentleman who had recently removed to Denver from Washington, for the benefit of his health, I understand. He had been in the War Department in Washington, I believe, and at the time he was appointed as a special attorney-general to take care of these naturalization cases in the city of Denver he was an employee in the quartermaster-general's department of the Department of Colorado, and was given a salary, I believe, of $2,500 a year. Now, it may be that he is an eminent lawyer. I do not know him personally. He has been so short a time in the city of Denver that I do not believe the members of the bar of that city have as yet been able to ascertain whether he is a lawyer of special ability or not.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman tell us how we are going to expend all this money without a large surplus in the immigration fund unless we do employ a lot of lawyers?

Mr. BONYNGE. Yes; I think I can tell the gentleman. I think the clerks of the court are underpaid for the work they do under the naturalization law, and that instead of spending this money in high-priced salaries to unnecessary assistant attorneys-general a large proportion of the fee paid by the applicant ought to be paid to the clerks of the court for the work they do under the law, which is more important, I believe, than the examination of the witnesses in court.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I would like to say to the gentleman that the committee of which he used to be so distinguished a member has taken that view in part and has reported a bill increasing the fees of the clerks.

Mr. BONYNGE. But in order to do that I believe the committee has increased the fee that the applicant for naturalization must pay.

Mr. BENNET of New York. About $3 less than the gentleman and I assisted in reporting——

Mr. BONYNGE. But if we find we can pay the clerks a sufficient amount out of the present fee, provided we do not spend it in high-priced salaries to officers not needed, would it not be just as well to leave the fee where it is and give a larger proportion of it to the clerks?

Mr. BENNET of New York. If in the future we find we can do that, we can take that question up.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, in conclusion I want to say that I take a very deep interest in the successful operation of the naturalization law. It is a very salutary law and must be upheld. I felt very gratified to have the honor to present that bill to the House and to have charge of it on the floor.

I do not suppose any gentleman on the floor has a deeper interest in the success of the measure than I, and in saying that I realize the great interest many Members have in it. I do not want to see the law discredited by having an unnecessary number of high-priced officers employed to enforce its provisions, which will make it necessary every year when the appropriation bill comes before the House to enter into a discussion of the bill, and perhaps to disparage it. Therefore I trust that this extra appropriation, which I understand has not even been estimated for by the Department, may not be approved by the committee.

Mr. BENNET of New York. But the gentleman is mistaken. The Department has asked for $325,000.

Mr. BONYNGE. Well, I have taken the statement of the chairman of the committee for what I have stated to the House.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the appropriation carried by this bill is the exact amount originally estimated for by the Department of Justice for this purpose. It is true that there has been an application made for an increase, but this amount carried in the bill is the exact amount they at first said they wanted for this next year.

This is not the only expense of executing the naturalization law. This law has not been in force quite two years, and if the legislative bill and this bill have no increase given above what is recommended by the committee, $211,340 will be appropriated for next year for the enforcement of this single law. I commented here the other day upon the modern system of appropriating money for enforcing laws and sections of laws as distinguished from appropriations for enforcing all the laws which formerly prevailed, and here is a striking illustration which I want to present to the House in such a way that it will be, as I think, within the understanding of everyone. We are all of us inclined to be provincial, and when I discovered that this Department was engaged in going over every naturalization paper everywhere in the United States where fraud was suspected and where fraud was not suspected, I made inquiry of how many cases in the State of Iowa this Department had succeeded in successfully defending, and they told me something more than forty.

I then asked them to furnish me with a tabulated list of all the rejections in the State of Iowa and the grounds upon which they were rejected, and I hold this statement in my hand. After examination of it I do not know how many cases, but manifestly many hundreds and, indeed, some thousands of cases in the State of Iowa, the Department of Justice triumphantly defeated something over forty applications, and I want to submit why they defeated them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Here is the triumph of the Department of Justice in the enforcement of the naturalization laws against frauds. Not a man in that State makes a fraudulent application for naturalization. I assert, after ten years' experience in the execution of the old law, that every one of these men would have been rejected had no United States district attorney put his face in the court in which the proceedings were going on.

They searched all the applications—hundreds, yea, thousands of them—in Iowa, and failed to find a single case of fraud, but did reject more than forty on purely formal grounds that would have been rejected without the aid of a Federal attorney. Now, I am in favor of this naturalization law. I voted for it. I believe in it, and I believe in its rigid enforcement. But I do not believe that in strictly rural communities, where there is no substantial proof of fraud being committed, and where there is no ground to suspect fraud, the Government ought to go, by its United States Assistant Attorney-General, through every paper, trying to find some defect in the paper that will be found by the trial judge himself in administering the law under his oath of office, and thus impose this enormous, needless expense upon the Treasury of the United States. This division of a bureau, with its own and the expense made necessary by it, has gone up to more than $200,000 a year in a life of less than two years, and largely its efforts are being wasted in searching for fraud where there is no fraud and no ground to suspect fraud.

Now, let us give this law a rigid enforcement, but do not waste the public money nosing for fraud in those places where it does not exist. Let us spend what money we do spend down in Brother BENNET'S district, stopping the scoundrels down there that are violating the law. I do not want this House, if it can be avoided, to raise this appropriation, and I do not want them to understand that they are to get a deficiency next year. I think over $200,000 a year is enough to enforce one act of Congress, at least until it is demonstrated that frauds are being perpetrated that are not being detected by the system now in existence.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to close debate in ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves to close debate on the amendment in ten minutes. Is there objection?

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the remarks of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BONYNGE] were exceedingly valuable as a matter of history. He stated, and stated truly, that at the time of its enactment it was not expected that the enforcement of the naturalization law would be dependent upon the number of special attorneys employed for that purpose. But, unfortunately, we have a provision in regard to the naturalization law that excites the zeal of men, and that is a provision that puts into a special fund certain fees that come from the operation of the naturalization law. An utterly pernicious system——

Mr. BENNET of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. For a question.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I would just like to state to the gentleman that there is no such fund, and all cases that come in are paid from the General Treasury.

Mr. SHERLEY. But there has been this system, that all the money received under the naturalization law has been looked upon by the advocates of that law and by the officials undertaking to enforce it as a fund that should be set apart for their use. And they have undertaken to devise ways and means for the spending of it, and some of the ways and means seem to be to make lawyers out of war clerks and lawyers out of Commissioners of Civil Service, and let them undertake the enforcement of the law.

And it may be that the absence of legal training is the explanation of the number needed to do the work. But it is the only explanation that could possibly be satisfactory. Now, we went into this matter at length before the committee, and if ever there was an absence of information given to a committee by men in charge of this work it was in this particular case. Repeatedly the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] and myself asked Mr. Cooley and asked others to give us some proof of the character of frauds that were being discovered. They brought us a table giving the numerical number, but giving absolutely no information as to the facts of the respective cases. Finally, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] has succeeded in getting a statement as to the cases tried in the State of Iowa, and a more pitiful exhibition never was presented. We have been unable to get an exhibit as to the cases tried elsewhere, and if they are similar to those in Iowa we have been spending a great deal too much money and ought to reduce instead of increase the appropriation. Now, there is a constant tendency in this House to take advantage of the pronounced feeling upon certain questions to obtain large appropriations. It is very easy for the gentleman to make a speech about the value of citizenship, and tell how tremendously he values that citizenship, and yet we have the same gentleman, almost in the same breath, tell us that he undertook to have people admitted to citizenship without regard to their right to that citizenship.

My idea about the matter is that there is no question as to the value of American citizenship and no desire on the part of any honest man to have anything done to lessen the value of that citizenship, but that does not warrant us in extravagant appropriations for the purpose of creating unnecessary offices and paying fees to unnecessary employees of the Government. And that is what is involved in the proposition of the gentleman. His speech would be just as much in order and just as pertinent if the amendment offered had been to increase the sum $500,000, and he could have talked a little louder of his admiration for American citizenship and spoken a little lower as to his activity in bestowing that citizenship upon certain undesirable persons, and the speech would have been just as appropriate as the one we have just heard.

I hope, Mr. Chairman, that the committee will vote down the amendment and not give this additional sum.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I stated a short time ago that when the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] would read the list that he had received from the Department of Justice the House would be convinced that this so-called "bureau" was engaged largely in a farcical work. The Department took credit for the fact that they had rejected forty-seven applicants in the State of Iowa; seventy-seven in the State of North Dakota, largely, I suppose, similar in character to those in the State of Iowa. In the State of New York, and the city of New York, to which my colleague has made reference, after a close and careful scrutiny of over 8,000 application papers, according to his statement, 228 applicants were rejected. Of course my colleague knows that there are not now gross frauds in naturalization in New York. A Republican legislature a few years ago passed an act under which there is appointed a superintendent of elections for the Metropolitan district, which is practically the city of New York. At every election every man who is a naturalized citizen and who registers is compelled to produce his naturalization papers before this Republican official. They take his papers and hold them until they are satisfied——

Mr. PARSONS. The gentleman knows that is not correct. The man, under the law, must produce them when he registers.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I repeat the statement that practically every naturalized citizen is called before the superintendent of elections, a Republican official, appointed by a Republican governor, and at times his papers are taken from him and withheld until this official satisfies himself that there was no fraud in the issuance of the papers. The citizen is examined. Under the law he is compelled to reply to whatever questions are put to him. I know, and the gentleman knows, that there have been grave doubts as to the constitutionality of the act under which this superintendent acts.

But it is a fact that it is not possible now, if your officials properly enforce that law, for any man to pretend to be a naturalized citizen and vote illegally in the State of New York in any election.

What a farce it is, with only 228 denials in New York since that law has been in effect, to say that $200,000 is not sufficient for the work. My colleague states that he sat in court and saw a man rejected because, when asked which officials in the city of New York were elected, he replied "the policemen and firemen." I know the Republican judges who occupy places in the Federal courts in New York, and I have confidence in their competency. My colleague errs when he assumes that, if the assistant district attorneys had not been present in court these judges would not have been able to obtain the same answers as these examiners did to the several questions.

Mr. PARSONS. Would it not have taken the judges a great deal more time than it did if the preliminary examinations had not been made?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think not. I do not think the object of having these attorneys and examiners is to withdraw from the courts the discharge of their proper functions. This naturalization act contemplates a proper discharge of their duties by the courts in these cases. If the desire be to stop the courts from the exercise of their functions, then the attorneys should be abolished and the judges required to perform their duties.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time for debate has expired, and the question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For fees of United States commissioners and justices of the peace acting under section 1014, Revised Statutes of the United States, $125,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WATSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill, H. R. 21260, the sundry civil appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 14789. An act to amend an act entitled "An act for the protection of game in Alaska, and for other purposes," approved June 7, 1902.

The Speaker announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 4112. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the reorganization of the consular service of the United States," approved April 5, 1906.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 6358. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate The Masonic Mutual Relief Association of the District of Columbia"—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 6826. An act to correct the military record of Albert S. Austin—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. PAYNE. Pending that, Mr. Speaker, I move that the committee take a recess until 11.30 to-morrow morning.

Mr. FITZGERALD. A parliamentary inquiry. Is that a joke or is it in earnest? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. That will develop later. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 152, nays 84, answered "present" 8, not voting 143, as follows:

Mr. BANKHEAD. I present the memorial of W. H. M. McCarty, relative to the Mason McCarty high-powered gun. The memorial is short, and I ask that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Coast Defenses.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Coast Defenses and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Memorial to the Congress of the United States of America.

The Mason McCarty high-power gun is offered to the Government for a test as to its value and power. This gun will puncture 21 inches of steel at 1,000 yards and render obsolete any of our present ships that should approach a fort armed with them.

We ask a 12-inch gun of the present type to be altered to allow the specifications of this system and to demonstrate that all of the present guns may be utilized, thus insuring a great economy in the new armament, as no new guns will be required. All the guns of the present type can be altered to meet the new conditions. We only ask that this system be tried, as we do not desire to offer it or allow any foreign government to possess this valuable improvement in artillery, and we desire the Government to wholly possess this system as a secret and maintain it as such. This system requires no radical change, and all the present coast-defense guns can be readily altered at our gun factory to meet the new condition.

We ask that an amendment to the present naval bill carry this provision, with an appropriation to fully test the guns. There will no longer be a necessity for heavy armament. What will be necessary will be fast and powerful ships with heavy batteries of these guns. When these guns are mounted on our coast-defense forts, it will not be possible for any vessel to approach our harbors or pass our fortifications, as we can puncture the armor plate of any vessel now in existence or that is liable to be made for years to come, as no vessel can carry armor of sufficient thickness to withstand a 12-inch gun of this type. One exhibit, A, accompanies.

W. F. M. MCCARTY,
By PHIL B. THOMPSON, Jr.,
Attorney.

The Mason McCarty high-powered gun has the following improvements over any system known:

First. It has greater range.
Second. Higher velocity.
Third. Lower trajectory.
Fourth. Less breech pressure.
Fifth. No flareback. Hence no danger to officers or men in turrets or fortifications or ships.
Sixth. No possibility of explosion from back fire in handling ammunition in the turrets, handling room, or forts, or handling ammunition from magazine to turrets.
Seventh. Avoiding danger to powder by exposure to the air or dampness in the magazine; no possible hydroscopic absorption.
Eighth. Absolute surety of firing the charge.

RAILROAD FREIGHT RATES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there are no concurrent or other resolutions the morning business is closed.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, before we pass from morning business I ask the indulgence of the Senate to make a brief statement in regard to a matter pending in committee.

On February 10, 1908, I introduced a bill (S. 5204) to authorize the Interstate Commerce Commission to suspend advances in rates, fares, charges, and classifications of common carriers of interstate and foreign commerce, and to further regulate commerce among the several States and with foreign countries. So far as I have observed the committee having this matter in charge has taken no final action with reference to the bill or similar proposed legislation. If I mistake not, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. FULTON] introduced a kindred bill, and it is now pending before that committee.

In this connection, with the indulgence of the Senate, I call the attention of the Committee on Interstate Commerce to the fact that in the New York Sun of April 21, 1908, it is said that the railroads of the country propose to make a general increase in freight rates, and among other things in this article the following appears:

In addition the approval of President Roosevelt and the Interstate Commerce Commission will have to be obtained. Among railroad men, it is said, however, that the President has intimated his approval of the advance as an offset for his blocking the reduction of wages and for the added expenses which the employers' liability bill will cause. Chairman Knapp, of the Commission, also hinted in a recent speech that he was in favor of an advance. After yesterday's meeting, which was adjourned indefinitely, the following statement was given out—

Which I will not stop to read in view of the notice given by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER], upon whose time I recognize that I am intrenching.

I invite attention to this article, Mr. President, to make the suggestion that this proposed increase in rates by the companies acting together is in violation of the Sherman antitrust law, and that, if this statement is true with reference to the intimation of the President of the United States and the Interstate Commerce Commission, these high officials propose to permit a general advance in rates, with these companies acting together, in violation of the antitrust law as construed by the Supreme Court of the United States in the Traffic Association cases.

Mr. President, I ask that the article from the New York Sun of April 21, 1908, be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The article referred to is as follows:

[New York Sun, April 21, 1908.]

MEAN TO RAISE FREIGHT RATES—RAILROADS EAST OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFER ON IT—CONSENT OF PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT AND THE INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION LOOKED FOR—THEORY THAT IF THE RAILROADS SPEND MORE MONEY BUSINESS WILL IMPROVE.

The executive officers of all the principal railroads east of the Mississippi River met in New York yesterday and took what is understood to be a preliminary step to a general increase in freight rates. Before a new schedule goes into effect the roads will individually consider the matter further. Another general meeting will be called, after which the required thirty days' notice will be given.

In addition, the approval of President Roosevelt and the Interstate Commerce Commission will have to be obtained. Among railroad men it is said, however, that the President has intimated his approval of the advance as an offset for his blocking the reduction of wages and for the added expenses which the employers' liability bill will cause. Chairman Knapp, of the Commission, also hinted in a recent speech that he was in favor of an advance. After yesterday's meeting, which was adjourned indefinitely, the following statement was given out:

"The present business situation as it more particularly affects railroads was discussed. There was a strong feeling that while the rigid economies which have been introduced should be continued and the expense of operation should be curtailed, so far as is consistent with safety and proper maintenance, still the roads must increase their revenues if there is to be a sufficient margin of profit to make possible the obtaining of moneys needed for extensions and improvements to the service.

"The traffic officials of the different roads have been for some time engaged in making a study of freight rates, and are in favor of increases varying with the different classes and commodities. It was generally believed by those attending the meeting that present conditions required that an increase be made, and the meeting adjourned for each road to give further consideration to the subject."

President George F. Baer, of the Reading Company, presided at the meeting. An increase of freight rates has been discussed ever since traffic began to fall off six months ago—a decline which has been reflected by a steady decline in net earnings of almost every railroad in the United States. In the last few years wages have increased fully 20 per cent, materials are at least 50 per cent higher than they were ten years ago, and taxes have made substantial advance. In more recent times there has been passed the nine-hour law affecting telegraphers, and many of the States have passed 2-cent fare bills and ordered arbitrary reductions in freight rates and the carrying out of certain improvements. As long as the amount of traffic exceeded the facilities the roads were able to bear up under these burdens. This is no longer the case. Constructive activity of every kind has been almost suspended, the iron and steel industry is running at 50 per cent of its normal capacity, and the retail purchases of every class of the population have been sharply reduced. In the face of this the traffic officials look on an increase of railroad revenue as the essential remedy. Until the roads can afford to continue the improvements that were projected before the panic and get into the market again for equipment steel rails, copper, and other of the country's important products the depression is likely to continue, they say. An advance in freight rates is the logical means for increasing revenue.

Mr. CULBERSON. In the Chicago Record-Herald of May 5, on the first page, there is an article headed "Roads Boost Rates," and it is there said that the railroads contemplate increasing the freight rates upon the shippers of the country to an extent amounting to several hundred million dollars annually.

In the New York Tribune of this morning, on the first page, there is an article headed "Agree to raise rates," and among other things in this article I will read the following:

Another meeting of the traffic officials of the railroads east of the Mississippi was held yesterday at the offices of the Trunk Line Association, No. 43 Liberty street, but no definite conclusion in regard to the proposed increase in freight rates was reached, and it was said that the meetings would probably be continued to-morrow. C. C. McCalm, chairman of the Trunk Line Association, said after the meeting that a general increase in rates had been practically agreed to, but the question was how to accomplish it.

The Illinois Manufacturers' Association has already sent a protest to the traffic officers of the eastern railroads against the proposed increase, and shippers, as well as commercial organizations, in this and other cities in the East and West, are said to contemplate similar procedure.

And so on.

My purpose, Mr. President, in calling attention to this matter now is threefold.

First, to suggest that this combination of railroad officials in the United States to increase rates throughout the country is in violation of the Sherman antitrust law.

Second, to invite attention to the suggestion which is publicly made and not denied, but which I trust is untrue, that the President of the United States and the Interstate Commerce Commission have intimated that they are in accord with this proposed action upon the part of the railroad companies of the United States.

And, thirdly, Mr. President, to invite the attention of the Committee on Interstate Commerce to this proposed action upon the part of the railroads of the country with a view that we may have early action of some kind upon the part of that committee with reference to this proposed legislation pending before that committee, one bill upon the subject, I understand, having been introduced by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. FULTON] and the other, to which I have called attention, having been introduced by myself.

I ask that these three articles may be incorporated in the RECORD so that the public may understand what, according to them, is contemplated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Chicago Record-Herald, May 5, 1908.]

ROADS BOOST RATES; EXPECT BITTER FIGHT—CLAIM ACTION IS NECESSARY TO MEET CRISIS, BUT FEAR PUBLIC OPINION—MILLIONS MORE REVENUE—MANAGERS PLAN SUPREME TEST OF RIGHT TO UPSET FREIGHT BASIS OF YEARS—DATA ON BIG FREIGHT INCREASE BY EASTERN LINES—WHAT THE ROADS PROPOSE—TO ADVANCE "CLASS" RATES FROM 2 TO 10 CENTS PER POUND AND "COMMODITY" RATES, FOUR EXCEPTED, A MINIMUM OF 40 CENTS PER TON—COMMODITIES TO ESCAPE INCREASE: WHEAT, FLOUR, PACKING-HOUSE PRODUCTS, AND DRESSED BEEF—ESTIMATED INCREASED PROFITS FOR ROADS ANNUALLY, $100,000,000.

Eastern railroads have decided upon a general advance in freight rates which will swell their annual gross revenues by an estimated sum of at least $100,000,000.

This vast amount, and possibly more, will not be added to the coffers of the carriers without a most determined struggle between the railroads and the shipping public, with the Interstate Commerce Commission and possibly the courts as the forums. The decision to increase all freight rates an average of 10 per cent was reached after numerous conferences between executive traffic officials, followed by conferences between Eastern railroad presidents. Two dates have been selected for making the advances effective. On July 1 there will be a general advance of from 2 to 10 cents per pound in all of the "class" rates, and on August 1 all of the "commodity" rates except four will be advanced a maximum of 40 cents a ton.

EFFECT WILL BE MARKED.

The proposed changes will be the first advance in rates of this character in the history of American railroads, will disturb the rate adjustment throughout the country, and will change a rate basis which has existed for the past seventeen years. Its effect, therefore, upon the general business of the country can not fail to be marked.

It is understood that the action of the Eastern roads precedes by a short time similar action on the part of all the railroads in the United States. In fact, the Southeastern roads already have decided, it is claimed, to follow the example of the Eastern lines. The basis for the Eastern increases will be an increase in the rates between New York and Chicago, both east and west bound, but the territory directly affected lies east of the Mississippi River to the Atlantic seaboard and north from the Ohio River to the Canadian border. The roads west of Chicago to the Mississippi River had no voice in the movement in which they are forced to acquiesce because of the general geographical division of territory for rate-making purposes.

HOLD KEY TO SITUATION.

The territory above described is known in the railway world as "official classification territory," and what is known as the "official classification" of freight governs in all of its broad expanse. It is the territory which holds the key to the rate situation in the United States, for in it originates more than two-thirds of all the tonnage carried by all the railroads. More than this, the railroads in this territory enjoy more than one-half of the total revenue of all the railroads in the United States.

The decision to increase rates has been made by the railroad magnates with fear and trembling. Will the people stand it, or will public opinion swamp them at the very outset? is the question that is being whispered in the secret councils of the men who control the great majority of railway mileage. It is to be a supreme test, and careful and exact preparation has been made to defend the drastic action from all attack.

CONSUMER TO BEAR BURDEN.

How will the purposed increases, including as they do all of the necessities and all of the luxuries of life, all of the raw material which enters into manufacturing, and all of the finished products, affect the cost of living? It seems certain from the experience of the past that the shipper will not stand all the advance, if any, but that he will place the burden upon the shoulders of the consumer.

But the railroads, stampeded by failing revenues and increased loss of operation, feel they are between two horns of a dilemma—increased rates or decreased wages. They say they want to know if the people will see the railroads facing a decreased revenue of $400,000,000 annually and not come to the rescue of the greatest industry that exists.

The only commodities to escape the increased rates are wheat, flour, packing-house products, and dressed beef. Upon dressed beef and packing-house products the railroads are practically estopped because of a contract which the Pere Marquette made with the packers three years ago to maintain the present rates to the seaboard upon condition of receiving a certain specified portion of the tonnage.

EFFECT OF COMPETITION.

The grain and flour rates are advanced every winter and are reduced every spring because of the competition of the Lakes which controls this traffic. The official classification divides all products transported into six classes and into scores of commodities. The class rates, on which not to exceed 30 per cent of the business is done, will be increased between Chicago and New York, as follows: First class, from 75 to 85 cents; second class, from 65 to 74 cents; third class, from 50 to 57 cents; fourth class, from 35 to 40 cents; fifth class, from 30 to 33 cents, and sixth class, from 25 to 27 cents. The increase in the commodity rates, on which the great bulk of the traffic moves, will be on an average of 2 cents per 100 pounds.

The railroads which have agreed to this general increase include the Pennsylvania and the New York Central lines and have a total mileage of about 60,000 miles. According to the Interstate Commerce Commission's statistical report these roads earned in 1906 approximately $1,200,000,000 out of a total gross earning of $2,000,000,000 for all railroads.

MEANS INCREASE OF MILLIONS.

In the rate conferences which were held in the East, it was stated that an increase of approximately 10 per cent in the gross revenues was desired and was actually imperative. If the proposed increases have the desired effect, it is not impossible that the revenue of these railroads will be swelled by $120,000,000 annually. These figures, however, are purely an estimate from past earnings and from estimates by traffic men of the effect which the increases will have.

The far-reaching importance of the proposed increase in rates will also be seen from the statement that the roads directly interested in them carried during 1906 a total of approximately 1,100,000,000 tons of freight out of a total of about 1,600,000,000 for all the railroads of the United States. The States which these railroads serve directly are: Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Rhode Island, Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Illinois, and Wisconsin.

SOUTHEASTERN ROADS TO FOLLOW.

It is understood that the Southeastern roads, which serve all the territory east of the Mississippi and south of the Ohio rivers to the seaboard and to the Gulf, have decided to follow the action of the official classification lines. The roads in this territory have announced increases in the rates on fresh meats of from 3 to 10 cents per 100 pounds. As yet no move has been made by the Western roads toward a general increase in rates, and it is thought that none will be made until the outcome of the increases in the East is seen.

A change in the rates will be attended by considerable expense to the railroads. To change all of its freight tariffs will, for example, cost the Pennsylvania at least $100,000, and possibly $150,000, and the New York Central lines approximately $75,000. One estimate of the increased revenue to the Pennsylvania, however, places the figure at $5,000,000 annually. It is not expected that all of the increases in the territory intermediate to New York and Chicago will be put in effect before January 1 next, because of the amount of work entailed in "checking in" or determining the changes which the change in basis will make in the intermediate rates.

OFFICIALS DEFEND ACTION.

When asked what led to the selection of the particular basis of increase, some of the Eastern men replied that it was thought the country would not stand a greater advance. It was also decided that such an increase could be defended before the Interstate Commerce Commission upon the ground of increased cost of operation. Traffic men everywhere insist that the railroads are facing a financial crisis, out of which they can not safely emerge unless they obtain more revenue or reduce the cost of operation. Revenues have decreased, it is claimed, on an average of nearly 20 per cent over the high period of last year, while the cost of operation has been decreased of late only by stopping all improvements and by discharging more than 300,000 employees.

These extraordinary conditions already have spelled bankruptcy for the Seaboard Air Line, the International and Great Northern, the Great Western, and other large systems.

The railroads expect determined, if not bitter, opposition to the proposed increases. Commercial organizations in all of the big cities of the Middle West, at least, have been aware for some time that a general increase in rates was under discussion and have been preparing to make vigorous objection. This determination means a tremendous amount of added work for the Interstate Commerce Commission, as the question of the reasonableness of the new freight rates will surely go to that body for determination.

[New York Tribune, May 7, 1908.]

AGREE TO RAISE RATES—BUT EASTERN RAILROADS HAVEN'T DECIDED HOW TO GO ABOUT IT.

Another meeting of the traffic officials of the railroads east of the Mississippi was held yesterday at the offices of the Trunk Line Association, No. 43 Liberty street, but no definite conclusion in regard to the proposed increase in freight rates was reached, and it was said that the meetings would probably be continued to-day and to-morrow. C. C. McCalm, chairman of the Trunk Line Association, said after the meeting that a general increase in rates had been practically agreed to, but the question was how to accomplish it.

The Illinois Manufacturers' Association has already sent a protest to the traffic officers of the Eastern railroads against the proposed increase, and shippers, as well as commercial organizations, in this and other cities in the East and West are said to contemplate similar procedure. The committee on railway transportation of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, which includes among its members some of the largest manufacturers and shippers in the country, will meet to-day to discuss the question, and, according to well-informed persons, will oppose any increase.

It is estimated that an increase of 10 per cent in freight rates, which is the rate of increase proposed, if adopted all over the country, would add $200,000,000 a year to the earnings of the railroads. Officers of the trunk lines say that the present rates were established at a time when a large volume of traffic was being offered, and that now that business has fallen off it is impossible to show a profit on these schedules. Shippers, on the other hand, contend that this is not a good time to increase rates.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, before the Senator from Texas takes his seat, I have not had the privilege of reading the articles that he has asked to have placed in the RECORD; I understood, however, from his statement of their contents that it was shown that all this proposed increase of rates was upon application to the Interstate Commerce Commission and with the concurrence of that body, as well as with the concurrence of the President. Am I correct in that?

Mr. CULBERSON. The Senator, Mr. President, will probably recall that with reference to that particular matter I did not state what the article contained, but I read from the article itself in the New York Sun of the 21st of April, 1908, to the effect that it was intimated by the railroads that the President of the United States had agreed to this increase, and that the Interstate Commerce Commission, through the chairman, had intimated its concurrence in that movement.

Mr. FORAKER. I got the impression from what the Senator said as to the character of the articles that this had been done after full conference with the Interstate Commerce Commission. If so, I wondered that anybody who voted that the Commission should have the power to control rates should now make any complaint of the exercise of that power. At the time, almost two years ago, when we conferred the rate-making power on the Interstate Commerce Commission it was generally understood, I imagine, that they would proceed straightway to cut rates to a lower figure. But from that day until this, with the exception of an adjustment that followed immediately after the passage of the law, when some rates were reduced, the rates have been increased, whether justifiably so or not, legally so I do not doubt, if the law conferring that power on the Interstate Commerce Commission shall be upheld when it gets into court, if it ever does get into court.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio will remember that the law which was passed on the subject of rate making only authorized the Commission to fix rates upon the complaint of shippers. The suggestion which these articles contain is that the President of the United States and the Interstate Commerce Commission, in violation of existing law, propose to permit the railroads to enter into an arrangement among themselves to make a general increase in freight rates throughout the country. That is the proposition.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I wish to say as one of those——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. FORAKER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. MONEY. I am obliged to the Senator. I was about to answer the Senator as far as relates to myself. As one of those Senators who voted to commit the power of regulating interstate commerce into the hands of the Interstate Commerce Commission, it never occurred to me for a moment that that distinguished Commission would ever attempt to waive the law of the land, but would endeavor to carry it into operation, and of course it tortures my credulity to believe that the President of the United States will deliberately attempt to suspend any law, he having taken an oath to execute the laws. Consequently I can not believe the reports in the papers when they state that the President has agreed to any such thing as a combination of the railroads in this country to raise the rates and, in my opinion, to plunder the people of the States of the Union.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, the connection of the President of the United States with this matter I do not know anything about, and I have made no comment on that. I do not know whether he has any knowledge of this or not. I do not imagine that he is a party to any agreement that would be in violation of law, certainly not an agreement in violation of law to raise rates. His concern about this law was of a contrary character—that the shipper might have the benefit of reduced rates. I think everybody wanted the shippers to have the benefit of reduced rates. I know I did, and I think every other Senator here did.

But the only point to which I wanted to direct the attention of the Senator was the point I mentioned a moment ago—that we, by law, conferred upon the Interstate Commerce Commission this supervisory power with respect to rates, and, according to the express language of the statute, they can interfere with rates on complaint. They are the proper authority, therefore, to which the railroads of this country should go if they want to make any change in rates. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] interrupts me in his seat to say they are required to file the rates that they make with the Interstate Commerce Commission. Consequently they naturally go there, and if there be any necessity for the raising of rates—about which I do not know anything, but about which we see a great deal in the newspapers—it seems to me we ought not to be surprised. I do not know what the facts are, but it is quite interesting, and I am glad to have it noted that there is such a proposition under consideration.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I ask the indulgence of the Senate this morning for the purpose of presenting for consideration Senate bill 6484, entitled "A bill to establish postal savings banks for depositing savings at interest with the security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes." The bill reported by the committee proposes to subject the machinery of the Post-Office Department to an additional, worthy, beneficient, and consistent use. It does not contemplate the employment of additional force in the post-offices, the purchase of more equipment, nor the imposition of any burden of expense. It proposes, through existing machinery, to extend to the people of the United States the advantages of secure depositories wherein small savings may be deposited at a moderate rate of interest, to be repaid on demand, under regulations to be prescribed by the Postmaster-General. The departure here proposed is not without precedent in the growth of the Department, for the extension of its facilities for the benefit, convenience, and accommodation of the people has become crystallized into a settled national policy.

The Constitution vested in Congress the power to establish post-offices and post-roads and also the power to provide for the general welfare. In the exercise of its constitutional power Congress at first established the postal service within narrowly restricted limits. The carrying of letters and papers for postage and the distribution of Government documents, information, and orders over a limited area measured the scope of the service in the early days. The scope was extended gradually so as to include periodicals, books, and merchandise, and in 1855, responding to a demand for some more effective means of tracing valuable letters or packages sent through the mails, Congress established the registry service, and that system has been adhered to ever since. In 1864 Congress reached the conclusion that the general welfare would be promoted by extending to the people, through the Post-Office Department, some safe and inexpensive means of transmitting small sums of money through the mails, and for the accomplishment of that desirable end the act of Congress approved May 17, 1864, established the money-order service, which went into operation on the 1st day of October following and has since continued not only unimpaired, but liberally extended beyond the limitations prescribed in the original act.

A registry fee was prescribed for the registering of letters by the act of 1855, and a small fee was fixed for the issuance of money orders by the act of 1864. The ratio between receipts and expenditures following the respective acts referred to shows that while the business of the Department was increased in each instance to a pronounced degree, no loss was occasioned because of the extension to the people of additional facilities to aid in the transaction of business.

Later a system of city delivery was established, and within recent years mail delivery by carrier has been extended to the rural districts quite liberally. Every movement to extend the accommodations of the service over broader fields has met with determined opposition, but, in the light of experience, no one can now be found prepared to advocate repeal of the laws establishing the registry system, the money-order system, the city delivery, or the rural free delivery.

The greatest growth in postal receipts has marked the periods succeeding the extension of facilities. When postage was high and the service restricted, development was slow and generally unsatisfactory. As the service was made to reach the needs of the homes and the offices of the people, substantial response came in the form of increased demand for the service, with corresponding returns of revenue. In no department of the Government is our great national development more faithfully registered than in the growth of the Post-Office Department. In 1789 the gross revenue of the Department was only $7,510 and the gross expenditure $7,560. In 1907 the gross revenue was $183,585,005, and the gross expenditures in the same year amounted to $190,238,288. For the fiscal year 1909 the expenditures of this great Department will aggregate, in round numbers, $220,000,000.

The domestic business of the Department is transacted, outside of headquarters in Washington, in 68,000 post-offices, divided into four classes. The number of post-offices January 1, 1907, was: First class, 316; second class, 1,430; third class, 4,524, and fourth class, 57,860. In addition, there are 4,076 substations, making a grand total of 68,179 offices in which mail is received, forwarded, and distributed every working day of the week. The number of first, second, and third class offices, commonly known as "Presidential offices," was 6,721 on the 1st day of April, this year.

Connecting all the post-offices we have a system of post-roads of continental proportions—steel rails, waterways, turnpikes, dirt roads, and mountain trails—with every known transportation power from the superb steam locomotive to the Eskimo dog. This arm of the Government service is preeminently in touch with the people in all parts of the country. It has followed the trail-blazing pioneer into every nook and corner of the continent and reaches out its kindly arm to the isolated whaling schooner off Point Barrow. It connects the circumference with the center of our business world and touches every intermediate point. Through the veins and arteries of this great system the thoughts of the country are coursing, uniting and cementing together our people as no other governmental agency can unite or bind. This Department of the Government has earned and enjoys the confidence of the people everywhere. Men, even when frenzied by passion, stay the hand of destruction in the presence of the United States mail.

For more than a quarter of a century the people in all walks of life and in all sections of the country have been calling for the privilege of using the post-offices as depositories for small savings. In 1871 Postmaster-General Creswell first recommended the establishment of post-office savings banks, and in his reports for 1872 and 1873 he repeated his recommendation. In the latter year, which will be recalled as one of financial disorder, he said:

> The financial difficulties in which the country has been unexpectedly involved and which still continue to oppress it have demonstrated the necessity for some means of maintaining confidence in times of threatened disaster, and of gathering and wisely employing the immense wealth scattered among the people to prevent panic and escape the ruin which inevitably follows in its track.

In 1880 Postmaster-General Maynard approved the recommendation of his predecessor and earnestly urged the establishment of postal savings banks. In the course of his favorable report on the subject he says:

> When in London recently Her Majesty's postmaster-general kindly gave me facilities for observing the management of his department. I learned that the postal savings system had been remarkably successful and had constantly grown in popular favor. As managed in that country, it is a source of some profit to the Government. In this country I incline to the belief that the system would have advantages even greater than in a compact population like that of Great Britain.

In 1881 Postmaster-General James renewed the recommendations of his predecessors for the establishment of a system of savings depositories in connection with the Post-Office Department. In concluding his recommendations he used these words:

> It is my earnest conviction that a system of this description, if adopted, would inure more than almost any other measure of public importance to the benefit of the working people of the United States, and I commend it to the favorable consideration of Congress.

In 1882 Postmaster-General Howe, after full consideration of the recommendations of his predecessors, concurred in their conclusions in these words:

> I follow in the footsteps of many of my predecessors in this office when I invoke Congress to make one more effort to engraft upon the postal service a system of deposits for small sums. The great lesson our people need to learn is that of economy. The American people are apt to earn, but are not wise to save. The easy introduction to the art of saving is to provide a convenient and safe means of saving.

In 1889 Postmaster-General Wanamaker said:

> If the letters and arguments presented at the Department and articles in the newspapers are an evidence of interest in this subject, there is a steadily growing sentiment in favor of the Government offering through the post-offices a depository for savings. Foreign countries have for many years past extended these conveniences for the people, and good results are reported without exception.

In concluding his elaborate report on the subject for that year Mr. Wanamaker employed this language:

> With the undoubted evidence from every nation of the world, save two, that, like the United States, have not established depositories, of the excellent results of this branch of the postal service, with the agitation of this subject in this country for a quarter of a century, with the almost universal cry for it from the plain people, evidenced by letters and petitions to the Department and by the newspapers throughout the country, I urgently ask that some one in each branch of the coming Congress will study the subject and endeavor to secure favorable action upon one of the many bills presented at every session to establish postal savings depositories for the people. It is to be remarked that at this age no public man in this country seems to make a hobby of postal subjects that so closely touch the people.

In 1897 and 1898 Postmaster-General Gary added the weight of his mature judgment in favor of postal savings depositories. Prefacing a powerful argument in favor of the system, he said:

I have been interested for many years in the suggestions made by several of my predecessors in respect to postal savings depositories, and I believe that the time is ripe for their establishment in connection with other duties of this Department. The adoption of a well-organized system would, in my judgment, confer a great boon upon a large number of people and would ultimately prove of inestimable benefit to the whole country.

The earnest and able advocacy of the system by Postmaster-General Meyer is well known to all. With enthusiasm such as can only proceed from deep-seated conviction, he has not only recommended to Congress the enactment of the necessary law, but through the public press, before committees, and on the public rostrum his position on this question has been made clear.

From 1873 to 1908 bills have been introduced in every Congress, either in the Senate or in the House, or both, containing intelligent and well-considered provisions responsive to public sentiment and official recommendations. If the letters and petitions from the people and expressions from the public press in favor of the system could be assembled, a record would be made up of more formidable proportions than has voluntarily come to the support of any public measure for the last quarter of a century.

Quite successfully and with profit the postal machinery has been employed for the remittance of small sums of money and this money-order system has undoubtedly been a great aid to commerce and a distinct accommodation to the people. It has involved the handling of very large sums by the Post-Office Department, and these large sums have been so handled as to demonstrate the ability of the postmasters and clerks to transact this class of business with ease, safety, and satisfaction to all concerned.

The bill reported by the committee responds to the long continued and earnest demand of the people for the use of the post-offices as savings depositories. Its provisions are simple, and aside from administrative safeguards the bill establishes a system of postal savings depositories in each and every post-office within the United States which is authorized to issue money orders, and such others as the Postmaster-General may from time to time designate are declared to be postal savings depository offices.

To begin with, the Postmaster-General may confine the depositories to the Presidential offices only, and later extend the system to the full authorized limits.

Accounts may be opened by any person over the age of 10 years and by a trustee for a person under that age. Accounts may be opened by the deposit of $1 or more, and may be increased thereafter by the addition of 10 cents or multiples thereof.

A pass book will be delivered to the depositor in which the postmaster will enter each deposit when made and thereupon notify the Postmaster-General of the transaction. The Postmaster-General is required to send notice to the depositor on receipt of advice from the postmaster who receives the money.

No deposit shall ever be allowed to exceed the sum of $1,000, and interest will not be paid on any sum in excess of $500, nor can any deposit exceeding $200 be made during any calendar month.

Depositors are required to send their pass books to the Postmaster-General to be balanced and to have interest credited once each year as near as may be on the anniversary of the first deposit.

Interest is allowed to the depositor at the rate of 2 per cent per annum, to be computed annually on the basis of the average deposit for each quarter of the year. Deposits may be withdrawn in whole or in part under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Postmaster-General.

The Postmaster-General is required to deposit postal savings in national banks, as far as practicable, in the immediate vicinity of the place where the deposits are received. Collateral security is not required from national banks, but the postal deposit therein is made a prior lien on the resources of the bank. National banks are required to pay interest at the rate of not less than 2½ per cent per annum, and if the banks in any locality will not accept the deposits at the rate of interest specified, the Postmaster-General is authorized, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Attorney-General, to invest the unemployed funds in State, Territorial, county, or municipal bonds.

No additional compensation is allowed to postmasters or clerks, except to postmasters of the fourth class, who are paid on a commission and not a salary basis, and to them a commission of one-fourth of 1 per cent is allowed on deposits received.

Postal savings deposits are declared to be public funds and are exempt from taxation and seizure on legal process.

The passage of the bill would result in the establishment within the near future of postal depositories at the 37,684 money-order offices and substations which issue money orders. The simultaneous establishment of depositories in such a large number of offices might be attended with much difficulty, and therefore the bill provides that if the Postmaster-General deems it necessary or more practical to establish at first depositories only at money-order offices of the first, second, and third classes, he may do so and thereafter extend the system as rapidly as practicable.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator repeat that statement about these moneys being public funds?

Mr. CARTER. Postal savings are declared to be public funds and are exempt from taxation, State or national.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is to say——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I want to understand this, and I am listening with great attention to the Senator's very able speech. Do I understand that if a person deposits his savings up to a specified amount, that property is not taxed like other property?

Mr. CARTER. The deposits are not taxed, nor is any employee of the Department permitted to disclose to any person other than the depositor the amount of the deposit, the time when made, nor the conditions surrounding it, except on order of the Postmaster-General.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Why is this property exempt from taxation any more than other property?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, such property is not taxed now. It is manifest that the 50-cent and dime depositor does not submit a list for taxation.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator will understand that I do not ask this question in a hostile spirit—quite the reverse—but I merely want to get it clear in my mind.

Mr. CARTER. I will state to the Senator that the theory of the committee, when considering this feature of the bill, was that the money which it is proposed here to collect in these depositories is money that is not now listed for taxation anywhere; and further still, if the postmasters of the country were permitted to disclose to anyone the state of a given deposit, public confidence in the depository would be to that extent impaired.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CARTER. I do.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator from Montana as to whether, in his judgment, if these become public moneys, there is any law under which the Government of the United States is authorized to invest them in municipal or county or State bonds after they have become public money, in view of the fact that the Constitution provides how public money shall be disposed of?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, if this bill becomes a law, of course each and every point embraced within its provisions will be made a part of the law. These funds are declared to be public moneys, it is true; but nevertheless the fund will be a trust fund, held under all the safeguards thrown around public money by the Government for administrative purposes.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I do not find in the text of this bill any provision which distinguishes this public money in character from other public moneys, and I am unable to reconcile the idea of the investment of the public moneys of the United States in municipal bonds with the language of the Constitution.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I think if the Senator from Idaho will carefully inspect the provisions of the bill, construing all of its provisions together in so far as they relate to the disposition of the funds of the depositors, he will reach the conclusion that the declaration that these are public funds is only for the purpose of giving a certain legal character to the funds so far as process under the forms of law may be concerned. The declaration does not liquidate the obligation of the Government to the depositor, nor does it limit or circumscribe the method prescribed by law for the administration of the fund.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana further yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CARTER. I do.

Mr. HEYBURN. Is it not true that the provision of the bill declaring these moneys to be public moneys is for the purpose of exempting them from the provision of the State laws providing for attachment, garnisheeing, and so on?

Mr. CARTER. We by express terms exempt the money from garnishment or attachment under local or national law.

Mr. HEYBURN. Is it competent for the Government of the United States, or for the Congress of the United States, to take away from the State the right to enforce its laws of attachment by declaring moneys to be public moneys when, as a matter of fact, they are not to be public moneys, according to the suggestion of the Senator from Montana, except within a limited sense.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Why is it not competent legally? Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. CARTER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HEYBURN. I merely wanted to submit an inquiry to the Senator.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. In reference to the Senator's inquiry, I would ask the Senator, as a legal matter, why would it not be competent? What provision of the Constitution or anything else is there to prevent its being competent if we see fit to do so and it is a wise thing to do?

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. HEYBURN. It would not be competent for Congress to declare a State attachment law invalid or to limit its operation. That is one of the functions resting with the State—to make laws regulating individual transactions within the State. Does the Senator from Montana think Congress could say what property within a State should be subject to attachment under the State laws?

Mr. CARTER. Unquestionably Congress can exempt any property in the exclusive possession and control of the United States Government from local taxation.

Mr. HEYBURN. I recognize the general principle; but is it not true that though this becomes public money in the full sense of the word, it bears the same relation to a creditor as private funds, and could Congress enact a law that should say that private funds of one individual in a State should be exempt from attachment at the suit of another private individual?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the bill does not propose to exempt the private funds of citizens having those funds in their possession from attachment or seizure under State law. What the bill does provide is that when this money is delivered to the postmaster, it shall be no more subject to State process issued against the depositor than the money received for postage stamps is subject to State process.

Mr. du PONT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. CARTER. With much pleasure.

Mr. du PONT. I should like to ask the Senator from Montana if the money, when deposited under the provisions of this bill, would not be immediately turned over to the Treasurer of the United States? If so, how could it then be subject to attachment under any State law? It would not be within the confines of the State. Practically it would be sent to Washington.

Mr. CARTER. The Senator's question is calculated to give proper answer in so far as the actual effect of the proceeding which this bill contemplates. The money deposited in the postoffices is to be redeposited by the Postmaster-General, or under his orders, in the nearest national bank.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It being a depository.

Mr. CARTER. The banks being depositories when they are willing to pay the necessary interest.

Mr. du PONT. And the funds in the national depositories are subject to the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. CARTER. The funds would remain under the control of the Postmaster-General.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. HEYBURN. This bill does not provide that the money shall ever at any time go into the Treasury of the United States. It provides that it shall be deposited with the national banks, with the right of the national bank to place it in its general funds and to loan it and use it as it uses other moneys.

Mr. CARTER. Precisely.

Mr. HEYBURN. So that it never becomes the property of the United States.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the deposit of Government funds made in a depository becomes intermingled with the general currency resources of the bank, and is loaned out as other moneys of the bank are loaned. Certainly, the Postmaster-General in this case would be a depositor of the bank secured by a prior lien upon the resources of the bank in so far as the postal savings may be concerned.

Mr. HEYBURN. The relation between the depositor and the bank, then, is that of debtor and creditor. That is, the identity of the money is swallowed up in the deposits. Now, a creditor may be attached under State laws affecting garnishment or attachment. Can you take away that right?

Mr. CARTER. The postal depository will have no relation whatever with the national bank in which the Postmaster-General deposits the aggregate of the savings.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. BURKETT. I should like to ask the Senator if the protection afforded is not designed rather for the public official—that is, this bill proposes to protect the public official from the process of garnishment? That is why these laws are made, as I understand, to keep the public officials out of court, to prevent the Government or its representatives from getting into court. I should like to ask the Senator, then, What is the object of making and declaring this to be public money for this purpose? Congress certainly has a right, when it creates a public officer, to provide that he shall not be called into court, and if it exercises that right, you protect the depositor in that way without declaring this to be public money and without getting into the difficulty which the Senator from Idaho suggests.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, this bill contemplates a law under the provisions whereof the individual deposits in the post-offices can not, under any combination of circumstances, encounter a loss as long as the Government of the United States is solvent. We do not pretend that the Government will act as an agent in the investment of funds or their deposit in the banks. Therefore the money is, in a sense, public money the moment it reaches the hands of the postmaster, and it is so declared in order that there may be no question about the character of this money being entitled to the same respect accorded to other Government money.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The depositor of these postal savings does not make any deposit in the national bank, as I understand. It is the Postmaster-General who does that. The depositor and the national bank in which his money reposes are strangers.

Mr. CARTER. There is no privity of contract whatever between the postal depositor and the national bank in which the Postmaster-General deposits.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. They are strangers absolutely. So far as the depositor is concerned, it is in the hands of the Postmaster-General; in other words, so far as he is concerned, it is in the hands of the Government of the United States.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield further to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, it was just to develop that position that I made the inquiry first as to whether or not this was strictly public money by virtue of the declaration in this bill; and, if it was public money, whether under the Constitution the Government could invest it in municipal securities? I raised the other question merely to point that inquiry.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the Senator might be furnished innumerable illustrations with reference to the exemption of money belonging to individuals in the hands of the Government. For instance, one of the employees of the Government in this city may be indebted for an indefinite sum of money for groceries or drugs or doctor's bills or what not, and yet garnishment does not suffice to charge the officer who holds the wages of that individual in his possession. When a money order is purchased by A for the purpose of transmitting to B, in a distant city, a given sum, the money, of course, is by the process assigned to B. It is B's property in law; it can not be recalled by A unless he gets the advice of the order back; but this money in the possession of the Government can not be seized for B's debts or made chargeable with any default of his in any State. It is the money of the United States while it is in the possession of the United States. The fact that the Government is obligated ultimately to pay it out to someone else does not change its character as money belonging to the Government with which to meet a legal obligation in the manner and form prescribed by law.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. FRAZIER. Does not the effect of this bill reach to the point of establishing between the depositor and the Government of the United States the relation of creditor and debtor?

Mr. CARTER. I think that is distinctly the relation.

Mr. FRAZIER. When a citizen deposits his money with the Post-Office Department or with a postmaster the Government becomes indebted to him to the extent of that deposit?

Mr. CARTER. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. FRAZIER. Then the bill proceeds one step further, and provides that no officer of the Government shall be subject to garnishment or attachment for that debt. Is not that the effect of the bill?

Mr. CARTER. That is the effect of the bill.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the senior Senator from Montana yield to the junior Senator from Montana?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. DIXON. I do not want to disorganize the orderly proceedings of my colleague in presenting this matter; it is certainly very interesting in its theory to me, but the thing about the postal savings-bank proposition which has puzzled my mind is, under what theory of delegated or implied powers the Federal Government has the right to enter into this matter of postal savings banks. I should be glad if the Senator will take that matter up at this time or later on in his address.

Mr. CARTER. I shall be glad at this time to briefly state that, in my opinion, Congress has ample power under the general-welfare clause of the Constitution to devote any Government property or machinery it may have in its possession or under its control to such legitimate use by the people as, in the judgment of Congress, may seem proper.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is rather a broad statement.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I think the proposition as made will stand the test, even in the broad language in which I put it.

Now, if this question may for the time being be passed, I will resume.

Under the limitations referred to the Postmaster-General would be required to install the depositories within three months after the approval of the act in what are commonly known as "Presidential offices," which numbered, April 1, 1908, 6,821. This would result in the prompt establishment of postal depositories in the respective States and Territories as follows:

Alabama	92	Idaho	43
Alaska	8	Illinois	408
Arizona	25	Indiana	221
Arkansas	96	Iowa	322

It will be perceived that in the first instance depository accommodations will be extended to numerous localities now destitute of the beneficent institution this depository system will supply. When the system is ultimately extended, as it will be, to embrace all money-order offices, every village, hamlet, and town will enjoy with perfect security savings institutions equal to the best the world affords. Dwellers in remote country districts will have the same inducements to economize and save now enjoyed by those residing in the vicinity of the best conducted savings institutions in the large cities.

The incalculable benefits to the people and to the Government destined to flow from the establishment of postal depositories no one can estimate, but all can appreciate.

The world's wisest and most farseeing statesmen have realized that the establishment of government, the preservation of good order, and the well-being of society from all points of view may be best promoted by encouraging habits of industry, frugality, and thrift. A prudent, thrifty man is rarely, if ever, a delinquent citizen, and good citizenship insures good government and respect for law. That which will tend to discourage extravagance and encourage a saving disposition will surely tend to suppress vice and encourage virtue.

Again, the individual whose earnings are being safeguarded by the Government will have an added incentive to loyalty. Considerations such as these should impel us to favorably consider this measure in the interest of the Government itself, but far more powerful than the selfish governmental interest is the appeal to our sense of regard for the people upon whose shoulders the burden of government rests. Far be it from me to seek to advance this measure by appealing alone to logical historical deductions. The bill stands upon its merits as a much-needed piece of legislation, supported by sound public policy, as a perfectly consistent extension of the facilities of the Post-Office Department. But I feel warranted in calling to the attention of the Senate the potent influence of savings institutions in uplifting mankind, advancing civilization, with insuring stability of government among men.

It is only about one hundred and thirty years ago that certain philanthropists commenced an agitation in Europe for the establishment of banking institutions to induce the laboring people and the poor generally to save their earnings. The first savings bank was established at Hamburg in 1788, and the first institution of that kind known in this country was established at Philadelphia in 1816. These savings institutions had their origin in the desire of public-spirited men to promote and encourage thrift amongst the poor people. The banks were organized without capital, and the directors served without compensation, thus yielding to the depositors the entire increment excepting only necessary disbursements for clerical aid.

Many savings institutions—indeed, I believe the majority of the savings banks in New England—are still conducted on this philanthropic basis. In due time the stock company entered the field under the name of "savings bank." The new departure involved the subordination of the interests of the depositor to the interests of the stockholder and to that extent did violence to the benevolent theory upon which the savings bank was originally projected.

While in the main incorporated companies have been honestly and fairly conducted, failures have been sufficiently numerous to shake and often to destroy public confidence in their integrity and solvency; but notwithstanding the shocks caused by failures, the potent fact remains that the communities in which savings banks have been adequate and well conducted have developed financial power and civic virtue far greater than in similar communities to which such savings institutions have been unknown.

Disclaiming any purpose to discredit any other agency, I call attention to the significant fact that the toiling masses of mankind have made more wholesome and elevating progress since the savings banks became established institutions than these same masses ever made during any like period of time in the world's history.

For over fifty years the common people of Great Britain, impressed with the usefulness but inadequacy of savings banks, conducted an agitation in favor of postal savings depositories, whereby the people in all parts of the United Kingdom might enjoy the same advantages accorded the small minority residing within easy reach of the existing banks. Finally, under the leadership of Mr. Gladstone, in 1861, yielding to the irresistible pressure of public opinion, in face of a storm of opposition from the financial centers, Parliament passed the postal savings-bank law, which has since become the basis of legislation on the subject in all the countries of the world with few exceptions, of which unhappily our own is one.

In rapid succession the postal savings system was adopted by France, Austria, Russia, Italy, Belgium, Holland, the Netherlands, Sweden, Japan, New South Wales, Cape Colony, New Zealand, Hawaii, Bulgaria, Egypt, Canada, and others.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator state what, if any, interest is paid by each of these countries? Perhaps he has it further along in his address, and, if so, I will not disturb him now. I should like to know whether they pay any interest, and if so, what?

Mr. CARTER. The interest runs from 2½ to 4 per cent in the countries now operating the system. Under some of the laws which I have examined the executive authority is permitted to change the rate of interest from time to time. But in the main the rate is fixed by law, and ranges, on the average, from 2½ to 3½ per cent.

Mr. McCUMBER. All pay interest?

Mr. CARTER. All pay interest, without exception. There is another feature with reference to the foreign postal banks to which I wish to refer, and that is the use of the money. In the main the governments use the money for governmental purposes and pay interest to the people.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator will pardon me, why would it not be far better for the Government to take that money, on which it is paying 2 per cent interest, and pay off its bonded indebtedness, rather than to take the same money and loan it out again at 2½ per cent interest?

Mr. CARTER. The Senator knows what a difficult question would be raised by an attempt to have this bill enacted with a provision for the prompt retirement of Government obligations. I think we would have more difficulty in getting over that point than in meeting all the other objections we are likely to encounter.

Mr. McCUMBER. That means, if I understand the Senator aright, that we must have Government bonds in order to have the means to secure our banking issues.

Mr. CARTER. Yes, sir. I think the Senator——

Mr. McCUMBER. In other words, we must always have a national debt, unless we change the whole monetary system.

Mr. CARTER. The whole monetary system must be changed before Government bonds are paid off, unless we desire to retire the national-bank circulation.

Germany alone of all the great European powers has failed to adopt the postal savings system, not because its recognized virtue is questioned, but because municipal savings banks, conducted by the municipalities of the Empire, respond to the people's needs. In no country where the postal savings-bank system has been established has failure marked its way, and in no instance has a backward step been taken. The strength of the banks in the various countries and the widespread diffusion of their beneficent influences may be better understood by reference to a table prepared from data on file in our Post-Office Department with reference to certain of the postal savings banks from 1904 to 1906, showing the number of depositors in each case, the aggregate amount of the deposits, and the average deposit to the credit of each individual. This table, with the permission of the Senate, I will insert in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

New Zealand	Dec., 1905	276,066	42,153,735	152.69

These figures are worthy of very close consideration. Note, for instance, that in 1906 the postal savings banks of Japan had 6,658,758 depositors, with an aggregate deposit of $33,713,037, or an average to the credit of each depositor of $5.06. Does anyone suppose that this vast sum of money would find its way into the channels of business and trade through any other agency than the postal savings bank? The small deposits are made, in the main, by persons who feel perfectly at home in the country post-office, but very much out of place in the elaborately decorated and splendidly equipped commercial bank. It is probably not unreasonable to assume that $30,000,000 of the sum total of the postal savings deposits of Japan would be buried or otherwise hidden away so as to be of no use whatever to the business of the country, in the absence of the system.

In every country where these savings institutions have been established they have resulted not only to the advantage of those who, through opportunity furnished, are induced to save, but they have gathered up and made available the latent cash resources of the country which would otherwise be dormant and useless. Still, in the presence of a world-wide demonstration of success and a demand for this legislation from all parts of the United States, there are some financiers and statesmen who present objections and arguments, through the public press and other sources, in opposition to the postal savings system.

Some of the objections urged I beg leave to briefly review. First, it is said that postal savings depositories would savor of paternalism. To this suggestion I answer that by the same token the whole business of the Post-Office Department may be deemed paternalistic. It is an enormous establishment, conducting probably the largest strictly cash business in the country, to enable the people to correspond with each other, to secure newspapers and periodicals from a distance and have the same delivered at their homes and places of business. But it seems needless to discuss the paternalistic objection at a session of Congress which will pass appropriations for stocking the streams of the country with fish, testing the quality of soils, measuring the currents of streams, for examination of trees and other plant life, and hundreds of other kindred items for which the public money is being wisely appropriated to promote the general welfare.

Again, says our objecting friend: "You will next want the Government to buy the railroads and the telegraph lines." To this objection a full answer may be found in the assurance that we do not propose to buy anything in the form of a public utility under this bill. We only propose to devote that which the Government now has in service to the use of the people along lines in perfect harmony and accord with the uses to which the machinery is at present devoted.

Second, it is alleged by way of opposition that whatever can be done by private enterprise as well as by the Government should never be embraced within the scope of Government activity. This leads us to inquire whether or not the thing we seek to accomplish through the postal savings system can be as well accomplished by private enterprise to any reasonable extent. I allege on the strength of recorded facts and well-known experience, that private enterprise never has, and I aver that private enterprise never can furnish to the people of the United States on anything approximating equal terms the facilities offered by this bill. The report of the Comptroller of the Currency for 1907 shows that there are only 1,415 savings depositories in the United States. The table from that report I will insert, with the permission of the Senate, as a part of my remarks.

[a] Partially estimated.
[b] Includes 12 banks in 1906 and 11 in 1907 in process of liquidation.
[c] Unofficial.
[d] Included in abstract of State banks having savings departments.

The table is not complete, but I assume that there were not over 1,500 savings banks in the whole country at the close of the last fiscal year. Substantially three-fourths of these banks are located in the Eastern and Middle States, and even in these favored States whole counties and even Congressional districts are destitute of savings institutions of any kind; but if the banks were equally distributed over the country, they would only supply one savings depository for approximately every 60,000 of the population. This would be well enough in thickly populated centers, but in the rural districts present conditions would be little improved by the attempt to distribute such limited facilities over our extended territory.

The effort to supply to the people through private enterprise the widely distributed depositories represented by money-order post-offices would involve an initial expenditure prohibitive in amount.

Third. It is urged that the Government should keep out of the banking business. In reply to this objection, I assert that by no rational construction can the postal depository system provided by the pending bill be regarded as a banking business. Deposits are limited as to aggregate amount and calendar months. No payments are made on check, but only on the application of the depositor under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Postmaster-General. Exchange is neither bought nor sold, bills are not discounted, and money is not loaned except in so far as a deposit in a national bank at a stipulated rate of interest may be considered a loan.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Montana out of what fund the Government would pay these demands, it having already disposed of the money received from the depositor?

Mr. CARTER. The money would be deposited in national banks subject to call, of course; and every day in the year the Government would have on deposit every dollar received at a post-office.

Mr. HEYBURN. It does not seem to me that the provisions of this bill, having made these public moneys and allowed them to be deposited in the banks, would leave the Government free to check against its credit in the banks, the relation of debtor and creditor having been established. Out of what fund would the Government pay these demands?

Mr. CARTER. Out of the funds to the credit of the Postmaster-General in the banks in which he had deposited those funds.

Mr. HEYBURN. Suppose the money was invested as is provided, in bonds, in this bill? Suppose the banks decline to make a forced loan, bearing 2½ per cent interest, and the Government was obliged to invest it; then, out of what fund would the Government pay these depositors?

Mr. CARTER. The Senator will observe that the bill provides that only the unemployed funds, funds that can not be made to bear the legal rate of interest by depositing banks, shall be invested in bonds. I expect that in the operation of the law every dollar of money taken in at the post-offices will be deposited by the Postmaster-General in the banks, except in times of currency redundancy, when the banks may not desire to pay the interest. But the interest paid on current balances at New York and other financial centers amounts on the average to about 2 per cent. These balances are likely to be drawn down at the very time the New York banks need the money most. It is not so with the postal-savings banks deposits. They would be most reliable and steady deposits, because when the people became frightened, they would more freely deposit in the postal savings banks and in consequence the postal savings deposits would increase rather than diminish in seasons of financial peril.

Mr. HEYBURN. Has the Senator estimated the probable extent or amount of deposits, say at the end of one or two years?

Mr. CARTER. I can only approximate of course, and the approximation would be inspired somewhat by the experience of Great Britain. The deposits have grown steadily, and last year, I believe on the 1st day of January, the deposits in the postal savings banks of the United Kingdom—England, Ireland, Scotland, and Wales—amounted to $950,000,000 in round numbers, and the average deposit of individuals was $72 and some cents. Upon that theory I imagine the deposits in the United States, where, of course, the rates of interest are higher and the opportunities for general investment more inviting, might not amount to the large proportions of the deposits in England. But I think they would run up to several hundred million dollars within a very few years.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to suggest this conclusion as it occurs to my mind. Then this would result in an additional accumulation in the national banks of the country of a thousand million dollars, in round figures, running sometimes above that amount and sometimes below. A thousand million dollars would be added to the deposits in the national banks of the country through this system.

Mr. CARTER. That is what the Senator assumes. I think we would be a long time in reaching $500,000,000 of deposits in the postal savings banks of the country.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have seen it stated—and the statment was alleged to be based upon the opinion of the Postmaster-General—that the deposits would run about $750,000,000.

I am not opposed to postal savings banks, but I only, in the beginning of the consideration of this legislation, am endeavoring to throw out some thoughts and to make some inquiries that may be useful in perfecting the legislation, and it would be shortsighted policy for us to take for granted that we have arrived at the ultimate wisdom upon the first consideration. The bill is carefully drawn and contains many points comprehensive in themselves; but they all seem to me to lose sight of the difference between the relation of a constitutional government, such as is ours, to the people and the relation that exists between a monarchy or other character of government to its people.

If it does not tax the patience of the Senator, I should like very early in the consideration of this question to submit these inquiries for consideration.

Mr. CARTER. The Senator from Montana, and I am sure every other member of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, will gladly welcome the wise counsel of the Senator from Idaho.

A national or other bank in any town in the country may conduct its operations without encountering any opposition whatever from the postal depositories. Nay, on the contrary, the depository will be a sustaining force behind the banks and an efficient agency in making available for current use all the unemployed cash in the neighborhood.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. I want to ask a question right along this line. The amount allowed to be deposited by any one individual during a year is $1,000, as I understand the bill.

Mr. CARTER. That is the maximum that an individual may ever deposit or ever have to his credit at any one time.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is the same thing. That would permit every member of a family to deposit $1,000 a year. A family of five could therefore deposit, if they thought it to their advantage, $5,000 in the postal savings banks, on which 2 per cent interest would be paid.

Mr. CARTER. On not to exceed $500.

Mr. McCUMBER. In other words, the other $500 would draw no interest. Is that the provision?

Mr. CARTER. That is the provision.

Mr. McCUMBER. Suppose we reduce this, and say it would be $2,500 for an ordinary family of five. I want to know what effect it is going to have upon the charges of the banks. We will take it especially in the smaller towns, where the deposits may go to the post-offices. The post-offices will transfer it, undoubtedly, to a bank in the same city. The bank has to pay 2½ per cent interest. Will not this have some tendency to raise the interest-bearing rates of that bank 2½ per cent or at least a certain amount in order to meet the extra charges that it has to pay for its deposits?

To explain that, if the Senator will allow me a moment, I agree with him that if the effect will be simply to gather into the channels of trade the dimes, the nickels, the pennies, the little amounts that the child deposits in his toy savings bank, there would be no difficulty and nothing but good could result. But I have a little fear that it might be utilized for the deposit of large sums of money to such an extent as would make the money bring in a certain amount—2 per cent—from the Government, and, the same money being transferred into the bank, the bank raises its rate 2 per cent or 2½ per cent to meet what it has to pay, and the public in the end will pay the greater amount. The deposits might be made by the very men who own the stock in that bank and who will receive their money first from the Government, and then again, in the added account, it would be balanced by the extra charges that would be made to the bank. I may be entirely in error, and as I am one of the Senators who wants to be converted to this doctrine, I will ask the Senator to present it in as favorable a position as he can.

Mr. CARTER. I am much obliged to the Senator, Mr. President, for the privilege.

First, what inducement, if any, would exist for the owners of a national bank to make their deposits in a post-office at 2 per cent interest and have the money returned to the bank at 2½ per cent?

Mr. McCUMBER. The owner of the stock.

Mr. CARTER. The owner of the stock would not deposit at 2 per cent at the post-office if he could get at the bank 2½ per cent or as good a rate as the postmaster could give him.

The question of the concentration of large amounts of money bearing interest drawn in the manner suggested by the Senator the committee had under rather prayerful consideration. It was the desire to avoid a congestion or centralization of the country's money at the national capital. Therefore, we provide that the money received in a post-office in a locality shall be deposited in a bank in that locality as near as practicable.

We apprehended that in time of panic individuals might be inclined to burden the Post-Office Department with large deposits without interest for the mere purposes of temporary security. To avoid such a result as that, the bill was made to provide that no person could deposit more than $200 in any one calendar month. No one can draw interest on over $500; and in no event can more than $1,000 appear to the credit of any depositor.

Now, in reference to the size these accounts are likely to reach, experience in other countries ought to be instructive. Japan has the lowest average savings-bank account per capita, five dollars and a fraction. The average of all the countries will not exceed $50 per capita. This seems to indicate that in the normal conduct of this kind of business at a low rate of interest we would only secure deposits from persons who feel some doubt about the solvency of banks or can not reach the banks readily.

Many persons have been led to believe that the postal savings system would tend to concentrate all the loose money in the country at the national capital. A cursory examination of the bill will supply ample refutation of this current error. It is sufficient to call attention to the provision which requires the Postmaster-General to deposit postal savings in national banks as near as may be in the immediate neighborhood where such deposits are received. The incalculable value of this provision in a time of financial disturbance must be plain to every experienced person. As a rule, small depositors first become alarmed in times of financial disturbance, and as in such cases a small aggregate amount of money calls into the street in front of the bank a large number of persons, panic spreads, large depositors become alarmed, and suspension of a solvent institution is thus not infrequently brought about. Now, if in the community the postal savings depository exists, the small depositors would by choice patronize the Government depository, and patrons of the bank, frightened into withdrawing their money, would not carry it about on their persons nor hide it in a hedge, but would go straightway to the post-office and deposit it with the postmaster, who, at the close of the day, would return the deposit to the bank from which it had been withdrawn by the individual. "Ah, hold on!" says the friend of the savings bank. "This all works out well enough for the national banks, but what of the effect on the private savings banks of the country? Will not their deposits be transferred to the postal depositories?"

To those, who through motives of benevolence, and without pay, are conducting the old style savings bank, it appears that such transfer would be mere exemption from responsibility. Nearly all the savings banks of New England, New York, and Pennsylvania are of the old style, organized without capital and maintained, professedly, at least, for the sole benefit of the depositors. But will the apprehended transfer occur? To begin with, the Government rate of interest is much less than interest paid by savings banks in all parts of the country, and unless human nature changes very radically, we are justified in assuming that a properly conducted savings bank which jealously guards its credit and good name will have nothing to fear from the small-interest-paying depository.

Again, according to my information, the regular savings banks have enjoyed a healthy development in all the countries in which the postal savings banks have been established. It must be borne in mind that savings banks are only located under the patronage of private individuals at well-selected points, to the neglect of the great majority of the people who do not reside within easy reach of such inviting centers. How can the trustees of a well-located savings bank be patiently heard to deny to the millions upon millions of people who can not avail themselves of the advantages of these institutions because, forsooth, some of their patrons might elect to accept from the Government a lower rate of interest? And yet it is true that the chief opposition to the establishment of postal savings depositories everywhere has originated in the fear of competition with existing concerns. Even the commercial banks have feared the competition. Undoubtedly a bill might be drawn which would make the postal competition dangerous to the progress of private enterprises, but the pending bill will be found upon inspection to dedicate the use of the postal machinery for savings purposes only under such conditions as to secure the public good without invading the domain of any legitimate financial institution.

I say legitimate, because I believe that wherever a private bank is recklessly or carelessly conducted the people would avail themselves more liberally of the privilege of the postal savings depository, but in such case the depository would merely be a substitute for a hiding place.

Financial institutions resting on solid foundations and blessed with honest and prudent management need not indulge in gloomy forebodings over the advent of any system destined to call into active service hundreds of millions of the idle money of the country. No man worthy of a director's place in any sound bank will on mature reflection oppose any system conceived in a desire to promote habits of thrift and economy amongst the toiling millions of our countrymen, who under present conditions have no safe and convenient means of conserving their meager weekly or monthly surplus earnings.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Senator says that postal savings banks will operate as an assistant or give added strength to the national-bank system. Did I understand him correctly?

Mr. CARTER. Yes, sir; they would strengthen the whole financial system of the country.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I have not yet heard the Senator say whether it would prove harmful or helpful to the savings banks operated under State law with as complete supervision as the national banks under the national authority. I am very much interested to know whether this proposition would prove ruinous to the savings banks of the country, now an important part of our commercial life, incorporated under State law, and with limited powers and under very strict supervision.

Mr. CARTER. In reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Michigan, I advance the view that whatsoever results in keeping in active use and service all of the money of the country is a benefit to all the interests of the country. As to competition with the State savings banks or those organized under State law, this may be said: First, the rate of interest here provided is smaller than is paid in any State bank. The facilities furnished by the regular State savings banks will be in many regards more advantageous to the average depositor.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The interest may be less, but the risk is smaller under the proposed system.

Mr. CARTER. There is no risk to the postal depositor, and the banks will suffer to the extent that their management permits any appearance of risk to exist.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. There is always risk. There must be risk in every business undertaking.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the majority of business men take risks. We want the bill passed for the purpose of drawing into active operation and useful service the dollars of the people who doubt the banking institutions and refuse to deposit in any bank.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. Is it not the central idea of the plan that through this system you gather up a lot of money from a class of depositors who would not keep their money in banks nor deposit it at all, but who keep it in their stockings; that it would be gathered up through this process and then be put into the channels of circulation?

Mr. CARTER. Most assuredly.

Mr. NELSON. Is not that the central idea?

Mr. CARTER. It is the central idea. I am very glad the Senator from Minnesota brought it out. Last year the immigrants from Italy, where a most excellent postal savings-bank system exists, sent in money orders over $19,000,000 from the United States to be deposited in their home savings banks, where they know the Government is behind the depository.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana will kindly suspend for a moment. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. R. 74) suspending the commodity clause of the present interstate-commerce law.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from Montana will proceed.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, again, not only do foreigners residing in this country send their earnings back to be deposited at small interest in their home savings banks, but our own people in the United States have actually fallen into the habit all over the country of buying post-office money orders, paying the commission for their issuance, holding the money in idleness for a year, and then repeating the process at the end of the year, for no other reason in the world than to be secured in the principal, for which, of course, in most cases, they had worked hard and probably at low wages.

The institution here proposed would reach that class of people who will not deposit in any bank; and let me say to the Senate that most of the people who would freely deposit in the post-offices would be rather dangerous depositors for a commercial bank to have, because persons having but small deposits become quickly excited, assemble in large numbers, and they are a peril to solvent institutions when acting upon mere floating rumor.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. From the description of the Senator from Montana, that class of depositors exactly meets the situation that we experienced in our own State in the recent panic. If the bill will take care of the senseless rumor-monger who doubts the stability of all banks and withdraws his money on the slightest provocation, then I see no objection to it; but if it operates unfairly against the State banks, it seems to me it ought to be amended so as to be least harmful to present established business.

Mr. CARTER. It has been the disposition of the committee at all times in the consideration of this bill to so circumscribe the operations of the proposed law as to avoid competition and to strengthen rather than to impair existing financial institutions.

Mr. President, in line with the suggestion made by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], a similar illustration may be found down in the Treasury Department. Perchance one-third of all the money in the United States is constantly in hiding somewhere. People are afraid to deposit it, and not being possessed of enough to invest, they spend freely or secrete their hoarded surplus.

In the northeastern part of the Treasury Department there is an old lady, venerable in appearance and long in service there, who is endeavoring each and every day to decipher the figures upon partially destroyed money which has been burned. She said to me some time ago that she could tell the advance of the early frost, beginning in Maine and going south to Florida, by the kind of remittances that came in supported by affidavits for the redemption of partially burned money. The old lady or the old man deposits money in the stove, in the ashes underneath the waste paper. Then there is a sprig of evergreen put through the door and the thing is an ornament. When the first frost comes, if the old man who made the deposit is not there the old lady touches a match to the kindling in order to heat up the room and the money is burned. The father on his return makes an affidavit and sends down what is left of the currency and tries to get the Government to give him something for it. It is possible that the amount of money concealed in the stoves of the country would prevent a panic in the summer time at many a small financial center.

Even in the comparatively few places where banks are accessible, those for whom this bill would provide an inviting opportunity would feel ill at ease in presenting a deposit of 10, 20, 30, or even 50 cents to a receiving teller surrounded by bronze fixtures and marble walls. Everybody feels at home in the post-office, but in the banks it is different. The awkward urchin from the country is at home with the postmaster and would proudly deposit a dollar or a dime with him, but the banker is of another world beyond the horizon of the boy. The toilers everywhere regard the post-office as common ground, where Uncle Sam presides and everybody is welcome. It is the people's meeting place, and distinctions are there unknown. To-day their mail is received and delivered and their remittances are forwarded; to-morrow we would have the service extended to receipt of the surplus earnings of the day, the week, or the month, with a guaranty of small interest and safe return on demand.

To those engaged in business ventures, the prospect of handsome profit fairly counterbalances the burden of possible loss; but what reflection, I pray, is to compensate the laboring man whose meager savings are swept away in a bank failure? He had no prospect of gain, but only a chance for loss. The bank failures of this country have done more to breed reckless spending and dangerous unrest in the minds of well-disposed, struggling men than we can well realize. The business man who suffers by a bank failure may philosophically regard himself as a loser in that part of the game, but the working man or woman, boy or girl, suffering loss in such a way is an innocent victim of a system for which the Government should furnish a substitute, and the pending bill gives us that substitute. The most pathetic scenes ever witnessed on the earth cluster about the doors of a suspended bank in which the hard-earned savings of the struggling poor are held in jeopardy. Conscious of self-denial long endured adds darker hues to visions of undeserved poverty in store. The Government that willfully refuses the use of its available machinery to relieve the toiling multitudes from the recurrence of such calamities has little cause to complain of the growth of anarchy.

To me the duty of the Government appears plain and unmistakable. Long experience has demonstrated that private institutions have not responded to the public needs in this direction, and the merest academic knowledge of geographical divisions and the course of the country's settlement will force anyone irresistibly to the conclusion that no agency can ever be devised to furnish the people such widely distributed, splendidly organized, and satisfactory facilities for the accumulation of small savings as the post-offices of the country may promptly supply without any tax whatever on the postal revenues.

The recent financial crisis has given birth to many theories, and numerous panic antidotes have been presented to Congress. Some of the measures proposed are novel, all more or less experimental, and many of them are confessedly but temporary makeshifts. The measure I advocate is not novel; it is not experimental, nor is it in any sense a makeshift. Forty-seven years of trial in Great Britain, supplemented by briefer periods of operation in practically all the countries of Europe, must certainly be regarded as a sufficient demonstration of utility.

The postal savings system has furnished financial ballast for every country in which it has been adopted, and in my humble judgment it would do infinitely more to stay the return of panic and give stability to the finances of this country than any measure that has been accorded the serious consideration of Congress during the session.

In answer to a demand repeated over and over again by the American people for more than forty years, supplemented by the deliberate judgment of every Postmaster-General who has given the subject serious consideration since 1871, and in harmony with the recommendation of the President of the United States, the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads has reported this bill to the Senate. Profoundly impressed with the view that sound public policy and just regard for the interests of all the people require that the bill should be enacted into law, I shall earnestly urge and will confidently expect a favorable vote on the measure in the near future.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, when the Senator from Montana was asked to what power of the Constitution he placed this postal savings bank, I thought he answered quite correctly. Some Senators around me seemed to think he gave a somewhat liberal interpretation, and therefore I wish to put in the RECORD at this point a very famous passage from a very famous decision, in which it is said:

> We admit, as all must admit, that the powers of the Government are limited, and that its limits are not to be transcended. But we think the sound construction of the Constitution must allow to the National Legislature that discretion, with respect to the means by which the powers it confers are to be carried into execution, which will enable that body to perform the high duties assigned to it in the manner most beneficial to the people. Let the end be legitimate, let it be within the scope of the Constitution, and all means which are appropriate, which are plainly adapted to that end, which are not prohibited, but consist with the letter and spirit of the Constitution, are constitutional. (McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheaton, 420.)

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. WARREN. I desire to call up the agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to say to the Senator from Wyoming that to-morrow will probably be the last pension day in the House to consider Senate pension bills. We have but one of the omnibus bills in the Senate, and if it can be passed to-day it can go over to the House and be disposed of to-morrow. It will probably not take three minutes to pass it, and I hope the Senator from Wyoming will yield to me under the exigencies of those conditions to call up the bill. It is only one of a number on the Calendar, but it is a Senate bill.

Mr. WARREN. I had said that I should object to the consideration of any other bill. I am willing to yield for this purpose, as the Senator says it will not take more than three minutes; but I shall be compelled, if it leads to any debate, to ask for the regular order.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6987) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to pension at the rate stated per month the following persons:

Philip Liebrick, late of Company I, First Regiment New Jersey Infantry, and pay him a pension of $24.

William R. Tinker, late of Company M, Eighth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension of $40.

Frank M. Becker, late of Company I, Third Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $30.

Flora A. Knight, widow of John A. Knight, late of Company E, Sixth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension of $12.

Abraham Walk, late of Company C, First Battalion, Eleventh Regiment United States Infantry, and pay him a pension of $30.

Mattie Allen, widow of William Allen, late of Company I, One hundred and seventy-seventh Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension of $12.

James Jones, late surgeon's steward, U. S. S. Princeton and Princess Royal, United States Navy, and pay him a pension of $30.

Herman Greager, late of Company E, Fourth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $40.

David H. Norris, late of Company E, Eleventh Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $24.

Thomas Kidd, late of Company K, One hundred and fifty-third Regiment Ohio National Guard Infantry, and pay him a pension of $24.

John L. Middleton, late of Company F, One hundred and tenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and Company F, Seventeenth Regiment United States Veteran Reserve Corps, and pay him a pension of $24.

Adam F. Broyles, late sergeant-major Fourth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $24.

Charles Oliver Brown, late of Company C, Third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension of $24.

Theron W. Haight, late of Company K, Twenty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $30.

John G. Wheeler, late of Company F, Third Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension of $30.

Michael A. Leahy, late captain Company D, Thirty-fifth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $40.

Sarah A. Cooley, widow of Joseph W. Cooley, late first lieutenant Company D, Twenty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, and Company D, First Regiment New York Provisional Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension of $17.

Joseph Moore, late of Company A, First Regiment Delaware Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension of $24.

Edward B. Louderbough, late of Company F, Ninth Regiment Delaware Volunteer Infantry, civil war, and pay him a pension of $24.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I am obliged to the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] for his courtesy.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 179) amending the joint resolution for the relief of storm sufferers in Alabama, Georgia, Mississippi, and Louisiana, approved April 30, 1908, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

RELIEF OF STORM SUFFERERS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 179) amending the joint resolution for the relief of storm sufferers in Alabama, Georgia, Mississippi, and Louisiana, approved April 30, 1908, which was read twice by its title.

Mr. FRAZIER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

The Secretary read the joint resolution; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It provides that the provisions and benefits of public resolution No. 17, for the relief of storm sufferers in Alabama, Georgia, Mississippi, and Louisiana, approved April 30, 1908, be extended to the sufferers from the same storm or cyclone in Texas, Arkansas, and Tennessee, and that the Secretary of War be authorized and directed to grant the same relief to persons in Texas, Arkansas, and Tennessee whose property was injured or destroyed, as provided in the original resolution for citizens of Alabama, Georgia, Mississippi, and Louisiana.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I now ask that House bill 19158, being the agricultural appropriation bill, be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 19158) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN].

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, I listened with great interest to the remarks of the eloquent Senator from Idaho when this bill was last under discussion. He illuminates every subject which he touches, but some of us are compelled to differ with him upon his premises, his facts, and his conclusions. If we were back at the time when the country was all forests and wilderness and there were few settlements, his argument would be most impressive, but even under such conditions the flaw in it is that as scientific forestry is now understood and practiced the early settlers, instead of sweeping off the woods with reckless haste and waste, would have preserved a portion of them for the benefit of themselves and their posterity, both in wood supply and for water.

There are few subjects upon which the American people are so keenly alive as this one of forestry. I do not believe there is any branch of the Government where the appropriation commands more general approbation. The forests on the public domain are an estate belonging to the whole people of the United States. The cost of their houses and food largely depends in the future upon scientific forestry. It has been our habit always to get all possible out of the present without reckoning the future. We nearly killed off our game and exterminated our song birds and insect-destroying birds for sport before we became alive to the necessity of their preservation.

We had reduced the fish in our rivers to a point where this food was no longer available at prices which brought it within reach of the people before we adopted a system of fish hatcheries. In some of the rivers when shad was thus propagated the fishermen, who thought the price might be reduced by an abundance of fish, attempted to assassinate the commissioners of the State. Within our recent memory we have been depleting the forests of the country. It has been done by the most wasteful methods. The business has made some of the largest of multimillionaire fortunes. Now, in the older States, tree planting is considered as necessary for agriculture or for profit as tree cutting in the olden time was essential for the clearings.

The State of New York has within the last few years spent nearly two millions of dollars in purchasing what remained of primeval forests in the Adirondack region. They were being so rapidly depleted by wasteful lumbering that the effect was already disastrous upon the navigation of the rivers, water for the canals, irrigation of the farms, and the prevention of floods. It was only day before yesterday that a shipment of a million trees arrived in New York City from Germany in this movement to reforest the Adirondack region.

We have in the United States now a supply of timber sufficient only for the next thirty years. When we consider the economical uses of wood this is appalling. It will be a serious blow to the poor man seeking to secure a home and independence when his material must be either steel, brick, or concrete. The cost then becomes prohibitive. Already hard wood for furniture and domestic purposes has so risen in price as to prove a serious tax upon the homes of the American people. Every tree that is cut down for ties for the railroad requires two growing ones to replace it, and forests are cut from year to year to supply the tremendous demands of our 200,000 miles of railroads. Every one of our great dailies exhaust in a short time 10 acres of spruce cut for wood pulp. There is no doubt that if our forests were thrown open as heretofore a few great lumber companies would make enormous fortunes, but at an expense to the whole people of the United States in generations to come which would be a thousandfold more than the fortunes thus accumulated in one generation to be dissipated in another.

Mr. Cleveland, who did many things in his Administration for which he will receive the praise of posterity, commenced the policy of forest reserves. He placed under the protection of the Government about 20,000,000 acres, but for several years there was no policy of administration for the forests. On the contrary, they were practically locked up. This left them subject to forest fires and timber thieves. Unpopularity of this isolation of a product of public necessity led whole communities to condone the stealing of the wood. In 1898 Mr. Gifford Pinchot was asked to take the head of a Bureau of Forestry. He was at that time the only thoroughly educated and experienced forester in the United States. There were only two others besides himself who had ever given attention or study to the business. He was, happily, so situated as to independence that he could lay aside careers which were open to him in the professional and business world, where large accumulations might have been had, to devote his time, talents, and experience to the public service. This he has done for ten years with astonishing and most beneficent results. When he took up the work the United States had but 40,000,000 acres of this locked-up and unadministered forests. Now there are one hundred and fifty millions, but so managed that the public of the whole country are deriving inestimable benefits from their preservation and use. Mr. Pinchot, as a profound student of this question, had not only learned methods and results in older countries, but experimented practically upon the estate of a gentleman who was deeply interested in the preservation of the woods.

It is an illuminating experience for an American to travel over the continent of Europe and to see the care and scientific skill with which governments there look after the woods. I know of communities in Germany where the forests, owned in common by the municipality, pay the entire taxes by their annual yield under a system by which they are kept unimpaired. Happily for Switzerland, the early inhabitants, over a thousand years ago, saw the effects upon their hillsides and valleys of the destruction of the forests. After visiting deforested mountain sides and devastated valleys in the Uinted States, it is a liberal education to see the Swiss mountains cultivated up to the snow line, the farmhouses perched so high that they look like fairy cabins in the air, and the trees so growing as to catch and hold the rainfall and the water from the melting snow. Except for this intelligent care Switzerland would today be uninhabitable, these farms would long ago have disappeared from the mountain sides, the valley farms would have been destroyed by torrents, and the streams rendered useless by the uneven fall of the water. There is almost as much care in Switzerland, Germany, and France of the tree as there is of a human being to prevent injury or to punish injury.

These countries not only keep their forests up to a full state of efficiency and replacement, but they derive an income of from $3 to $5 an acre from them. There was more wastefulness of the forest in France than in any other of the European countries; but in repairing this France has been spending about $50,000,000 in reforestation. During the last year the floods destroyed in some departments of France twenty-five to thirty millions of property and ruined thousands of families. The French have found that this was wholly due to cutting the trees from the hillsides, and it has led to an enormous increase of efforts for reforestation.

I had occasion at one time to study the Appalachian situation in our own country, and I came to the conclusion that with the deforesting of the Appalachian Mountains, which has already taken place, there has been a loss along the rivers which find their sources in these hills of more than $20,000,000 a year.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. DEPEW. Certainly.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Let me suggest to the Senator that not only are floods caused by deforestation, but the floods are succeeded by droughts, which destroy the navigability of the streams.

Mr. DEPEW. That is absolutely true. The droughts not only destroy the navigability of the streams, but the streams are filled up.

One of the greatest triumphs, in my judgment, of Mr. Pinchot and of his able assistants has been that he has captured the intelligent lumbermen of the country. The lumbermen of the country see already the necessity of the work he is doing. I think it was at the last meeting of the Lumber Association of the United States that they passed resolutions to endow a chair of forestry in one or more of the universities of the country. Of course there are some great interests that are still opposed to this forest-reserve policy—and those great interests are sustained by honest, well-meaning, and intelligent people——

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. DEPEW. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I dislike to interrupt the Senator——

Mr. DEPEW. It is all right.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. But for my personal information I should like to be advised as to what the great interests are and of whom they are composed that are opposing the forest policy?

Mr. DEPEW. I understand that many of the great sheep interests are opposed to the forest policy, and I understand that many of the cattle raisers are opposed to the forest policy, and I understand that many lumber companies—and they have come into these forests in spite of everybody and everything—are opposed to the forestry policy.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator, however, would not attempt to specialize as to what lumber interests are in favor of the policy and what lumber interests are opposing it?

Mr. DEPEW. No; I would not do that; but I know human nature and how it works, and I know how it has worked in the past. I call the Senator's attention especially to how the lumber interests have worked when they have had their own sweet will, unrestricted by the Government or by anything but their own judgment, in Wisconsin, in Minnesota, and in Michigan.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I would ask the Senator whether or not he is informed that the largest private lumber interests in the world, the Weyerhauser interests, are in favor of the exact policy which the Forest Reserve Service is now carrying on?

Mr. DEPEW. Because they have been converted.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. After having acquired, substantially, all of the lumber in the United States save that which is owned by the Government.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. Weyerhauser has got enough. He knows that if the Government should yield what it has, he would get that; but he does not want nor think it wise to have it all in private ownership.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. DEPEW. Certainly.

Mr. FLINT. I would suggest to the Senator from Wyoming that if the forest reserves had not been created the timber that has now been preserved and is in the forest reserves would be in Mr. Weyerhauser's possession, and he would have control of every bit of the timber in the United States.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I am afraid the Senator from California misapprehended my position. I want to assure him that I am in favor of forest reserves and not against them.

Mr. FLINT. I understand that.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, under the administration of Mr. Pinchot the work of forestry has been carried to the woods, where it ought to be done. It is no longer mere bureau work of secretaries and bookkeepers. In 1900 we had about eleven foresters in this country who understood the business, and in 1908 we have more than twelve hundred. All European countries have schools of forestry, where young men are educated to enter upon forest care, both for the public and for private individuals as a career. One of the greatest successes of Mr. Pinchot is that he has convinced the lumbermen themselves how unwise it is to destroy in a few years this source of perennial wealth. There is no greater reproduction in actual life of the fable of the goose that laid the golden egg than the cutting off of the forests. The lumbermen now understand that, and at their annual meeting they decided to endow chairs of forestry in some of the universities. Under the system pursued up to the present time the waste was incalculable and irreparable. That lumberman made the most money—and making money was all that was desired—who could best select the trees which would pay the best and could be most rapidly and cheaply cut down and conveyed to the sawmill or the market. Each year saw tens of thousands of acres rendered worthless for all farming or agricultural purposes forever.

But they saw more than that. These vast fields were the storage reservoirs of the rains which held the floods and distributed the water during the dry seasons so that the streams were kept up, navigation was secured, and farms could be irrigated. But with the woods taken off, the humus gathered there for centuries acting as a sponge to hold the water, the soil was swept into the streams and down upon the bottom lands, and then at the seasons of the melting snow or the big rainfalls the torrents did incalculable damage to vast regions of country.

We do not have to theorize or romance in order to establish the disastrous results of our former practice of lumbering. Corporations and individuals were working at their own free will and without any Government supervision or control. Fifty years ago the white pine forests around the Great Lakes stretched continuously across the northern part of the States of Michigan, Wisconsin, and Minnesota. They were the greatest aggregation in one body of this valuable wood in the world.

To-day white pine has become so scarce and expensive as to be almost inaccessible to the ordinary purchaser. In these forests a half century ago was the almost incalculable amount of 350,000,000,000 feet, board measure. The great lumber companies rushed in, each striving to outdo the other in the harvest of the woods. They cut at the rate of nearly 8,000,000,000 feet, board measure, a year. They reduced the price by competition so that it paid only to take the best trees. The cuttings and the slashings and the slabs were left and became fuel for forest fires. These fires, fanned by the fierce winds of the North, burned over the areas from which the wood had been cut and into the woods themselves. They burned up the rich soil which had accumulated for centuries and left only the sand underneath. Then came the floods which washed these sands into the rivers, so that many of the streams of the Northwest which were formerly navigable are now useless. Not only was it made impossible for these woods to grow again, but the whole region became an arid and uninhabitable waste.

The statement has been made that forests cut down this way will easily reproduce themselves without assistance or care, but it takes eighty years for a white-pine tree to reach maturity where it can be profitably cut. The lumbermen, in sweeping off the trees that were marketable and burning the rest, destroyed the possibility of a new growth, and the same would happen if our present forests were thrown open to this destructive competition. We must remember all the while that this destruction is upon the public domain belonging to the people of the United States, and of the property which should be for all time a source of protection and revenue to the people of the United States.

With all the figures that were presented here in regard to Idaho being deprived of her population in the future because of forest reserves within her borders, if I have calculated correctly from the figures given—I have not had an opportunity to examine them since—there is only 5 per cent of Idaho in forest reserves. But under the intelligent supervision and under the intelligent care of the foresters to-day we accomplish many things. They are running roads through the forests, to which they objected. They are extending telegraph and telephone lines through the forests, which were objected to.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. DEPEW. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. I simply wish to ask if the Senator stated that the forest reserves in Idaho are only 5 per cent?

Mr. DEPEW. That is the figure I have arrived at from the statistics presented. Is it more?

Mr. BORAH. I think it is 30 per cent.

Mr. DEPEW. It is my mistake. I made the mental calculation as the Senator's colleague spoke yesterday. They are running telegraph and telephone lines through these forests, with the result that there is free communication in the forests, with the result that the homesteader can go through the forests, and the wood can be got out.

It is said the homesteader is deprived of his claim. But under the law passed two years ago any land within the forest area which is fit for homesteading can be located the same as it could ever have been before.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I will ask the Senator if he is informed of the fact that the proclamations creating the forest reserves since that time have especially warned every person from making settlement therein?

Mr. DEPEW. I do not know what proclamations have been issued. But the law has not been repealed, and every homesteader has his right under the law, and any proclamation which is in violation of the law is invalid; and I do not think such a proclamation would stand for an instant.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. DEPEW. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. For the information of the Senator from Wyoming I will state that no matter whether proclamations have been issued or not, the people are now going into the forest reserves and making homestead entries there, and within the last few months over a thousand have been made in the forest reserves in this country.

Mr. DEPEW. There is another way in which the homesteader is protected. He has a home on the outside of the forest reserve, and under the administration of this great Department he can get wood free out of the forest for his house and his fences and his domestic purposes, while if the lands were in private hands, he would be fenced out and he would have no such privileges.

In the course of the debate on this question at various times there has been much said about these woods being cleared to furnish homes, but our experience has been that the methods we have adopted for the clearing of the woods have destroyed thousands upon thousands of homes already in existence and left no region within what was the woods which could be utilized for homes.

Asia in ancient times supported myriads of people in countries which are now practically arid deserts. Modern scientists have demonstrated that this vast destruction of the productive power of the earth to sustain human beings has been the result of the waste of the woods.

Our forestry system, under Mr. Pinchot and his assistants, has gone far enough to demonstrate that the woods instead of being destroyed in thirty years can last productively forever for the people of the United States. With a sufficient number of trained foresters, with pathways and roadways, with telephone and telegraph lines for communication, and with proper apparatus, fires are reduced to a minimum and loss from that cause is practically eliminated. An intelligent cutting of selected trees and conservation of growing ones keeps the forests for all time in healthy and productive conditions. We are exhausting the wealth with which nature has so richly endowed us at a terrific pace. It is estimated that in a hundred years our coal will be gone; that within fifty years our iron ore will be exhausted, and our other minerals will be used up with equal rapidity.

But the forest is never exhausted. It replenishes itself. It is a perpetual source of revenue, safety, health, and income, and gives to the people of the country comfort and wealth, without cost to the National Treasury. Experience and criticism have done away with every complaint which can be legitimately laid against forest reserves. Instead of the land being taken out of public use, it is preserved for the public use. Instead of grazing upon the public domain being a privilege of the strongest and the most unscrupulous, it is now under the supervision and operation of the Bureau of Forestry, brought within the reach of every citizen who chooses to avail himself of the opportunity. Of course cattlemen of great resources, who, few in numbers, have virtually captured the whole grazing country belonging to the United States, make ceaseless war upon this opening to every citizen of his opportunity. Of course the more unscrupulous of the lumbermen, who would combine and seize upon and then destroy the forests, are opposed to the system of preservation, conservation, and sale of the timber, without favors to any.

The home seeker can not complain, because if there is any part of the forests fit for him he can locate his farm. If he has laid out his home upon the borders of the forest, it is not the property of a gigantic lumber company which fences him out, but under the rules of the Bureau of Forestry he is permitted to take the trees that are necessary for his fences or his house and also the ground for the pasture of his stock. Citizens seeking health or sport find that they are no longer fenced out or driven out, but that the woods belonging to the Government, and, therefore, to the people, are open to them, and that the protection granted by the methods carried out by the fire wardens protect them from that danger. It has been said that the United States has no right to go into the lumber or grazing or cattle or sheep or goat business, but the United States has the right, instead of letting a few individuals or corporations have the public domain for nothing, to grant the privilege to all the people who desire to take advantage of it of entering upon the lumber or cattle or stock business within the public domain, upon such terms that the people of the country shall not be taxed to pay for the privileges which these few citizens enjoy. Those who make money by using these forests should contribute a portion of the cost of their administration and preservation.

The administration of the forestry division of the Government compares favorably not only with every other department, but with any private business in the country. The forestry administration in 1899 was without revenue to the Government, but in 1901 the Bureau had been practically organized. Then the cost of administration was $325,000 and the receipts $296,000. In 1907 there was a profit of about $150,000, and in 1908 the area of the forest reserves had risen from about 40,000,000 to 150,000,000 acres. The cost of administration was, in round numbers, $3,400,000. If we take out of that the permanent improvements and the forestry investigation, which is also a permanent improvement, the cost of the administration was only $1,450,000 and the receipts $2,000,000. To show how the people of the United States, without favoritism, are enjoying the privileges of grazing within these forests, and for which a small charge is made per head, the number of cattle in 1901 was, in round numbers, 278,000, and in 1907, 1,200,000; of sheep and goats in 1901, 1,214,000, and in 1907, 6,660,000.

The Government received for these grazing privileges in 1906 $515,000, and in 1907, $864,000. The timber sold in board feet in 1904 was 113,000,000, and in 1907, 1,045,000,000. The receipts from sales of timber was, in 1904, $58,000, and in 1907, $687,000.

Mr. President, I submit as an irrefutable proposition that no other Department of the Government can show results like these. Our one hundred and sixty millions for pensions is a debt of gratitude to the men who fought to save the Union and those dependent upon them. Our two hundred millions a year for the Army and Navy are for the public defense in case of war. Our hundreds of thousands for the diplomatic and consular service are for peace and commerce. Our taxation through the tariff and the internal revenue are to pay this vast debt of gratitude and the annual expense of maintaining our position as a world power. We spend eighty millions nearly every year for rivers and harbors, and forty of that is thrown away because the streams are filled up again from the floods following the deforestation of the lands.

But here is a bureau which preserves the streams for navigation and irrigation, preserves the mountain sides and the valleys with their productive possibilities for the farmer, preserves the timber for the manifold uses which are the necessities of the American people, and keeps down the price of the lumber so that it will remain within the economical reach of our citizens. At the same time it is carried on with such skill, efficiency, and integrity that, while thus preserving and enriching the nation, its administration is without cost to the Government, but, on the contrary, an annual profit is paid into the Treasury.

Sir, I trust that the amendment of the Senator from Idaho, prohibiting the transportation of wood out of any State, will be voted down, and that this appropriation, paid for already without taxation and without cost, will be passed as it came in the recommendation from the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I shall not attempt to follow the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW] in his eulogy of the Forest Service of the country. Before I get through I may refer to it. I do not intend to weary the patience of the Senate to any great extent to-day. There is a bill pending before the Senate concerning the Appalachian Range and the White Mountains which I suppose will be up for discussion some day, and it will be a little more appropriate for me to discuss that question then than on this bill.

I want to discuss this bill, and I shall try to discuss nothing else. I do not think it is out of the way to say that what Germany has done and France has done and what Switzerland has done have little application to what we may do. It may be all right for imperial Germany and semi-imperial France to do certain things that we do not need to do and have not the power to do.

The Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW] has told us what the State of New York has done. That is what I insist ought to be the case. I agree with him that the forests ought to be conserved wherever they are not required for immediate use, and we ought to grow forests wherever we can do so economically and profitably; and I assert that that is the province of the State and not the province of the General Government. I know that is an unpopular doctrine. I know that to-day when any disturbance occurs in the country, when anything against which citizens may complain occurs, they come to the United States Government for relief. Day after day I receive requests, sometimes by telegraph, more often by mail, "I hope you will favor this amendment to the Constitution" or "that amendment to the Constitution." The other day I received from a distinguished educator a request "I hope you will favor an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to prohibit polygamy." I am not in favor of polygamy, but I replied to him very briefly "I shall not vote for an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy. I believe every State in the Union has a law against polygamy. That is the place where the law ought to be made, and that is the place where it ought to be enforced. The General Government has not any authority on that subject, and it never will get any authority by my vote."

Mr. President, the Government of the people of this country is divided into two parts. We have a National Government, concerned with national affairs, concerned with those things the States can not well do; and we have State governments—forty-six sovereignties, forty-six powers. We have States in this country bigger than some of the great powers of Europe. Texas is bigger than France. California is nearly as big, if not quite. What will serve and answer the purpose of one part of the world does not necessarily answer that of another.

I understand it is practically useless to talk about the rights of the States in this body. It is not a popular thing to do; and, above all, it is an unpopular thing to attack anything an appropriation bill contains. We are now informed by the authorities who have charge of these things where the appropriations must originate, where revenue bills must originate; that this year we shall run behind; in other words, that our expenditures, normally and properly needed, will be $60,000,000 more than our receipts. Yet the table of the Senate is covered with bills, not necessary, not important, bills that ought never to be on the table, calling for more than twice that amount. This bill to which I am speaking has, in defiance of the common decency of appropriations, a lump sum of $500,000; and the distinguished head of the forest reserves, a man to whom we are looking now for the salvation of the woods of the country, went before the committee and said, "I want $2,000,000," and insisted upon it. Next year he will want more.

The Senator from New York says this is a self-supporting proposition. It is not a self-supporting proposition, and does not support itself by at least two and a half million dollars.

Mr. ALDRICH. Would it interrupt the Senator from Colorado if I were to ask a question?

Mr. TELLER. Not at all.

Mr. ALDRICH. We had considerable discussion last year in this Chamber in regard to the matter of these appropriations.

Mr. TELLER. I was about to speak of that. I wish the Senator would go on and speak of it.

Mr. ALDRICH. We required in the agriculture bill of last year—

That hereafter on or before the 1st day of January of each year the Secretary of Agriculture shall submit to Congress, in addition to the estimates now required by law, classified and detailed estimates of every subject of expenditure intended for the Agricultural Department for the next fiscal year, and detailed reports of all expenditures under any appropriation for such service during the preceding fiscal year.

I have not been able to discover any evidence that any such statements have been submitted to Congress. If they have been, I should like to know it. They are not printed in the Book of Estimates.

Mr. WARREN. I do not want to intrench upon the time of the Senator from Colorado without his consent.

Mr. TELLER. I am perfectly willing for the Senator from Wyoming to proceed. I should like to hear an answer to the question of the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. WARREN. It is true that in the law of last year there is language calling for estimates. I think I have it here.

Mr. ALDRICH. "Classified and detail estimates" for these expenditures.

Mr. WARREN. I have it here, and there is no contention about it.

Mr. ALDRICH. You say you have it here?

Mr. WARREN. The law.

Mr. ALDRICH. Oh, the law. I thought the Senator meant the estimates.

Mr. WARREN. I have now before me the law. The estimates are also near at hand.

Mr. TELLER. We want the detail statements.

Mr. ALDRICH. I want to see the detail statements which the law required from the Secretary.

Mr. WARREN. The matter of classification, the matter of the division of estimates, like many another thing, is in accordance with the temper of the party who has it under consideration. When you undertake to classify and state what you are going to do in a given line of business with a million dollars or any considerable sum, the degree and definiteness with which you subdivide that naturally depends upon the person making the division. But I will say that the Secretary of Agriculture has responded to that law only so far as he had responded heretofore with respect to all the other bureaus.

Now, without either defending or criticising, I desire to say that from the first day I entered upon my duties in the Senate, or as soon afterwards as the committees were arranged, I have served upon the Committee on Agriculture, and during all that time, as in the present bill, there have been lump sums provided for each and every one of the bureaus. Each one, or some of them at least, have had the same requirement as the Senator has read passed in previous laws for classification as to other bureaus.

They have classified and divided, so far as the administration here in Washington is concerned, the number of clerks and what salary each shall receive, and have gone on with certain other classifications, and then the balance is in a lump sum, precisely as it is in the bill for all other bureaus of the Department of Agriculture.

I must say further, if the Senator will permit me, that I agree with the Senator. I should like greater divisions and subdivisions and classifications. Perhaps the Senator will remember that a few days ago——

Mr. ALDRICH. There are no divisions or subdivisions whatever here. There is no classified estimate of any kind in the Book of Estimates. If any others have been submitted, I should like to see them.

Mr. WARREN. The bill itself is divided, as the Senator knows.

Mr. ALDRICH. Oh, no; not in this particular part. There are no divisions at all. I will read the language of the act a little more fully, because I had something to do with it, and I was greatly surprised and disappointed that apparently no attention was paid to it by the Department.

Provided, That hereafter on or before the 1st day of January of each year the Secretary of Agriculture shall submit to Congress classified and detailed reports of all receipts by the Forest Service—

That, I think, has been done.

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the Senator that has been done to the extent of some hundreds of pages.

Mr. ALDRICH. That has been done.

And classified and detailed estimates of all expenditures intended for this Service for the next fiscal year.

Where is that? The estimates contained in the Book of Estimates have but one item—$3,050,000. There is no classification and there are no detailed statements of how the estimates have been made. I am not now undertaking to criticise the propriety of these expenditures or the size of the expenditures, but I will say that so far as anything appears upon the record, this express provision of Congress, growing out of the discussion here about the method in which these appropriations had been made heretofore, has been absolutely ignored.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator has the right, of course, to the criticism he has made. In the manifold duties of the Senator from Rhode Island he can hardly expect to examine all the papers that may come before Congress. The estimates in the regular Book of Estimates come from the Treasury Department early in the season and are made up from estimates that go early from the various Departments to the Treasury Department. I hold in my hand the detailed and analyzed, if you please, estimates of the Department of Agriculture. Here are a great many pages regarding the Forest Service, which is subdivided according to the opinion of the Agricultural Department as far as is required by the law and as far as is compatible with the other Bureaus of the Department, and, I think, taking it all together, a very complete subdivision of estimate is made.

Now, on the general proposition, I wish to say to the Senator from Rhode Island that I agree with him. I believe all our appropriation bills ought to be subdivided more than they are, and as proof of that a few days ago I offered an appropriate amendment to the naval appropriation bill, which has been coming in here from the House for years appropriating from twenty to forty million dollars in one clause. My amendment requires that the next bill for a law shall divide and subdivide this. In the Army appropriation bill which, as to a corresponding paragraph, was formerly made up in the same way, there are now two hundred and forty-odd items covering some six pages of the statutes, while as to the naval bill the similar matter covers in the statute but a few lines. The same thing is true with respect to the post-office appropriation bill. I find in the bill, as it passed the House, some $37,000,000 in a line and a half, with no subdivision. It is probably necessary or expedient, in the view of the heads of the Department, to conduct their business in that manner. We get these bills from the House. Under the Constitution and under our rules these bills are made up in the House. It becomes the duty of the committee there, of course, to examine all these estimates and all these papers. It becomes the duty, to some extent, of the Senate on this side to examine them. But I submit to the Senator that the power is not lodged in the committee on this side to state in what manner the bills shall come from the House, nor does the law which the Senator has read make any requirement upon the House to subdivide in the bills. Suppose the Secretary of Agriculture had given in his estimate every item as the Senator wishes. The trouble is we did not go far enough and we did not require, as I undertook to do in the amendment which I made to the naval bill, that the future appropriation bills shall contain these subdivisions. I will join with the Senator from Rhode Island at any time and at all times in requiring not only that there shall be these subdivisions as estimates from the Departments, but that the House shall incorporate them in the appropriation bills, so that we may have that information here prima facie, without having to dig it out from the numerous documents and papers that come from the other side.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the discussion seems to be drifting away from what I intended to say and what I am going to say.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. TELLER. I will hear the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I wish to ask the Senator from Wyoming if there was no evidence before his committee as to what this money was intended to be used for other than is given in this general language in the bill; and if so, what it was?

Mr. WARREN. Oh, yes. In the first place, there are here in this volume a thousand or so pages of hearings before the House committee. In the next place, there is what would amount to a volume an inch thick or so of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD debates during the consideration of this bill in the House, which certain members, at least, of the Senate committee had before them and studied. Then there are some hundred or two hundred pages of the testimony given by the Secretary of Agriculture and others before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not care to go into any general discussion of the question as to whether the head of the Department complied with the provision of the law. I think the presumption is that they do not. I think it is rarely that we are ever able to bring them actually to book. I will be somewhat surprised if they have made such a declaration.

I have on my table a statement of expenditures in the Department, which seems to have reached the Senate April 7. I have another one, which is a lesser affair, that got here April 9. No one had seen any of these statements until the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] called the attention of the Senate to them and got them printed. But that is not the gravamen of the offense I am complaining of.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator does not lay that blame to the Department of Agriculture, I think.

Mr. TELLER. I do not know who is to blame, and I do not know that I care who is to blame for it.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator knows that such a matter comes usually from the Department in the form of typewritten copy, and it then lies with the House or the Senate as to what they may do with it. They came up, I think the Senator will find, in the usual way.

Mr. TELLER. When they got here I do not know. They ought to be in the Book of Estimates. There is not any estimate here and never has been anything except this lump sum. There is not any pretense here that there is any estimate. The Senator from Connecticut inquired what it is for. Nobody knows what it is for, because it is absolutely under the control of the Department.

No money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law.

That carries with it the idea that the purpose of it must be named in the act; and that we have been doing until recently. Within the last few years we have fallen into the very vicious habit of lumping a sum.

We gave to the Department of Justice last year $500,000 as a lump sum. There is a statement here from the Department as to how it was expended. We fix the salaries ourselves for most of the employees. The Department fixed the salaries and the expenditures covered by this appropriation of $500,000. Congress had nothing to do with it. If you will take the pains to look over the testimony of the Attorney-General, you will find that one single individual was paid a salary of $16,000. You will find on his list a number of people who were getting $7,500 a year and expenses when they were traveling, and that most of the time they appear to have been traveling.

Mr. President, I want to enter my protest against that. The understanding was last year with the committee——

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

Mr. TELLER. I ask the Senator to wait a moment. The understanding was last year with the committee that no more lump sums would be put in these bills. There has never been a lump sum put in that has not been abused, and there never will be a lump sum appropriated that will not be abused. The sooner we stop putting in lump sums the better. There is not a man here who will rise and say he knows what this appropriation of $500,000 is to be expended for. He may guess at it, and if he guessed at it he would not know whether that guess would be carried out by the head of the Department.

Now, I will yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CULBERSON. A number of us in this portion of the Chamber were interested in the statement of the Senator that some official was being paid $16,000 per annum, but we did not catch, at least I did not, the name of the person.

Mr. TELLER. I do not know. I looked it up. I looked over the record. I did not know who got it. The Attorney-General stated before the House committee, and I suppose it will be shown to be true in the statement he has filed—I have not looked at it—that he had paid to one man an attorney fee of $16,000. That will not be disputed, I think, by anybody. Some Senators here know that that is in the record. Who it was I do not recall, except I am told he was a former employee of the Department. He served some time here as an attorney, I think, at a salary of $5,000 and paid his own expenses. He concluded that he could do better, and he resigned and went over to New York. After some time, finding that he could not pick up as much money in New York as he had been picking up here, he came back. There was not any place to which they could put him back and so they hired him as a special attorney. That is the way most of our money goes that is given in lump appropriations.

Mr. President, I have in my desk a statement from a reputable newspaper in the Northwest that one man who had been appearing for the Government had been paid $50,000 for his service, not perhaps in a year, but in the whole time he has had $50,000. I do not know whether that is true or not. It was made in a respectable newspaper in the neighborhood where this man then was, and I have never heard that he denied it. It is possible that he earned $50,000. I do not know about that. Nobody else knows either, and that is the trouble.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. TELLER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FORAKER. I did not hear distinctly all that the Senator said about the large amount paid an attorney.

Mr. TELLER. I said in a newspaper in the Northwest there was addressed to this gentleman an inquiry whether he had not received $50,000, with the assertion that he had received that sum for services rendered the United States.

Mr. FORAKER. May I inquire to whom the Senator refers? That is what I want to know.

Mr. TELLER. I refer to Mr. Heney. He is a prosecutor.

Mr. FORAKER. He is the gentleman who hails from California, or from Oregon?

Mr. TELLER. I think he does. I do not know where he is from. He has been very greatly in evidence. Wherever he goes he takes charge of the Government business to the exclusion of the Government officers who are charged by law with that kind of business, as near as I can learn. That is the rule. That $500,000 in the Department of Justice was used for that purpose. I do not know how much is given to them this year as a lump fund.

Now, Mr. President, getting back to the Forest Service, I could not find out from any record or any report or anything else——

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator allow me to make an inquiry? Do I understand the Senator to say that the whole of that $500,000 had been exhausted and paid out for counsel fees?

Mr. TELLER. As far as I know it has. I do not know about that.

Mr. FORAKER. And was the $50,000 paid to Mr. Heney for one particular case or for a term?

Mr. TELLER. No; I suppose it was for three or four. I do not know whether the $16,000 was paid in one case or not. I believe it took the man a year to earn that.

Mr. WARREN. Since there is a little break in the course of the Senator's remarks—and I know the Senator wants to be right—I will state that in the hearings before the House committee this $500,000—the amount this committee has approved as coming from the other House and the amount that they allowed—is considerably less than it was proposed to expend if the amount estimated for and asked for had been allowed. But as to the $500,000, as well as all the balance, the estimates were given as to the purpose for which it would be used.

Mr. TELLER. I wish the Senator would bring out the estimate and show what this $500,000 is for. I have not seen it.

Mr. WARREN. The $500,000 was not segregated. It was a larger amount that was asked for, and it is all here in the estimates, but it was cut to $500,000. The amounts are given, and they can be incorporated in the record. They are in the hearings in the House.

Mr. TELLER. Somebody who wants to defend this service can do it. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] expects to make some remarks on it, and when he gets through I hope he will put it in, and let us see whether we did have an estimate or not. I have never seen it.

Mr. WARREN. So far as I am concerned, I am not at the present time entering into either the defense of or attacks upon the Service. I am simply accounting for the manner of the treatment of this bill by the committee that has it in charge. I may say that all those matters were looked over on the House side and to some extent on the Senate side.

Mr. TELLER. I am glad the Senator says "to some extent," for I am pretty sure it was not done to any large extent.

Mr. WARREN. Every item is in print and every Senator could have seen it at any time.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I want to call attention here on page 25 of the bill. I want to show specifically how we have appropriated:

And there is hereby appropriated——

Mr. WARREN. The House sent us this.

Mr. TELLER (reading):

And there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $500,000, to be expended as the Secretary of Agriculture may direct, for the proper and economical administration, protection, and development of the national forests.

Immediately on the next line, on line 22, we find the following:

Total for Forest Service, $3,796,200.

Mr. President, this is the bureau that began a few years ago with $15,000 a year. That was not when Mr. Cleveland was in, because it began in a small way before that time. It began by a small amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont authorizing the Department having charge of the lands to set aside forest reserves. It was discussed in the Senate very briefly. We were told then that on the top of the high mountains in the Rocky Mountain country there were some heads of streams and it was necessary to protect the forests, to protect the snow, to protect the water in the rivers, and that item was put in the bill; it was put in on the floor of the Senate.

I am not going to look up the acts, because it is too much trouble to do that and it would take too much time, but there was an act passed declaring that the President might by proclamation reserve forest reservations of timber lands, nonagricultural lands, and nonmineral lands. Out of that has grown this Service, through amendments sent here by the Department and passed here because the Department was pressing them, passed here under just such appeals as the Senator from New York made by a misrepresentation, Mr. President, of all the facts—not knowingly, I think. He got his information from the Department.

Mr. President, they will tell you that we are now in danger of a timber famine. The Senator from New York says it is well known that in thirty years the timber will be all gone. If the wants and demands of commerce and trade and the people want to use it they have a right to use it all. We are under no obligation to preserve it unless preserving it will be a greater benefit to mankind than its use.

Mr. President, I have some facts that I want to present before I get through. As I said I do not intend to make a lengthy speech, not much of a speech, anyway, but when the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] gets up his Appalachian and White Mountain measure, I am going to present some facts that I do not think it would be quite pertinent to present now.

Mr. President, there is not a man on this floor who is more interested in forests than I am. There is not a greater lover of trees anywhere than I am. I have lived in the timber, I was born in a timber country, and that was a good while ago, long prior to the time the Senator from New York mentioned.

I can remember when the best portions of western New York were a forest. There was but little civilization and but little population there; it was a forest. There was not an acre of prairie land within 500 miles of where I was born, and I knew nothing about prairies. No man could make a farm who did not cut off the timber and burn it up. There was no other use that he could put it to.

Now, will any man tell me that New York would have been better off if the counties of Allegany, Steuben, Cattaraugus, and Chautauqua, the great timber sections in my day, had been left in timber? It is possible the owners would have got more for it than the land is worth now, for I have seen a single pine tree sold in the State of New York for $100 long after the timber had been cut and removed.

But, Mr. President, there would have been no population there. That community has sent Senators to this Chamber and has given us governors, and at least one President was given to the United States from that immediate vicinity, from this timber-devastated land.

Mr. President, the people made better use of that timber than they would have done if they had kept it. On the border of New York and Pennsylvania were the most magnificent forests of pine that ever grew except those that are growing in British Columbia and some little perhaps in the State of Idaho. They have been cut off. They were cut off and milled, and they were carried by wagons for many miles, and then sent by water to the great city of New York and to the Eastern States.

Mr. President, if you could not have cut the timber from that section, you could not have built the great cities in the State of New York. Not an acre of forest, not a tree, was ever wasted after I became big enough to remember. By that time it had a value, and they cut it for the value and they put it to a beneficial use.

What did the Almighty clothe the hills with timber for if it was not that they might be made beneficial to mankind? They are not beneficial, Mr. President, without their being cut and put into use. Where there were forests of beauty there are now fields and homes. The best people in the world to-day live in that section of the country where forests were once growing. They put it to a better use than to make forest reserves.

That is why we complain here to-day, Mr. President. We say that not only the Almighty intended these forests—some of them at least—to be used where the lands are capable of being occupied by homes, but that the very policy of this Government has been ever since it was organized to make homes for the people.

The Senator from New York talks about what Switzerland has done. Mr. President, in the State in which I live we have counties twice as big as Switzerland. In the adjoining States of Wyoming, Idaho, and Montana we could sink Switzerland inside of one of our counties and never notice it. What Switzerland can do and what Switzerland ought to do is one thing and what we ought to do is another.

Mr. President, I take issue with the Department and I say the statement made, and made here on this floor repeatedly, is not true; in the first place, that we have wasted the timber; in the second place, that we are facing a timber famine inside of twenty-five or thirty years. The Senator from New York says thirty years. Mr. Pinchot, the head of the Bureau, says twenty-five years.

Mr. President, I want to call attention to the timber that we have cut off and I want to call attention to the prophecies of timber famine. We have been estimating for years in the census reports how much timber we have and how long it would take to cut it off. There never was one of those estimates that have been worth anything whatever. We have some estimates that I could show from the census report, made away back in 1880, and the region from which they said they would cut off the timber in two or three or four years has produced four or five times as much timber as they said grew on it. There is not any reliance to be placed on such statements. They are made for the express purpose of creating a bureau and getting the control of the forests that you may build up a system that is un-American and does not belong to the American people.

I heard a Senator say the other day, when the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] was speaking, that in no other country where the people called themselves free could such things be done.

I want to say here, Mr. President, that I have as much knowledge of the forest reserve as any man, even Mr. Pinchot himself. I know all about them. I have seen one hundred acres where he has seen one. I have traveled over a hundred acres of forest where he has traveled over one. I say the Forest Service is an unmitigated curse and not a blessing. It has driven out the settler, notwithstanding the thousands that the Senator from Utah says made homes there. If there had not been forest reserves, ten thousand would have made homes, and such homes as you can not make in any part of the country—any better, at least, than you can make there.

Every portion of our mountain country has the most delightful valleys in the world, the richest valleys in the world, and the best climate on the American continent. The people go there. They are hungry for land. They have been taking up within the last two years the dry lands upon which we have believed no man could exist. One hundred thousand of them, inside of two years, have left the United States for British Columbia because they were hungry for land on which to make homes, and yet 150,000,000 acres, much of which could be made into homes, are held by the Department away from settlement.

Mr. President, we people in the West have a right to complain. First, we complain of the misrepresentations; second, we complain of the fact that they retard our settlement. Of the 150,000,000 acres there are, I think, about 16,000,000 acres in Colorado, perhaps a little bit less, in forest reserves. That is one-fourth, at least, of the entire State. That is withdrawn from settlement; it is withdrawn from the operation of the taxing power the State that you may save the timber for the coming generations.

The Senator from New York tells us that you can not build cities without wood. Everybody knows that. There is not a city that has been built that has not called on the section of the country I have been speaking of, western New York and Pennsylvania, for the wood with which to build it. But the Senator from New York would have kept the big pine trees because they are so grand. The Senator from Connecticut and his associates would save the timber of the White Mountains because it is such a splendid place for men of wealth and fortune and leisure to go during the hot summer.

Mr. President, I will show from the reports that one of the reasons given why the White Mountains should be put in a reservation is that it is a place where people from the great cities can spend their summers. It would be better if they would make homes there; and if the land is not capable of making homes, then let the States that own it protect the timber and conserve it for the use of the public.

Mr. President, I want to call attention to the expenditures of this beautiful system of ours:

Appropriations under the forest reserve ending June 30, 1907, statutory salaries, $112,133.

Who made the salaries? Whose business is it to make salaries? Is it not yours and mine? You abandoned your right to make the salaries. You have not had anything more to do with it than the janitor. The House has not had anything to do with it either. You turned it over to that distinguished tree man, Mr. Pinchot.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. TELLER. I will yield for a question; but I will not yield for the Senator to put into my speech a defense of the Department. He can do that when his time comes.

Mr. SMOOT. I just wanted to say——

Mr. TELLER. You must confine yourself to a question. Otherwise, I decline to yield.

Mr. SMOOT. Is not the amount of the salaries just quoted by the Senator of $112,000 the statutory pay roll of the Forestry Division?

Mr. TELLER. Perhaps it is. I am coming to the figures. One point in particular is as to lump-sum salaries. That is one which we have not had anything to do with. The sum is $259,657.58. I cited the wrong figures. That we have had nothing whatever to do with. The Department has fixed the salaries, and we have got them, after some trouble, in a book. Salaries outside of Washington, $817,199.89. Here is $1,188,990.63 of salaries. That may be a nice way for us to legislate, but I say, without meaning to be offensive to anybody, that it is a vicious way.

Mr. FORAKER. From what does the Senator read?

Mr. TELLER. I read from a memorandum which I have made from the report of the Forester, Mr. Pinchot.

Mr. FORAKER. Do I understand the Senator to say that we are appropriating $1,188,000—if that is the correct sum—for salaries that Congress has not fixed, but that some head of an executive bureau has determined?

Mr. TELLER. I mean to say that in the city of Washington there is an expenditure of $259,657.58, and the salaries are fixed by the Chief Forester or by the Secretary of Agriculture, I do not know which; and outside of Washington the amount expended is $817,199.89. In other words, the amount expended for salaries that they have fixed is $1,188,990.63 this last year.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. TELLER. I decline to yield. The Senator will have plenty of time, and I may learn from him something which I have been expecting to learn from the Department.

Travel and station and field expenses, $183,802.74; estimated number of officials in the Forest Service in Washington, 518; outside of Washington, 1,542, or a total of 2,060.

Now, Mr. President, you can see why this Service wants a million dollars. As I stated before, this bill only carries $500,000 in a lump sum.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado permit a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. TELLER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, while the Senator from Colorado is enumerating the great sums that are being expended and the number of officials in the employment of the Chief Forester, and while it is true that he fixes the salaries, yet I want to call his attention for a moment to the area of country over which this gentleman has jurisdiction and which must be protected from fire and otherwise by these officials. The area now in forest reserves amounts to an area that would be comprised in the States of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, West Virginia, and Virginia. That is the extent of country—larger by 50,000 square miles than any empire in Europe, except Russia, and twice as large as the United Kingdom of Great Britain, Scotland, and Ireland. The Senator will see that to preserve such a vast area of country a very large army of officials is absolutely necessary.

I make this remark simply for information and not that I am justifying any expenditure made that is not perfectly reasonable and necessary, nor that I in any way indorse the plan of purchasing more land for more reserves, for I very much doubt the constitutionality of such an act, but because——

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

Mr. MONEY. Just one word further, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. TELLER. Certainly; go ahead.

Mr. MONEY. I wish to make a further remark—because of the great interest that is manifested all over the United States, as is shown by the printed matter which comes to us from all sorts of forest-reserve clubs, game clubs, and others, demanding that the forest reserves shall be indefinitely and largely increased; that those people may know something of the extent of the country already reserved. I am much obliged to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, what the Senator from Mississippi has said will divert me for a moment. I know, of course, that 150,000,000 acres is very large.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. One hundred and sixty million acres.

Mr. TELLER. One hundred and sixty million acres is a very large extent of country. I live in a State which has 103,000 square miles. I do not remember just exactly how long it is, but I know it is pretty long and pretty wide. That State has about 65,000,000 acres. So this is nearly three times as big as that State.

Mr. MONEY. The area is 250,000 square miles.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Mississippi states that it is 250,000 square miles.

The Senator from Mississippi has spoken about the demand that is being made on us. Why, Mr. President, I will tell the Senate how that demand is made. I know what I say here about that, and I am responsible for what I say in any way that a man can be responsible for what he says. I know they have spent thousands and thousands of dollars of the money of the people of the United States in a propaganda; they have sent out thousands and thousands of circulars; they have hired writers; they have employed men, Mr. President, and put them on their pay rolls for the express and only purpose of securing their support for this great enterprise. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the other House within a few days read to us in a conference meeting of the large number of illustrious men connected with great colleges, connected with great institutions of the country, who were on their pay roll, and who, when called upon, address us and address the people everywhere.

Mr. President, the other day I received a circular from a Chicago club asking me to support this forest policy. Do you suppose anybody in the city of Chicago, with no forest in sight or near, is concerned about this matter? Why, Mr. President, I would guarantee that I could say that the Department asked these people to appeal to us. Men send me letters and send me telegrams containing: "Write your Senators and write your Members; telegraph your Senators and telegraph your Members to support the forest reserves." We pay for it; the taxpayers of the country pay for it; and there is no limit and no restriction on it. You have never put any rule upon them as to what they shall publish nor when they shall publish it. I have some of those publications here. I shall not put them in the RECORD, but I have a number of them. I have one here——

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. TELLER. I do.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, some of us are interested in these academic employees of the Bureau of Forestry and, for one, I should be glad to see a list of the names of those gentlemen, if the Senator from Colorado has it convenient.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not know whether I can get it, but if I can, I will put it into the RECORD. As I was saying, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the other House read a list to the committee the other day containing the names of some very important people.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. TELLER. I do.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, I trust the Senator from Colorado will not think that the interest which the people of Chicago have in the preservation of the forest reserves is a pay-roll interest. I am sure that the feeling in that city and in the State of Illinois for many years has been along the lines that have been developed by those who are now interested in this great work, and whatever interest has been taken there has been an interest of the character that Mr. Pinchot himself takes.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. I know the Senator wishes to be right, and he usually is, so I am asking to see what his information is, because it does not quite agree with mine, now before me, as to the salary expenses under the lump-sum appropriation. Has the Senator the figures before him now?

Mr. TELLER. I have the figures found in the table contained in the statement sent out by the Department. Now, of course, I do not——

Mr. WARREN. I think perhaps the Senator has confounded the headings. Under the heading "Expended of appropriations for general expenses" is $880,000. Is that the amount the Senator means?

Mr. TELLER. The figures I have show the amount expended from the lump sum in Washington $259,657.58, and outside of Washington $817,199.89.

Mr. WARREN. Does that eight hundred and odd thousand dollars refer to salaries alone?

Mr. TELLER. No; in every way, I suppose. I have the figures here.

Mr. WARREN. I think the Senator is wrong about that.

Mr. TELLER. I would not say that the figures are absolutely accurate, because the Department has not given us the information they ought to have given. I have done the best I could with what information I have been able to obtain.

Mr. WARREN. I have here what purports to be the name of every man employed under the lump-sum appropriation and the salary paid him. It is not one-half of the amount that is mentioned by the Senator, and I presume that the Senator has included with salaries other expenses, or these may be another list.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I will say to the Senator that the expenses of the Forest Service, given in answer to the resolution of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN], show that the lump fund for salaries was $705,061.86.

Mr. WARREN. Did the Senator look to see whether that is footed as the salaries of the men themselves outside of their expenses?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is the footing of the men themselves, and does not include their mileage, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. WARREN. What book has the Senator in his hands?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I have here the statement of expenditures of the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907.

Mr. WARREN. Has the Senator footed it up himself?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. No; the Department footed it.

Mr. WARREN. I know that; but perhaps the Senator has too. The one I have does not give the footings as given by my colleague.

Mr. TELLER. According to that I am a little out of the way; but it is not very material whether it is $100,000 or $800,000. What I am contending for is against the principle of lump-sum appropriations, against making an appropriation and giving to the head of a Department or some subordinate the right to fix the salaries and determine who shall get the money.

Now, Mr. President, as an illustration, I have here a little memorandum—it is too big to undertake to go through all these items in a speech—which shows one forest expert—they are all experts—at a salary of $1,000 per year. That is a reasonable salary. His traveling and field expenses were $1,347.27. Here is another. He got $1,000, and his traveling expenses were $1,409.19. Another one got a salary of $1,200, and his expenses were $1,263.80. Another got $1,300, and his traveling expenses were $2,660.05. Another got $1,500, and his traveling expenses were $1,978.96. Those were just taken at random out of this book.

I will submit to the Senate whether we comply with the law in view of the fact that the Constitution provides that "no money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law." Do we comply with the law when we give the money to some one to pay it out in a lump sum? The Constitution evidently intended that we should appropriate it for specific purposes only—that is, for labor, for travel, or for whatever we might designate—but we allow them to pay it for anything.

I thought last year we had killed off the lump-sum system; and I am only making these remarks in the hope that by next year it may die a natural death, or that the Senate will have courage enough to knock it out.

I was going to read—it will interest the Senator from Montana——

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. TELLER. I do.

Mr. CULBERSON. I was interested in the statement of the Senator about the constitutional provision to which he has just referred.

Mr. TELLER. I apologize for referring to the Constitution. It is a little out of order now to do so.

Mr. CULBERSON. Still, Mr. President, it is very well to emphasize another provision of the Constitution in that same connection, which is this—and I read it in connection with the provision of the statute on this subject—

> And a regular statement and account of the receipts and expenditures of all public money shall be published from time to time.

Not only does the statute which has been referred to by the Senator from Rhode Island call for an estimate and publication of this money, but the Constitution itself requires that the receipts and expenditures of the Government shall be published from time to time.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me right there a moment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. TELLER. I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. WARREN. In that connection—and perhaps it will come in here best—I have in my hand a report of the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture of the House of Representatives, made by a special committee, of which Judge LITTLEFIELD, I believe, is chairman. He went over all the bureaus of the Department and this one in particular. I will read a line or two from that report if the Senator will permit me. He says:

We have examined the method of handling this fund, which has been termed in some quarters an "irresponsible fund," with very great care.

Mr. TELLER. What fund is that?

Mr. WARREN. This is the fund we appropriated in a lump sum for the Forestry Service.

The report continues:

And our judgment is that it is surrounded by ample business restrictions, conservative in their nature and admirably calculated to adequately protect the interests of the Government in the collection and disbursement of the fund.

That was at a time when we were expending such funds as those taken in from the forest reserves for grazing and for lumber, and so forth, instead of covering them into the United States Treasury as we now do.

Mr. TELLER. I am not charging that they stole it.

Mr. WARREN. No, but the quotation is very appropriate. I will read just a few more lines, with the Senator's permission:

The only additional check that we could see any occasion for suggesting was the furnishing of a duplicate certificate of deposit every day by the Treasury Department to the Chief Forester or to the disbursing clerk of the Department of Agriculture showing the amount deposited daily by the fiscal agent of the Forest Service. Under the methods now in practice the amounts received by the fiscal agent every twenty-four hours are certified to two other officials connected with the Department, and with this additional certificate from the Treasury Department three officials who are acting entirely independently of the fiscal agent will be able to check up every twenty-four hours every dollar collected by the fiscal agent. Our recommendation that this additional check be adopted has been promptly accepted by the Forester and will be at once introduced.

Mr. TELLER. That, Mr. President, is not what I was discussing.

Mr. WARREN. I beg the Senator's pardon. I read that in reply to the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON].

Mr. TELLER. I was discussing the proposition of Congress appropriating certain sums, and in violation of the plainest principles of the Constitution and its exact letter and words, allowing the officers of a Department to put that sum in their pockets and expend it. We did succeed last year, with a good deal of trouble and against the protest of the Department, in cutting that off.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. TELLER. Yes.

Mr. CULBERSON. If the Senator from Colorado will permit me, in reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Wyoming, I will say this is a matter of which I have no particular personal or even official information; but I call the attention of the Senator from Wyoming to the statement of the Senator from Colorado, made impressively, and for which he held himself responsible, that a large amount of this money had been appropriated to mere writers, professors, school-teachers, and that it was paid to them simply to secure their influence for this character of legislation.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not know that I said that. I said that was the inference I drew and which I thought everybody else drew.

Mr. WARREN. And all I replied to that then was to say that the name of every employee and the amount received for salary and for traveling expenses is duly reported in print, and that all of these funds have been handled under the statements made here not only properly, but with all publicity.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, what I meant to say, and what I want to repeat now—and I challenge the Department to deny it—is that they have had a propaganda; they have had men all over the country advocating these forest reserves and writing to us, and they put on the pay rolls, not ostensibly for that purpose, but, in my judgment, for that purpose, learned men, scholarly men. When I get a letter from a man whom I know to occupy a high position in the literary world or in the educational world who says, "I think you ought to vote for it," if I did not know as much about this matter as I do I would probably be inclined to do so; but knowing, as I do, something about it, I simply turn it down and say, "I know more about this than you do," and I will not vote for it.

I will venture to say that the most of these articles that appear and are addressed to us are prepared either in the Department or by somebody connected with the Department. I shall probably get a denial of that, as I get a denial of every statement I make on this floor about the matter.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

Mr. TELLER. I do not mean a denial here, but a denial from the Department.

Mr. WARREN. I have no disposition to deny it.

Mr. TELLER. I do not refer to the Senator.

Mr. WARREN. I heard no names of such people read here, and if the Senator knows who they are I wish he would designate them by name, because I would not approve of such employment.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator was present when the names were read. If he can recall them, I am willing he should do so. I do not remember who they were, but I know they were distinguished people.

Mr. WARREN. I do not recall.

Mr. TELLER. They were connected with the educational interests of the country, and I know that some of those people have been writing letters, and they would not have written such letters, I am confident, if they had not been connected with the Department. I do not mean to say they were hired to do these things, but they were put upon the pay roll and they were interested in this bureau.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Let me ask the Senator a question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Let me ask the Senator in what capacity does he think these men in the educational walks of life are upon the pay roll—hired as what?

Mr. TELLER. Well, I do not know. I do not know what service they can render, except the service they appear to be rendering by acting as correspondents of the Department.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I desired to inquire whether the Senator meant that the Senate should infer that these men were classified as foresters, for instance, when really they were doing other work?

Mr. TELLER. I do not know how they are classified. I do not say they do not render some service to the Government. I do not mean to say that, because I do not know; but I do mean to say that they are put there for the express purpose of securing their influence.

I have a publication here issued by some forestry association. It is Press Bulletin 337. It refers to the bill which the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] has in hand. I quote a brief extract from it:

The Appalachian-White Mountain bill was called up in the Senate on Wednesday, April 15. Senator HENRY M. TELLER, of Colorado, stated that he desired at some future time to make some remarks on the bill. It therefore went over. His action occasioned surprise, inasmuch as letters bearing his signature show him to be strongly opposed to the measure.

Mr. President, that is true; but I do not see why, if I have written a letter against it, anybody should express any surprise that I was going to speak against it. That is but a mild little tap. We do not always get off that easy when we do not agree with them. Some of these articles are pretty vicious on those who do not agree with them. Sometimes they say that we are the fellows who want to despoil the forests; we are the grafters, and all that.

I am not going to load the RECORD with these matters, but I want to talk a little about the settler going into the forest reserve. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] is very confident that that feature is being properly administered. Mr. President, we provided some years ago that the forest reserves should be open to settlement. I supposed that was the law until the other day, when I was making some remarks, the Senator from California [Mr. FLINT] drew a new law on me of which I never had heard. At the last session of Congress, not being in very good health, I missed about a week from the Senate. I believe during that time that law was passed without my seeing it. That law gives to the Secretary of Agriculture the absolute control over the public lands in the forest reserves. It gives him the right to say whether or not a man shall make a home there. In the State of Colorado before this law was passed officers of the Government had demanded the right to say whether or not a man could go into a forest reserve and build a home; they determined for him whether or not he could live on a piece of land; and in not less than eight cases they took men by force off the reserves and said, "You can not live there," although at that time they had the right to go there without any reference to the Department.

Mr. President, what are the conditions of settlement there now? Before a man goes there he must get some fellow who is out there as a forester to go and look at the land and to agree that it is a suitable place for him to live; and, as the policy is to keep people out, he will not get that consent; and if he goes in there without it, he will be put out.

There are in my State a large number of mines inside of these reserves, mines that had been selected under the law long before the forest reserve was established, but now they are making rules and rgulations not justified by the statute under which men who have heretofore secured their rights must work their mines.

I some time ago received from a gentleman whom I know very well, a prominent miner in my State, a letter containing about twenty-eight or thirty interrogatories propounded to him about his mine. He had applied for his patent and had been told he could not get it until he answered these interrogatories. I have not them with me. He was told that if he did not answer them satisfactorily to the Department, he would not get his patent. The statute provides what he should do. The statute has said, under certain conditions, he is entitled to a patent. The Supreme Court of the United States has repeatedly said that if he did do what the law said he should do he should get his patent and become the owner of the land. This man said, "I have put $30,000 into this property. I do not intend to give away my knowledge about the property." They wanted to know how much money he had taken out of it; how much the ore ran. He said, "I do not intend to give the world that information. It is none of its business. I will not do it unless you think the law requires me to do it." I wrote back, "There is no law requiring that to be done." I am not so certain but that there may be some law which has gone through here carelessly, but I do not believe it.

A man I have known for twenty-five years, as reputable a man as you will find in any community, had gone out into the woods on the mountain side and had made locations of mining property. That was long before the forest reserves were made. Then the forest reserves swept over him, and when he went the other day to get his patent he was told that he would have to go into court and prove his rights; that a forest ranger had made a report on him adverse to his rights. He said:

> If I have to go into court, I want to know what that forest-reserve man has done. I want to know why he says I have no right to this patent.

Thereupon I wrote to the Department asking them to furnish this man with the information. He said he had written to the Department and they had declined to furnish it. I wrote the Department, saying I thought this man was entitled to know why an attack was made upon his property, that he might have an opportunity to prepare for his defense. I have two letters from the Department, the General Land Office, controlled in this particular by the forest officials, saying it is not the policy of the Government to give the information. And so the man must go into court unprepared to meet the objections made by a man who has not any right to make an objection at all, and whom he ought to have put off his location by force when he came along.

Mr. President, unfortunately I am working a mine in Colorado. I have worked it for several years. I would have been a great deal better off if I had not worked it at all. I got a letter from one of those people who claim to represent the United States in some capacity. He said: "I send you a blank. I want you to put in how many men you work; how much your mine produces. I want all these items." I sent it back to him and said that I was a free American citizen—my land is not on a forest reserve, either—and I declined to supply the information. I got a letter saying there was some regulation about it, and that if I did not do it I would be arrested. Whereupon I sent him word to arrest and we would see what it would amount to. That is going on everywhere, and there are lots of men who are afraid to combat the United States.

The other day I got a letter from a man who said:

> I had occasion to drive some horses; I drove them on the highway; I drove them across the forest reserve, and a few days later a forest ranger came and said, "You have driven your horses across the forest reserve in violation of the rules and regulations."

He had. They had a regulation that no man should drive stock across the reserve without permission. He said he had no permit. This officer said: "You will have to pay $25." Mr. President, that is robbery. That is an assumption of right over property in the State which the Government of the United States can not exercise by law, much less by a forest-reserve regulation.

Mr. President, I have had some experience with this matter. The Department will say, "Oh, these people did not have any authority." I stated here one day that a man living in the neighborhood of a forest reserve had told me that he went upon a forest reserve with a wagon, loaded up some dead pine timber and knots, and came off, and was met by a forest ranger, who said, "You must pay 25 cents for that." Mr. Pinchot writes me the ranger had no authority to do it. What difference does it make to the man whether he had authority or not? The ranger made the demand.

A gentleman whom I know very well and have known for many years, one of our early settlers, went down into southern Colorado and built a mill on land that was recognized by everybody as mineral land, and under the act of 1878 he was rightfully there, as he would have been if that act had never been passed. He was there under the law. He built a sawmill, and then he built a four-stamp mill, that the miners who were mining in the neighborhood might carry their ore there and test it and see what it was worth. One of these forest rangers said, "You must saw no more lumber." He said, "I have some logs from a Mexican grant. Let me saw them." The ranger said, "No, sir; you can not turn a wheel;" and he did not turn a wheel for nearly two years. It took him nearly two years, not to get permission to continue his work, but to remove his mill. In the meantime there was posted on the side of the mill a notice reading, "This is property of the United States. It has been confiscated."

I thought that was pretty bad, and I saw the head forest ranger who had it in his charge several times. He had to write down here and submit the whole matter here, and finally it came back. He seemed to be a very decent, respectable gentleman. He behaved himself courteously, and I have no doubt he did the best he could. But it was nearly two years before the man could remove his mill and make use of it elsewhere.

At the last session of Congress I got a letter from a friend of mine, saying that a certain man had built a sawmill over on the edge of mineral country, but probably not on what would be denominated mineral land; at least it had not been developed to that extent; and he had cut some timber and the court had fined him $100, because he could not prove it was mineral land. He wanted to move his mill away. They had put upon his mill exactly the same notice as in the other case, "Do not trespass on this mill. It is the property of the United States, having been confiscated."

Mr. MONEY. Will the Senator from Colorado permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. MONEY. Do I understand the Senator from Colorado to say that this mill was marked "the property of the United States" by a judgment of a court?

Mr. TELLER. No, sir; by a forest ranger.

Mr. MONEY. Under what authority?

Mr. TELLER. The authority of Mr. Pinchot, I suppose.

Mr. President, a friend of mine wrote me that this mill man, who was pretty badly treated, being indicted and compelled to pay a hundred dollars and costs, wanted to move his mill off, and they would not let him. I went down to the Department, and I confess I was not overcourteous when I got in there and began to talk about it. I inquired whether they thought they could seize a man's property without due process of law. They said, "Oh, no; we never thought we could do that." I said, "Your man has." They said, "He has no authority to do that. We never told him to do it." Suppose they did not?

That is the way the forest reserves are being managed, as the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] knows. That is why we complain, and when we do complain it is untrue for any man to say we complain because we are opposed to decent forest reserves. We complain because of the vicious administration of what might properly be carried out as a beneficial law. No man has a right, whether he be the President of the United States or anybody else, to dedicate and devote to a forest reserve any portion of the public domain that is susceptible of cultivation and occupation by honest men.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I have been unavoidably out of the Chamber during a portion of the Senator's speech, and I do not know whether he has alluded to this fact or not. But am I not correct in the recollection that Congress has passed a law by which the setting apart of further forest reserves has been prohibited?

Mr. TELLER. At the last session Congress provided by act—I have some hesitation in speaking about this, but I will, under the inquiry, although it was not a part of my proposed remarks—that there should be no further forest reserves established in Colorado, Montana, Idaho, Washington, Oregon, and Wyoming. There has not been since the law was signed by the President, but before the President signed the bill and after it passed the Senate he did make some additions to those reserves.

Mr. HEYBURN. About 20,000,000 acres.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Idaho says about 20,000,000 acres. Some of that was in one State and some in another. There was some in my State, but I do not know how much.

Mr. BACON. Does the Senator say that after Congress had acted upon the subject——

Mr. TELLER. I understand that after the bill had left the House of Representatives and the Senate and pending the signature of the President——

Mr. BACON. I beg the Senator's pardon for asking one other question. I have only a general recollection in reference to the passage of that law. To what extent did that prohibition go?

Mr. TELLER. It was absolute. There was no condition about it—"There shall be no further forest reservations in these States except by an act of Congress."

Mr. BACON. I understand the Senator to say that after that measure had left the two Houses of Congress and had gone to the President for his approval—and he did approve it—before approving it he set aside 20,000,000 acres——

Mr. TELLER. He did.

Mr. BACON. As forest reserves?

Mr. TELLER. Lands that were not in forest reserves when the bill passed the Senate and, I think, the House.

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. TELLER. I do not intend to comment upon that. There are some things better left unsaid than said, and I do not trust myself to comment upon that at all.

Mr. WARREN. Would it interrupt the Senator if I should give the figures as to the extent of the forests?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly not.

Mr. WARREN. The total area July 1, 1906, was 106,994,018 acres. There were added during the year and to June 30, 1907, 44,396,531 acres, and there were eliminated something over half a million acres.

While on my feet I call the attention of the Senator from Colorado—and I am doing it only for his information—to the fact that I find on an examination of this list, which seems to give the total, an aggregate of a little less than 16,000,000 acres for Colorado, and I give the Senator the benefit of it, as the Senator, I think, spoke of something like 30,000,000 acres.

Mr. TELLER. No; I said 20,000,000 acres had been added.

Mr. WARREN. I misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. FULTON. The Senator from Colorado said there had been 20,000,000 acres added in these several States, as I understood.

Mr. TELLER. There were about 20,000,000 acres added, the Senator from Idaho said.

Mr. WARREN. I would not venture to correct the Senator about his own State, but the figures being before me, I have given them.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am not undertaking to give the accurate figures. I am giving them according to my best recollection. The quantity I have stated is not far from the amount of forest reserves created during that period.
